Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict — New Trial Inappropriate: When a jury verdict is appealed, the appellate court's function is to determine whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the verdict. The lower court's discretion to grant a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is exhausted when it finds substantial evidence to support the verdict. The court may not grant a new trial only on the basis that it chose to believe one line of testimony different from that which the jury believed. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Jury Verdict: Although the evidence was conflicting, the record shows substantial evidence to support the jury verdict against plaintiff. Thus, the verdict and judgment with regard to sufficiency of the evidence are affirmed. The credibility and weight of the evidence are the province of the jury. Funk v. Robbin, 212 M 437, 689 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1848 (1984). See also Nelson v. Fairmont Hot Springs Resort, Inc., 234 M 452, 763 P2d 1135, 45 St. Rep. 2042 (1988), Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993), Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994), and Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Verdict — Error to Grant New Trial: McFadden, a Deputy Sheriff, stopped a vehicle after observing erratic driving. He gave the driver a coordination test and later a test on a Breathalyzer that was brought out from town. The driver was taken into custody. McFadden offered to have a legal intern drive the car to town, but the driver said he wanted Moran to drive. Both officers at the scene talked to and checked Moran and felt he was not intoxicated and could drive. While proceeding into town, Moran ran off the road, killing Lindquist. The jury ruled in favor of McFadden and the county. The trial court granted a new trial based on insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. On appeal, the Supreme Court said all the testimony of the law officers, the legal intern, and an EMT responding to the accident upheld the verdict. Also, the car was being driven well while they observed it. There was substantial evidence to support the verdict, and it was error to grant a new trial. Lindquist v. Moran, 203 M 268, 662 P2d 281, 40 St. Rep. 439 (1983), distinguished, where officers had no ability to control tortfeasor's operation of a motor vehicle, in Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1463 (1988), and followed in Nelson v. Fairmont Hot Springs Resort, Inc., 234 M 452, 763 P2d 1135, 45 St. Rep. 2042 (1988), and in Gass v. Hilson, 240 M 459, 784 P2d 931, 47 St. Rep. 28 (1990). Gass v. Hilson was followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Airplane Crash: In a negligence action for wrongful death resulting from an airplane crash, the plaintiff's expert witness set forth a theory on how the crash occurred. The defendant submitted proof inconsistent with the plaintiff's theory and set forth his own theory. Because there was sufficient evidence to uphold a jury verdict in favor of either of the parties, the verdict for the defendant was not contrary to the weight of the evidence. Tompkins v. NW. Union Trust Co. of Helena, 198 M 170, 645 P2d 402, 39 St. Rep. 845 (1982).

Effect of Inflation on Damages Improperly Considered: Where evidence of the effect of inflation on damages arising from defects in a modular home purchased from defendant consisted of testimony that as inflation made the value of the house go up it also increased the discrepancy in value caused by the defects, and there was no testimony on the percentage rate of inflation, the jury must have considered the effects of inflation since it reached a $9,000 verdict in the face of evidence of a $3,000 cost of repairs and a $5,000 diminution in value as of 1979, approximately 2 years before trial. There was insufficient evidence on which inflation could be considered, and error occurred. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

Conflicting Evidence:

Although the testimony of witnesses conflicted, substantial credible testimony elicited from on-the-scene witnesses corroborated defendant's version of a collision with the deceased pedestrian. The lower court erred when it granted plaintiffs' motion for new trial and to set aside the verdict of the jury because the judge relied on a line of conflicting testimony different than the testimony relied on by the jury. Yerkich v. Opsta, 176 M 272, 577 P2d 857 (1978). See also Nelson v. Hartman, 199 M 295, 648 P2d 1176, 39 St. Rep. 1409 (1982).

In the District Court is lodged a sound legal discretion to grant or refuse a new trial in a case where the evidence is conflicting, and its action will not be disturbed on appeal except for a manifest abuse of discretion. Gardiner v. Eclipse Grocery Co., 72 M 540, 234 P 490 (1925).

Sufficient Evidence: There was an abundance of substantial evidence supporting the findings in an action to recover for the loss of cattle resulting from a carrier's negligence. Brown v. Webb, 173 M 275, 567 P2d 450 (1977).

Negligence Verdict — Sufficient Evidence: The power company has no duty to supply an explanation for every fire that occurs on private property to which it supplies electricity, and where the company presented evidence from which reasonable men could conclude that it was free from negligence, this was sufficient to support jury verdict in favor of the power company. Hash v. Mont. Power Co., 164 M 493, 524 P2d 1092 (1974).

Easement: Plaintiff was not entitled to an easement by necessity where there was evidence of other possible routes and no evidence of necessity. Wilson v. Chestnut, 164 M 484, 525 P2d 24 (1974).

Eminent Domain: Verdict for $30,000 for compensation for land taken in condemnation action was supported by substantial evidence where two appraisers had valued the land at $19,650 and $22,873, respectively, plaintiff's expert valued the land at $64,000 and plaintiff testified that his compensation should be $78,000; trial court erred in granting new trial on ground that evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. St. Highway Comm'n v. Arms, 163 M 487, 518 P2d 35 (1974).

Abuse of Discretion Required for Reversal: Determination by the trial court of motion for new trial based upon insufficiency of the evidence, which involves the exercise of judicial discretion, may not lawfully be disturbed on review by the Supreme Court unless it is clearly shown that the trial court abused its discretion. St. v. Barovich, 142 M 191, 382 P2d 917 (1963).

Weight of Evidence Not Subject for Inquiry: The construction or weight given to evidence by a jury is not a subject for inquiry upon a motion for a new trial. Schaff v. Schaules, 137 M 357, 352 P2d 265 (1960).

Rule of Appellate Noninterference: A rule that the Supreme Court will not interfere with the exercise of discretion by the trial court is particularly applicable where questions of fact are involved, insufficiency of the evidence is urged as a ground for the motion for a new trial, and it appears that the evidence is conflicting. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Other Motions Not Required: Failure to make timely motion for nonsuit or directed verdict did not deprive litigant of right to have question of insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict determined by trial court on motion for a new trial and reviewed on appeal from an adverse ruling. Adami v. Murphy, 118 M 172, 164 P2d 150 (1945).

Rule to Be Followed: As to motion for new trial based upon insufficiency of the evidence, the settled rule "that a case should not be taken from the jury unless it follows as a matter of law that the plaintiff cannot recover upon any view of the evidence, including the legitimate inferences to be drawn from it" is applicable. Chancellor v. Hines Motor Supply Co., 104 M 603, 69 P2d 764 (1937).

Court to Weigh Evidence: In passing upon a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the trial court must weigh the evidence and, if not sufficient, a new trial should be ordered; if not ordered, the Supreme Court on appeal must then determine the same question, and if there be not substantial evidence to support the verdict, order a retrial. West v. Wilson, 90 M 522, 4 P2d 469 (1931).

Improbable Testimony: The advantageous position occupied by the jury and the lower court in weighing the testimony of witnesses who appear before them in a personal injury action does not prevent a reversal of the order denying a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, where the testimony supporting the verdict is highly improbable or incredible or is inherently impossible in view of the physical facts. Casey v. N. Pac. Ry., 60 M 56, 198 P 141 (1921), distinguished in Currie v. Langston, 92 M 570, 16 P2d 708 (1932), Benema v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 94 M 138, 21 P2d 69 (1933), McGonigal v. Prudential Ins. Co., 100 M 203, 46 P2d 687 (1935), Welch v. Thomas, 102 M 591, 61 P2d 404 (1936), Hill v. Haller, 108 M 251, 90 P2d 977 (1939), Westergard v. Peterson, 117 M 550, 159 P2d 518 (1945), Batchoff v. Craney, 119 M 157, 172 P2d 308 (1946), Hage v. Horton, 119 M 419, 175 P2d 174 (1946), Lake v. Webber, 120 M 534, 188 P2d 416 (1948), Reynolds v. Reynolds, 132 M 303, 317 P2d 856 (1957), and Stroop v. Carberry, 139 M 6, 359 P2d 504 (1961).

Sufficiency — Court to Exercise Judgment: In civil actions, where a new trial may be granted under this section for "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict", the court is required to grant a new trial if, in its judgment, the weight of the evidence does not justify the verdict. St. v. Schoenborn, 55 M 517, 179 P 294 (1919).

Notice Sufficient: A notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient "to justify the findings and judgment" is sufficient. Since the words "and judgment" serve no purpose, they may be rejected, and so far as the question of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision is ground for new trial, the word "findings" is equivalent to the word "decision". Cobban v. Hecklen, 27 M 245, 70 P 805 (1902).

DECISION AGAINST LAW

Award for Damages for Breach of Letter of Agreement Improper Absent Valid Contractual Interest — Remand for New Trial: Plaintiff was awarded $2.5 million based on defendant's alleged breach of a letter of agreement to grant plaintiff an option to develop certain oil and gas interests after the jury found that the letter of agreement was not a contract. The Supreme Court reversed the award. Although there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that plaintiff suffered $2.5 million in damages from the sale of the development rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages only if the letter created some right or interest in the development rights. However, because there was no extant contractual obligation running from defendant to plaintiff with respect to the development property, there was no legal basis for the damage award. The jury was confused about available remedies and rendered an inconsistent verdict that could not be reconciled with the evidence, argument, and legal theories presented at trial, which violated the constitutional rights of the litigants to a fair trial. Therefore, the case was reversed and remanded to the District Court for a new trial. D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co, 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000), followed, with regard to appropriateness of summary judgment on issues of negligence, in Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988), and Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666 (1996).

Jury Verdict Internally Inconsistent: The Supreme Court will not disturb a trial court's ruling regarding a motion for a new trial in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. In a nuisance action filed by home owners residing near a city dump, it was proper to order a new trial; the jury found that the city dump was the proximate cause of the nuisance but then found the home owners 90% comparatively negligent. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 211 M 430, 685 P2d 350, 41 St. Rep. 1471 (1984). A later appeal of a District Court ruling that the City of Great Falls was not negligent was affirmed in Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987).

Findings and Conclusions: The trial of a matter before the court, without a jury, resulting in findings of fact warranted by the evidence, conclusions of law based upon the findings, and a judgment following both, presents no example of "a verdict or other decision" that is "against law". In re Riley's Estate, 54 M 17, 165 P 1105 (1917).

Verdict Contrary to Law of the Case: A verdict is "against law", within the meaning of this section, only when it is contrary to the law of the case as given to the jury in the instructions. Bush v. Baker, 51 M 326, 152 P 750 (1915).

Verdict Contrary to Instructions: The instructions are the law of the case and binding upon the jury; a verdict contrary thereto is a verdict contrary to law, which, under subsection (6) of this section, justifies a new trial. Lynes v. N. Pac. Ry., 43 M 317, 117 P 81 (1911).

Grounds Not Sufficiently Stated: Under subsection (6) of this section, no ground for a new trial is specified in a notice of motion which recites that "the judgment is contrary to law". Froman v. Patterson, 10 M 107, 24 P 692 (1890). See also St. v. Gawith, 19 M 48, 47 P 207 (1896); Hamilton v. Murray, 29 M 80, 74 P 75 (1903).

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

De Novo Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion for New Trial Based on Insufficiency of Evidence, Not Abuse of Discretion: Reconciling incompatible standards previously applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence, the Supreme Court held that there either is or is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict and that this determination by a District Court is not a matter of discretion. Thus, the Supreme Court's standard of review will henceforth be de novo, and any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent. The Supreme Court, like the District Court, will determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), overruling Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983), Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845 (1988), Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842 (1989), Gass v. Hilson, 240 M 459, 784 P2d 931 (1990), Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64 (1991), Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012 (1993), Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167 (1994), Stroop v. Day, 271 M 314, 896 P2d 439 (1995), Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700 (1996), Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002), St. v. Longhorn, 2002 MT 135, 310 M 172, 49 P3d 48 (2002), Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002), Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002), Moore v. Beye, 2005 MT 266, 329 M 109, 122 P3d 1212 (2005), Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), Williams Feed, Inc. v. Dept. of Transportation, 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007), and Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Failure to Provide Trial Transcript Precluding Review of Compensatory Damage Award and Jury Instructions: Plaintiff asserted that the trial court erred by failing to grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the jury's award of zero compensatory damages for pain and suffering and by refusing to allow the issue to go to the jury, contending that a new trial was necessary to protect the right to full legal redress. Plaintiff stated at least 14 times on appeal that evidence of pain and suffering was uncontroverted. However, plaintiff's counsel neglected to submit a trial transcript on appeal or to follow the alternative transcript submission procedures set out in former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), relying instead on District Court minutes and evidence of injuries as opposed to evidence of pain and suffering. Without a trial transcript, the Supreme Court was unable to address the merits of plaintiff's appeal, so the District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Jury Award Based on Contested Expenses — Sufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: Plaintiffs asserted that a new trial was warranted because the jury in a personal injury case returned a verdict of $9,873, which amounted to significantly less than plaintiffs' evidence of past and future medical expenses, loss of past and future wages, and pain and suffering. However, the District Court denied a new trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that if a jury award is insufficient to cover uncontested expenses, then it is not supported by substantial evidence, but that was not the case here. Evidence presented by both parties revealed a significant dispute in the nature, cause, and severity of the injury, the need for future treatment, the existence and amount of past and future wage loss, and pain and suffering. Based on the record of disputed expenses, there was substantial evidence to support the jury award, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case or disturb the judgment, especially when the District Court had already upheld the sufficiency of the evidence on motion for a new trial. Jenks v. Bertelsen, 2004 MT 50, 320 M 139, 86 P3d 24 (2004).

Award of Punitive Damages Not Automatic on Finding of Fraud — New Trial Not Required — Standard of Review: In a case in which the jury found that the defendants had engaged in fraudulent conduct and did not award punitive damages, the trial court did not err in denying a new trial when the evidence that would have supported an award of punitive damages was contradicted and the jury's decision to not award punitive damages was supported by substantial evidence. All elements of a claim for punitive damages must be proved by clear and convincing evidence. An appellate court will review a jury's verdict to award or not to award punitive damages under the substantial evidence rule. It is in the province of a jury to find that there is sufficient evidence of proof of fraud, yet not the quantum of evidence necessary to support an award of punitive damages. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Showing of Manifest Abuse of Discretion Required to Overturn Grant of New Trial: The decision to grant a new trial is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, and for the Supreme Court to reverse the trial court, it must be found that either the trial court's findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence and thus are clearly erroneous or that in applying the law to the facts, there is a manifest abuse of discretion. The trial judge's findings will not be disturbed when they are based on substantial though conflicting evidence. Stanhope v. Lawrence, 241 M 468, 787 P2d 1226, 47 St. Rep. 438 (1990), followed in Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710, 47 St. Rep. 2112 (1990). See also C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 286 M 138, 951 P2d 46, 54 St. Rep. 1341 (1997), affirming the denial of a new trial, McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998), and Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict: When reviewing the denial of a motion for directed verdict, only substantial evidence in the record supporting the jury's finding is required. The conviction cannot be overturned if evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, would allow a rational trier of fact to find essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are exclusively within the province of the jury. St. v. Laverdure, 241 M 135, 785 P2d 718, 47 St. Rep. 142 (1990), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), and in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992). The Nelson standard was applied in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993). See also St. v. Allen, 278 M 326, 925 P2d 470, 53 St. Rep. 935 (1996), and C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 286 M 138, 951 P2d 46, 54 St. Rep. 1341 (1997).

False and Conflicting Testimony: Where jury's verdict was based on conflicting and probably false testimony, refusal of new trial by trial court was sufficient abuse of discretion to require Supreme Court to reverse trial court and order new trial. Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

Substantial Evidence — Discretion Exhausted: Although new trial for insufficiency of evidence is discretionary with trial court and will not be disturbed except for abuse, the discretion is exhausted when court finds substantial evidence to support verdict; evidence from which it could be found that drive-in restaurant owner had no reasonable cause to anticipate "spur of the moment" unprovoked assault upon patron supported verdict for owner in action for injuries so that granting of new trial was abuse of discretion. Kincheloe v. Rygg, 152 M 187, 448 P2d 140 (1968), followed in Nelson v. Fairmont Hot Springs Resort, Inc., 234 M 452, 763 P2d 1135, 45 St. Rep. 2042 (1988).

Burden of Proof — Prima Facie Case: Aggrieved party has burden of proving that District Court manifestly abused its discretion by granting new trial; prima facie case of manifest abuse of discretion may be made by discrediting grounds specified for granting new trial or showing that existing error did not materially affect substantial rights of moving party. Tigh v. College Park Realty Co., 149 M 358, 427 P2d 57 (1967).

Abuse of Discretion Required: The determination by a trial court of plaintiff's motion for a new trial involved the exercise of judicial discretion and may not lawfully be disturbed on review by the Supreme Court unless it is clearly shown that in pursuing the course it did, the trial court abused its discretion. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959). See also Estate of Spicher v. Miller, 260 M 504, 861 P2d 183, 50 St. Rep. 1180 (1993).

Which Basis for New Trial: Where motion is based on all the grounds enumerated in this section and trial court grants new trial in a general order, the Supreme Court on appeal, after finding that all grounds but one have no merit, will presume that the trial court in its discretion granted the motion on the meritorious ground. Brennan v. Mayo, 100 M 439, 50 P2d 245 (1935).

IRREGULARITIES IN ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL

Expert Testimony on Automobile Accident Reliable and Admissible — No Irregularities Warranting New Trial: An automobile accident to which there were no witnesses resulted in the death of both drivers. The plaintiff, a deceased driver's estate, filed a wrongful death and survivorship action against the defendant, the estate of the second deceased driver. At trial, each party's expert testified that the other driver caused the accident. The jury found in the defendant's favor, and the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied. The plaintiff objected that the defendant's expert did not provide a sufficient factual foundation for his opinion testimony and that the scientific methodology used in his accident reconstruction was not reliable. The plaintiff also alleged that the defendant's expert changed the basis of his testimony between his disclosures under Rule 26(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., and trial, warranting a new trial under 25-11-102(1). On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant's expert opinion testimony was properly admitted under Rule 702, M.R.Ev., because the defendant established on the record that the expert was qualified as an expert in automobile accident reconstruction, that the expert's computer models reconstructing accidents were widely used and extensively tested, and that the information and physical evidence used were reliable. The Supreme Court also held that there was no impermissible surprise under 25-11-102(3), in that the defendant's expert clearly articulated the basis for his expert opinions and the expert's disclosures did not contain incomplete or incorrect information requiring supplementation. Wheaton v. Bradford, 2013 MT 121, 370 Mont. 93, 300 P.3d 1162.

Abuse of Discretion in Granting New Trial Allowing Assertion of Defense Not Raised at First Trial: During the first trial on Rasmussen's workers' compensation injury claim, State Fund's counsel stated several times that it was Rasmussen's credibility rather than fraud that was at issue and once specifically stated that fraud was not being asserted, leading Rasmussen to believe that the issue of fraud was not before the court. Nevertheless, the Workers' Compensation Court granted State Fund a new trial, including the opportunity to raise a fraud defense, after a judgment was rendered in Rasmussen's favor. The Supreme Court concluded, based on principles of estoppel and judicial admissions, that State Fund was bound by its counsel's statements during trial that it was not relying on a fraud defense and that it was an abuse of discretion for a new trial to be granted allowing the introduction of a theory that was not an issue at the first trial. Rasmussen v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 270 M 492, 893 P2d 337, 52 St. Rep. 317 (1995), distinguished in DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 1178 (1997).

Other Grounds Excluded: Where a new trial was asked for on several grounds, among them newly discovered evidence in support of which affidavits have been filed, and the order granting it recited that the motion "came on for hearing upon the affidavits filed by the respective parties", the order was based upon the ground of newly discovered evidence alone, excluding the other grounds specified. Ebaugh v. Burns, 65 M 15, 210 P 892 (1922).

Wrong Reason but Correct Conclusion: Where a new trial was properly granted on one of the grounds stated in the motion but not upon the one specified by the court, the order granting it will not be disturbed on appeal, since a wrong reason for a correct conclusion will not invalidate it. Ebaugh v. Burns, 65 M 15, 210 P 892 (1922).

All Grounds Specified: Where the notice of intention to move for a new trial specified all but one of the statutory grounds, the order granting it in general terms will be sustained on appeal if it can be upon any one of the grounds mentioned in the notice. McVey v. Jemison, 63 M 435, 207 P 633 (1922).

Misstatement by Court: Though the ground on which a new trial had been asked was stated by the judge to have been that the evidence failed to support the judgment and such ground is not one of those enumerated in this section, yet where the appellants in their brief made the statutory assignment that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court's decision and counsel for respondent argued the assignment on its merits, the Supreme Court will assume that the trial judge intended to state that the matter was properly submitted to him. Foster v. Winstanley, 39 M 314, 102 P 574 (1909).

Case Notes

Incorrect Statutory Citation for New Trial — Grant of New Trial Affirmed When Other Statutory Criteria Met: The District Court granted defendants' motion for a new bench trial pursuant to 25-11-102(6), but noted that possibly other subsections might also apply. Plaintiff asserted that granting a new trial was reversible error because 25-11-103 states that a new bench trial may be granted only pursuant to 25-11-102(1), (3), and (4). The Supreme Court acknowledged the District Court's incorrect citation to 25-11-102(6), but nevertheless affirmed because sufficient grounds for a new trial also existed under 25-11-102(4). Although the District Court relied on the wrong subsection in support of its holding, it reached a proper result. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Grant of Request by Workers' Compensation Insurer for Rehearing — Insurer Not to Claim Error: A workers' compensation insurer filed a petition for rehearing, claiming that the decision by the trial court was in error and that the insurer was entitled to a rehearing or amendment of the decision. Claimant did not respond to the petition. The court found that it had no alternative but to grant the petition and move the case forward because the claimant's lack of response led to the conclusion that the petition had merit. Having filed the petition in the first place, the insurer was in no position to later argue that claimant had no grounds for a new trial or that the court erred in granting the motion. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Grant or Denial of New Trial in Discretion of Court: Granting or refusing of a motion for a new trial rests in the trial court's discretion. Under former Rule 61, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the court must determine whether refusal to grant a motion would appear inconsistent with substantial justice. The Supreme Court will not overturn denial of a motion for a new trial absent a showing of manifest abuse of discretion. Hanzel v. Marler, 237 M 521, 774 P2d 426, 46 St. Rep. 1020 (1989).

Motion Properly Denied — Standard Not Pleaded or Proved: The motion for new trial was properly denied since the standard contained in 25-11-102 has not been pleaded or proved in the record. Maberry v. Maberry, 183 M 219, 598 P2d 1115 (1979).

Property Valuation — Testimony Required: Denial of motion for new trial was abuse of discretion in that testimony on the value of real and personal property should have been required to enable the court to make an equal distribution of marital assets and provide for support of the minor children. Berthiaume v. Berthiaume, 173 M 421, 567 P2d 1388 (1977).

Irregularity in Proceedings: In an action for specific performance where plaintiff who had no knowledge of law or procedure acted as his own counsel and, though he received some assistance from the trial judge, many errors in the proceedings were shown in the record, it was within the discretion of the judge to grant defendant's motion for a new trial. Waite v. Waite, 143 M 248, 389 P2d 181 (1964).

Repeal by Implication: This section is repealed by implication by subsection (8) of 25-11-102, in all cases where the facts come within that subsection, under the rule that if two acts on the same subject are so repugnant as to be irreconcilable or if the later act is inconsistent with the first and the Legislature intended it should be the only law on the subject, the prior statute is repealed by it. State ex rel. Jackson v. District Court, 107 M 30, 79 P2d 665 (1938).

Law and Equity Cases — Notice of Appeal: While the fact that the notice of appeal in an equity case did not contain any of the grounds mentioned in this section for which a new trial may be granted in such a case but did contain grounds for which a new trial may be granted in a law case, such an omission could be the basis for denial of the motion for a new trial but it did not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to settle a bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by M.R.Civ.P.). Pincus v. Davis, 95 M 375, 26 P2d 986 (1933).

Insufficiency of Evidence in Equity Case — Standard of Review: Since under this section, a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence does not lie in an equity suit, the rule that the Supreme Court, in the absence of such a motion, will go no further than to determine whether there is any substantial evidence to sustain the decision of the court does not apply. Shepherd & Pierson Co. v. Baker, 81 M 185, 262 P 887 (1927).

Equity Cases: In an equity case tried by the court without a jury, the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and errors at law occurring at the trial are not available as grounds for a new trial. Davenport v. Davenport, 69 M 405, 222 P 422 (1924).

GENERAL

New Trial to Lift Injunction on Water Use Properly Denied: As a result of defendant's negligent operation of an irrigation ditch and the risk associated with high volume flow in the ditch, the District Court enjoined defendant from a flow of more than 400 miner's inches through the ditch until defendant could prove that the ditch could safely transport more. Defendant sought a new trial to lift the injunction on grounds that new evidence stemming from the successful operation of the ditch since the trial could not have been presented earlier. The motion for a new trial was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the evidence was new, the fact remained that varying flows when combined with other variables could still produce damaging results, so the evidence was insufficient to warrant a new trial. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Juror's Affidavit of Juror Misconduct — Inadmissible Under Ahmann Exception — No Evidence of External Influence — Right to Fair and Impartial Jury Not Violated: Berg argued that he was entitled to a new trial because of jury misconduct and attached to his motion the affidavit of juror Flinders stating that juror Carroll said at one point during the trial, in regard to witness testimony: "That's it; that's all I need to hear; it's all over." The affidavit also stated that juror Carroll pointed to another juror and said in regard to the juror, "That's one we'll have to convince." The Supreme Court noted that although affidavits are usually used to prove juror misconduct under 25-11-102(2), they may also, under the exception rationale used in Ahmann v. Am. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853 (1988), be used pursuant to 25-11-102(1) when the only two people with knowledge of the infraction are a juror and another person. However, the Supreme Court found that the Ahmann exception did not apply when the communication was between jurors. The Supreme Court also discussed the applicability of Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and determined that the comments made by juror Carroll were not an external influence upon the jury and therefore did not fall within the exception to the general prohibition against use of juror affidavits to impeach a jury contained in Rule 606(b). Regarding Berg's final argument that the jury misconduct violated the District Court's instructions and Berg's right to a fair and impartial jury, the Supreme Court reviewed California case law raised by Berg and concluded that it was inapplicable in Montana. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Time for Filing — Provisions Mandatory: Provisions relating to the time for filing a motion for a new trial and for the hearing on a motion for new trial are mandatory. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Alternative Methods of Proceeding:

The moving party may employ in the same motion all the modes specified in this section in making his motion for a new trial. Sell v. Sell, 58 M 329, 193 P 561 (1920).

The party desiring a new trial may not designate the minutes of the court and affidavits to be thereafter filed as moving papers, then secure an extension of time in which to prepare them, afterward abandon the affidavits by failing to prepare them within the time allowed, and then insist that the motion should be heard on the minutes of the court. Sell v. Sell, 58 M 329, 193 P 561 (1920), distinguished in Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928).

One intending to move for a new trial upon any ground other than those mentioned in the first four subsections of 25-11-102 may, under this section, do so either upon the minutes of the court or by a bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by M.R.Civ.P.); if he has several grounds, he may select one method for one ground of his motion and another for the remaining ground or grounds. Moore v. Butte Elec. Ry., 47 M 214, 131 P 635 (1913).

Exclusive Provisions: The statute prescribes the course of proceedings to be observed on motion for new trial, and its provisions are exclusive. Evans v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 51 M 107, 149 P 715 (1915).

Irregularity in Proceedings: A motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party may be made either upon affidavit or bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by former Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503, now repealed), or both. Bliss v. Wolcott, 40 M 491, 107 P 423 (1910).

Statement of Case as Basis for New Trial Motion: Since the passage of Ch. 41, L. 1907, there has been no provision in the Code authorizing a statement of the case to be used as the basis of a motion for a new trial. Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry., 38 M 222, 99 P 837 (1909).

MINUTES OF COURT

Notice Sufficient: A notice of intention to move for a new trial was not rendered abortive by the statement that the motion would be based "upon the minutes of said cause" instead of "upon the minutes of the court", the former phrase, so far as imparting the information intended by this section to be given to the opposing party is concerned, being substantially equivalent to the latter. Moore v. Butte Elec. Ry., 47 M 214, 131 P 635 (1913).

All Pleadings Presumed Considered: Where an application for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court, the trial court is presumed, in the absence of a bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by M.R.Civ.P.), to have considered all of the pleadings, records, minute entries, and the evidence offered at the trial and to have determined the motion on the case thus presented. Sanden v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 209, 102 P 145 (1909). See also Sutton v. Lowry, 39 M 462, 104 P 545 (1909); Cummings v. Reins Copper Co., 40 M 599, 107 P 904 (1910).

Transcription Not Required: The District Court may, upon a motion for a new trial made "upon the minutes of the court", take into consideration all the pleadings, records, minute entries, and the evidence offered at the trial and, from the entire case thus presented, determine the motion; and if the judge can remember the evidence and proceedings sufficiently to enable him to pass upon the motion, it is not necessary that the stenographer's notes of the trial proceedings be transcribed. State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1908).

Statutes Superseded by Rules — Cases Decided Under Statutes: Section 93-8001, R.C.M. 1947, upon which this section is based, provided: "A judgment or order in a civil action, except when expressly made final by this code, may be reviewed as prescribed in sections 93-7901 to 93-7908 and 93-8001 to 93-8023, and not otherwise." By order of the Supreme Court, dated January 1, 1966, the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (M.R.App.P., now superseded), sections 93-8001 through 93-8023, R.C.M. 1947. Sections 93-7901 through 93-7908, R.C.M. 1947, concerning appeals from Justices' Courts were subsequently recodified into Title 25, ch. 33 (see Table of Corresponding Code Sections for appropriate MCA section numbers). Because the provisions of all or a portion of sections 93-8001 through 93-8023, R.C.M. 1947, may be similar to the corresponding former rule or rules of the M.R.App.P. Case Notes

Justice's Court Appeals — No Direct Review by Supreme Court: The Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction to review directly the judgments or orders of the Justices' Courts of this state. State ex rel. Estes v. Justice Court, 129 M 136, 284 P2d 249 (1955).

Jurisdictional Limitations: This statute is both prohibitory and jurisdictional, and it prohibits an appeal after expiration of the time prescribed by Title 93, ch. 80, R.C.M. 1947 (most provisions superseded by the former M.R.App.P., now superseded). McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

Right of Appeal as Statutory — Judgment or Order Required: The right of appeal is purely statutory and is not available for review of findings and conclusions of law in a condemnation case where there has been no order. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Anhalt, 127 M 71, 257 P2d 889 (1953).

Section Applicable to Probate Decrees: Decrees in probate proceedings, including those relative to the settlement of guardians, are not, technically speaking, judgments, but the mode of review applicable to judgments is, by this section and sections 93-8002 and 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by the former M.R.App.P., now superseded), made applicable to many of them, and a trial court has no greater power over these than it has over formal judgments. Hoppin v. Long, 74 M 558, 241 P 636 (1925); State ex rel. McHatton v. District Court, 55 M 324, 176 P 608 (1918).

Statutory Basis for Removal to District Court: While all of the decisions of District Courts are subject to review by the Supreme Court, under some appropriate procedure, causes may be removed to it by appeal only under the limitations and regulations prescribed by statute. Pierson v. Daly, 49 M 478, 143 P 957 (1914).

Setting Aside Order — Power of District Court: The District Court in a judicial district composed of one county, having regularly made an appealable order, has no power to set it aside on its own motion, where such order was not made inadvertently or improvidently. Whitbeck v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 21 M 102, 52 P 1098 (1898).

The party appealing is known as the appellant, and the adverse party as the respondent." Case Notes

GENERAL

Consent Judgment: Consent to the entry of a judgment is a waiver of any errors in it, and an appeal taken therefrom will be dismissed, the appellant not being an "aggrieved party". Weir v. Silver Bow County, 113 M 237, 124 P2d 1003 (1942).

"Aggrieved Party" Defined: Unless a party has an interest in the subject of litigation that is adversely affected by an order made or judgment rendered therein, he is not an "aggrieved party" within the meaning of this section and cannot appeal therefrom. Griffith v. Mont. Wheat Growers' Ass'n, 75 M 466, 244 P 277 (1926).

Intervenor Not "Aggrieved" — No Right of Appeal: In an action by a mortgagee for damages for the conversion of a mortgaged crop, in which a bank had intervened as holder of orders given it by the mortgagor drawn on defendant purchaser of the grain which remained unpaid, where plaintiff claimed nothing as against the intervener and the latter made no claim to anything in which plaintiff was interested and the judgment merely awarded to plaintiff the damages claimed, not mentioning intervenor, the bank was not aggrieved and therefore not entitled to appeal from the judgment. Griffith v. Mont. Wheat Growers' Ass'n, 75 M 466, 244 P 277 (1926).

Review of Denial of Motion to Intervene: Since an appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion for leave to file a complaint in intervention and the unsuccessful movant, not being a party to the action, cannot appeal from the final judgment entered therein, he may have the order reviewed on application to the Supreme Court for Writ of Supervisory Control. State ex rel. Red Lodge-Rosebud Irrigation District v. District Court, 75 M 132, 242 P 431 (1925).

Service of Notice of Appeal: While any party aggrieved may appeal no matter whether the judgment be joint or several, he must serve with notice all other parties who are interested in opposing the relief which he seeks by his appeal, if they formally appeared in the action below, else his appeal will prove ineffectual. Spokane Ranch & Water Co. v. Beatty, 37 M 342, 96 P 727, 97 P 838 (1908).

Joint Appeals: On a joint appeal, errors not common to both appellants may be considered, but one appellant will not be permitted to assume a position antagonistic to that of the other. Anderson v. N. Pac. Ry., 34 M 181, 85 P 884 (1906). See also Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS

Exception — Heirs Not "Aggrieved": Where the trial court in modifying its findings and decree as directed by remittitur failed to mention an exception (exceptions abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) in favor of the adverse party and relating to the widow's interest, the other heirs and the administratrix were not "parties aggrieved" and could not complain of the alleged error of the trial court. Gaer v. Bank of Baker, 113 M 116, 122 P2d 828 (1942).

Devisee Receiving Faulty Notice as "Aggrieved": A devisee under a will to whom the property devised had been awarded in a proceeding to determine heirship but who claimed that the court had not acquired jurisdiction because of faulty publication of notice as regards unknown claimants, thus endangering the validity of the decree and hence his title to the property decreed to him, by possible claims thereafter made by such claimants was an "aggrieved party" within the meaning of this section and as such entitled to appeal. In re Baxter's Estate, 98 M 291, 39 P2d 186 (1934).

Widow Not "Aggrieved": Where the widow of a testator, as defendant in a proceeding to have the probate of the will revoked and heirship determined, asserted that she was entitled to one-half of decedent's estate, both under the will and under the law of succession in case the will should be declared invalid, and by the decree she was awarded all she asked, she was not an aggrieved party and therefore not entitled to appeal from the decree otherwise in favor of plaintiffs. In re Bernheim's Estate, 82 M 198, 266 P 378 (1928).

Administrator and Heir as "Parties Aggrieved": An administrator with the will annexed and an heir of a beneficiary under the decedent's will are "parties aggrieved" under this section and can appeal from a decree granting a distribution of the estate. In re Davis' Estate, 27 M 235, 70 P 721 (1902).

Individual Rights of Administrator: A person, in his capacity as administrator, cannot appeal from an order disallowing his individual claim against the estate, and on such appeal his individual rights will not be considered. In re Barker's Estate, 26 M 279, 67 P 941 (1901).

CHAPTER 13
EXECUTION OF JUDGMENT

Chapter Case Notes

Erroneous Denial of Motion to Quash Writ of Execution: A federal District Court allowed a default judgment against Clark in favor of plaintiffs. In order to execute the judgment on Clark's Montana assets, plaintiffs docketed the judgment in federal District Court in Montana, and about the same time, plaintiffs brought an action in Montana state court, asserting that Clark fraudulently transferred real property in order to avoid reimbursing plaintiffs. Following denial of the fraudulent transfer claim in Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001), plaintiffs docketed the federal judgment in Lake County District Court, requesting and receiving a writ of execution, and a levying officer than executed on Clark's accounts. Upon notice of the levy on the accounts, Clark moved to quash the writ of execution, asserting that the federal judgment was invalid, that the writ was void because the federal District Court never obtained proper personal jurisdiction, and that service by publication was inadequate because the federal order required personal service. The state District Court concluded that Clark cited no authority allowing a state court to invalidate a federal District Court's judgment when the federal transcription of judgment is filed for execution in state court, so Clark's motion to quash was denied, and Clark appealed. As set out in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), a party seeking to vacate a foreign judgment filed in Montana state courts may do so only upon defenses that make the underlying judgment invalid or unenforceable, which include a lack of personal or subject matter jurisdiction of the rendering court, fraud in the procurement of the judgment, lack of due process, or satisfaction. However, if a foreign judgment is valid, it should have the same credit, validity, and effect in every other court of the United States that it had in the court in which it was pronounced. Thus, the state District Court erred in concluding that it had no authority to review whether the federal court had personal jurisdiction over Clark. The Supreme Court then went on to consider whether Clark was properly subject to the federal court's jurisdiction in order to determine if the federal default judgment was valid. Service by publication did not provide the federal court with jurisdiction to enter the default judgment because that service was not properly completed and was thus ineffective. In its order granting service by publication, the federal court concluded that service could not be accomplished other than by publication, effectively determining, based on plaintiffs' representations, that personal service had not been accomplished. Therefore, the state District Court committed reversible error when it failed to hold that service by publication was not properly accomplished pursuant to the federal court order. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2003 MT 87, 315 M 121, 68 P3d 673 (2003).

Constitutionally Protected Property Interest in Statutory Exemption From Execution — Due Process Requiring Notice and Hearing to Allow Assertion of Available Exemptions: In order to establish a property interest in a benefit such as the personal property exemptions from execution, a person must show a legitimate claim of entitlement to the benefit. By stating that judgment debtors are entitled to the statutory property exemptions, the Legislature has given judgment debtors a legal right to claim and benefit from those exemptions. Therefore, Montana judgment debtors have a property interest in the statutory exemptions from execution that is protected by constitutional due process guarantees. Montana's postjudgment execution statutes violate those due process guarantees because they do not provide for notice to a judgment debtor of the seizure of the debtor's property, of the availability of statutory exemptions from execution and where to locate additional information about them, and of the availability of procedures by which to claim exemptions from execution. Further, the statutes are deficient from a due process standpoint because they do not provide for a prompt hearing on claimed exemptions. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 US 319, 47 L Ed 2d 18, 96 S Ct 893 (1976), and Aacen v. San Juan County Sheriff's Dept., 944 F2d 691 (10th Cir. 1991), and distinguishing Endicott-Johnson Corp. v. Encyclopedia Press, 266 US 285, 69 L Ed 288, 45 S Ct 61 (1924).

Defrauding Creditor — Elements of Sale Necessary to Establish Ownership: A judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, Kovacich, because of failure of Norgaard to make payments for the purchase of farm machinery. Kovacich made an attempt to levy against a truck owned by Norgaard, who, upon learning the truck was going to be seized, removed it from a consignment lot and sold it to McNair, a close friend. McNair did not register the truck in his name or purchase insurance for it. The Department of Justice verified that the truck was registered to Norgaard, and thereafter a Writ of Execution was issued, pursuant to which the truck was seized. Norgaard obtained a Writ of Prohibition preventing sale of the truck. After a hearing, the District Court set aside the Writ of Prohibition, allowing Kovacich to proceed with the sale, and Norgaard appealed, contending District Court error in allowing the sale. The Supreme Court found that resolution of the issue turned on whether the transaction between Norgaard and McNair was an attempt by Norgaard to defraud his creditor. The court held that under 31-2-315 (now repealed), unless the transfer from Norgaard to McNair was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, the transfer "is conclusively presumed to be fraudulent and therefore void against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession". Finding no evidence of immediate delivery or of any actual change of possession, the District Court order allowing sale was upheld. Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633, 43 St. Rep. 608 (1986).

No Liability When Creditor Did Not Direct Wrongful Levy of Execution: In an action alleging wrongful execution and conversion, the defendant-creditor's motion for summary judgment was granted properly. The creditor was not liable for wrongful execution as it did not advise, direct, or assist in the commission of the wrongful execution upon the plaintiffs' bank account but merely obtained a Writ of Execution and forwarded it to the Sheriff. The general rule of law that an execution creditor who advises, directs, or assists in a wrongful execution is liable does not apply in this case. The creditor did not participate in or direct the wrongful execution. Foley v. Audit Serv., Inc., 214 M 403, 693 P2d 528, 42 St. Rep. 49 (1985).

Part 1
Right to Enforcement of Judgment

Part Case Notes

Summary Judgment for Bank That Disbursed Funds to Constituencies Absent Showing of Conversion, Despite Presence of Attorney's Lien on Funds: Plaintiff law firm represented a woman in divorce proceedings and filed a lien against the woman for attorney fees that she allegedly owed the firm. A divorce decree was issued that awarded the woman $400,000 from a bank trust account, but no fees were awarded to the firm, which subsequently filed a collection action against the woman, the account trustees, and the bank, asserting a breach of duty, conversion, malice, and actual fraud and seeking punitive damages. However, at no time did the firm obtain a judgment on the lien or a prejudgment attachment of the trust account. The District Court granted summary judgment for the account trustees and the bank, and the firm appealed regarding the conversion claim. The Supreme Court affirmed because the firm failed to establish conversion of its lien. Without a judgment fixing the debt or a writ executing a judgment upon the trust fund account, the firm could not establish its ownership of the funds or a right to possession of them, and the mere assertion of a lien did not suffice to defeat the bank's or the trustee's fiduciary duties, so summary judgment was proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Judgment Lien Against Husband's Property Not Supportive of Execution Against Interests of Second Wife and Children — Property Subject to Prior Judgments Only: Following dissolution of his marriage, Ken Jones purchased real property in 1986. In May 1987, he executed a homestead declaration on the property pursuant to 70-32-105. In July 1987, he conveyed the property by quitclaim deed, with one-half interest to himself and one-half to his second wife and their two daughters in equal shares. In January 1988, his second wife also filed a declaration of homestead. Also in 1988, Ken declared bankruptcy. As a result of that filing, a dissolution decree property settlement provision that he pay certain sums to his first wife Rita was redesignated as a maintenance obligation. Ken appealed that order, and while the appeal was pending, Ken and his second wife conveyed the real property to Poindexter. Rita executed upon one-half of the sale proceeds, which Poindexter had withheld to satisfy Ken's past-due maintenance and support, but $2,113.53 remained due on the underlying judgment. Rita moved for an order of sale of the property so that she could recover the remaining maintenance plus her attorney fees. The District Court determined that Ken's homestead exemption was abandoned when he sold the property to Poindexter and that because Rita's judgment liens had never been removed or extinguished, the liens attached and encumbered the property at the time the homestead exemption was abandoned and thus the property was conveyed to Poindexter subject to the liens and the execution order. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed because: (1) Rita had already executed on Ken's half of the sale proceeds and further execution would be against the interests of the second wife and daughters and was therefore unsupported; and (2) the maintenance payments became due and judgments were entered after Ken sold the property. Under 70-21-306, a purchaser takes property subject only to prior judgments; therefore, execution was inappropriate on the property for judgments entered after Poindexter's purchase. In re Marriage of Jones v. Poindexter, 253 M 408, 833 P2d 1044, 49 St. Rep. 501 (1992).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 515 in (1) at beginning deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)" and near middle after "within" substituted "the time period prescribed in 27-2-201(1) and (2)" for "6 years after the entry of the judgment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 60 in (2), near middle after "support obligation", inserted "or within 10 years from entry of a lump-sum judgment or order for support arrears, whichever is later"; and made minor changes in style.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 60, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 631 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (2) allowing for issuance of a writ of execution for 10 years after termination of the support obligation; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 631, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, it is necessary to draft a composite bill containing unrelated sections in order to present the proposed program improvements in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to enact the following legislation."

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 631, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Registration of Foreign Judgment — No New Judgment Created: Plaintiffs and a Wyoming bank entered into a consent judgment, which was subsequently registered in a Montana federal District Court. The bank then filed a transcript of the judgment in state District Court, and plaintiffs moved to quash the writ of execution, which was subsequently denied by the court. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and applied the analysis of Juneau Spruce Corp. v. Int'l Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 128 F. Supp. 697 (D.C. Hawaii 1955), ruling that registration under 28 U.S.C. 1963 constituted a purely ministerial act and that the 6-year period during which a writ of execution can be issued commences on the date on which the judgment was docketed in the original forum when the judgment was filed in Montana federal District Court. Robinson v. First Wyo. Bank, 274 M 307, 909 P2d 689, 52 St. Rep. 1245 (1995).

Judgment Lien Extinguished by Operation of Law: In a case filed in order to have a series of conveyances declared fraudulent, the District Court erred by failing to determine that the judgment lien was extinguished by operation of law, terminating any rights of the plaintiff to the subject property. A judgment may be enforced for a period of 10 years from docketing; a writ of execution may be issued to enforce a judgment for a period of 6 years, which may be extended by the court for up to an additional 4 years; a judgment lien continues for 6 years following docketing of the judgment and then expires by operation of law (see 2001 amendment); a judgment may be extended past its 10-year duration only by filing a separate action to obtain a new judgment on the existing judgment. Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995).

Writs of Execution Quashed When Based on Judgment Extended by Ex Parte Motion Past Ten-Year Statute of Limitations: In 1982, Welch obtained a judgment against Huber for $6,612.34. In 1988, Lorn moved the court for an order extending the judgment. The judgment was extended until 1994. Over 10 years later, Lorn attempted to collect the judgment by obtaining writs of execution. Welch moved to quash the writs and for an order finding the order extending the judgments void for want of service upon Welch, which the District Court granted. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the order extending the judgment presumed to make the original judgment valid for 12 years, contrary to 27-2-201. The judgment could be extended beyond the 10-year statute of limitations only by the filing of an action, with notice to Welch. The Supreme Court said that the motions allowed by 25-13-102 (now repealed) are permissible as long as the extension granted does not exceed the 10-year statute of limitations. Welch v. Huber, 262 M 114, 862 P2d 1180, 50 St. Rep. 1469 (1993), followed in Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995), and Jones v. Arnold, 1998 MT 214, 290 M 444, 963 P2d 1269, 55 St. Rep. 901 (1998).

Procedure for Stay of Execution of Judgment Not Followed — Property Properly Awarded: Petitioner requested a Writ of Supervisory Control to have an ejection order declared illegal in a property dispute. The Supreme Court in reviewing the proceedings stated that a judgment debtor desiring to stay the execution of a judgment or order of a District Court must proceed under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now supersueded). That rule provides that if an appellant desires a stay of proceedings where the court has made no such order, he may present to the court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond. In this case, the District Court fixed the amount of the bond but the bond was never presented to the court for approval prior to the ejection order. Therefore, the judgment holder was entitled to enforcement of the judgment by execution under 25-13-101 and 25-13-201. The District Court followed these statutes and was authorized to order delivery of the possession of the property under 25-13-307. State ex rel. Cady v. District Court, 203 M 522, 662 P2d 602, 40 St. Rep. 610 (1983).

Execution Upon Reservation: A judgment of a court rendered upon a commercial transaction conducted outside the exterior boundaries of a reservation is valid, and, the court having jurisdiction, there may be an execution upon wages earned on the reservation by a member of the tribe. Little Horn Bank v. Stops, 170 M 510, 555 P2d 211 (1976).

Acknowledgment of Judgment as Tolling of Statute: A statute limiting the time of effectiveness of a judgment may be tolled by acknowledgment of the judgment, as, in the instant case (quiet title action) where defendant, some 9 years after judgment for plaintiff, stipulated in open court that plaintiff was entitled to a Writ of Possession, thus acknowledging the existence of the judgment unsatisfied. Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942).

Right to Writ of Possession — Statutory Basis: Where, in an action to quiet title to real property, the defendant is in possession and the decree adjudges the plaintiff to be entitled thereto, the latter is entitled to a Writ to put him in possession, and the Writ may issue even though it is not ordered by the decree, since under Art. VIII, sec. 28, 1889 Mont. Const., (now Art. VII, sec. 4, 1972 Mont. Const.), law and equity may be administered in the same action. The issuance of such Writ is governed by this and the following sections on execution, and it may be issued by the clerk within 6 years after entry of judgment and after the lapse of 6 years by leave of court on motion. (See 2001 amendment.) Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942).

Writ of Assistance Not Affected: The Writ of Assistance, employed in mortgage foreclosure actions, issues as an aid in carrying out the decree of sale and is not governed in its issuance by the law on executions as is the Writ of Possession. Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942).

Judgment Roll Not Prerequisite to Execution: The making up of the judgment roll, as required by section 93-5707, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rules 9, 10, and 25, M.R.App.P., now superseded), is not a prerequisite to the issuance of execution. Burton v. Kipp, 30 M 275, 76 P 563 (1904).

Writ of Execution — Compelling Placement of County Name Thereon: A Writ of Mandate to compel the clerk to issue an execution with the seal, bearing the former name of a county, is the proper remedy where the Legislature, by a void act, has attempted to change the name of a county. State ex rel. Sackett v. Thomas, 25 M 226, 64 P 503 (1901).

Form of Issuance of Execution — Name in Which Issued: The proper way to issue an execution is in the name of the party in whose favor the judgment has been given. Johnson v. Puritan Min. Co., 19 M 30, 47 P 337 (1896).

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt from and had priority over all other claims against the estate. In re Estate of Wilhelm, 233 M 255, 760 P2d 718, 45 St. Rep. 1468 (1988).

Levy of Attachment Enforced by Execution: Under this section and section 91-2717, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and 27-18-308, the levy of an attachment on real property made at the commencement of an action on a promissory note creates a lien that may be enforced by execution where the levy was made and judgment obtained prior to the judgment debtor's death. Andrews v. Smithson, 114 M 360, 136 P2d 531 (1943).

1981 Amendment: In (1), substituted "surety" for "security".

Remedy Not Exclusive — Surety:

Since the statutory procedures for compelling payment are cumulative with all other rights of a surety, subsection (2) of this section is not the exclusive method by which a paying surety may compel repayment from the principal. The right to enforce repayment is based on the implied agreement that the principal will refund the surety for money paid by the surety for the benefit of the principal. The surety has a right to proceed by any recognized manner to obtain reimbursement, such as in 25-15-202, 27-1-703, 28-1-303, and 28-11-417. Janke v. Smyk, 210 M 206, 683 P2d 942, 41 St. Rep. 1011 (1984).

The remedy afforded by this section not being exclusive, a surety who has paid a judgment against his principal and himself and others as sureties may take an assignment of the judgment to himself and enforce contribution from his cosureties. NW. Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 1, 57 P 440 (1899).

Indemnity Denied: Jury verdict, finding that driver was grossly negligent, precluded insurer of driver from receiving indemnity from auto manufacturer, even though jury had also made a determination that the auto manufacturer was liable for negligent manufacture and design of auto. Auto. Club Ins. Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, Inc., 166 M 221, 531 P2d 1337 (1975).

Purpose of Statute — Surety Substituted for Plaintiff: The purpose of this section is to relieve the paying surety from the necessity of bringing an action to enforce reimbursement or contribution. The surety paying for the principal or his cosurety is given "the benefit of the judgment to enforce contribution or repayment" if he gives the notice required in the statute. It is the intention of the provision that the paying surety shall be substituted to all the rights of the plaintiff in the judgment, with the right and privilege of using it, just as the plaintiff could use it, to enforce by the process of execution thereon the payment of such claim as he has. NW. Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 1, 57 P 440 (1899).

Statute of Limitations Not Applicable: The right of a surety, who has paid a judgment against his principal, and himself and other sureties, to enforce contribution from a cosurety, is not barred by the lapse of the statutory period of limitation after the payment of the judgment but exists so long as the judgment is alive. NW. Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 1, 57 P 440 (1899).

Plaintiff Cannot Purchase Judgment Debtor's Tort Action Against County to Satisfy Judgment — Order to Set Aside Levy and Purchase of Action Upheld: The plaintiff was not able to collect on a judgment she received against the defendant. After she conducted a debtor's examination and learned the defendant had filed a personal injury lawsuit against the county, the plaintiff obtained a writ for the sheriff to seize and sell the defendant's action against the county, purchased the defendant's cause of action, and filed a motion to be substituted as the plaintiff in it. The District Court denied her motion as void under state law and ordered that the levying sale and purchase be set aside, and the plaintiff appealed. In affirming the District Court, the Supreme Court noted that Montana is one of several states that do not honor the sale of causes of action involving a tort. Rather, to satisfy the judgment, the plaintiff could petition the District Court to assign the proceeds from the defendant's tort action. Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748.

Writ of Execution Not Exclusive Remedy: This section states that a judgment "may" be enforced by a writ of execution, which expressly recognizes that other means of enforcement are available. In re Marriage of Alexander, 2011 MT 1, 359 Mont. 89, 246 P.3d 712.

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on former Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993). See also Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748, holding that a cause of action deriving from a tort is not subject to levy and purchase.

Setoff at Time of Presentation of Writ of Execution: A judgment creditor claimed that because a bank took no action to exercise its right of setoff before a writ of execution was presented, the writ took precedence over the setoff. However, the bank acquired a right to setoff at the time payment became delinquent but chose instead to perform the setoff when presented with the writ. The judgment creditor had no greater right against the bank than did the debtor at that time, and because a judgment creditor seeking execution of a debtor's property in possession of a third party stands in the shoes of the debtor as far as the rights of the third party are concerned, the writ did not take precedence. Under these circumstances, 30-4-303 did not apply. The bank properly asserted the setoff at the time the writ was presented. Victor Werlhof Aviation Ins. v. Farmers St. Bank, 237 M 51, 771 P2d 962, 46 St. Rep. 613 (1989).

Restriction on Execution Lien — Within Equitable Power: As part of a dissolution proceeding, the District Court awarded two parcels of real property to the wife and ordered her to pay the husband designated amounts for his interest therein. Nine months after the dissolution, the husband moved for leave to execute on the property in order to satisfy the money judgment in his favor. The District Court found that a special execution, restricting levy and sale of the land for specified amounts, would further the intention of the original decree. The husband appealed, contending the District Court had abused its discretion by restricting the execution liens and limiting the right to enforce the money judgment. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had molded its decree to do equity to both parties. It was within the court's discretion to fashion a Writ of Execution in compliance with and designed to enforce its original order. Miller v. Miller, 206 M 515, 672 P2d 271, 40 St. Rep. 1819 (1983).

Procedure for Stay of Execution of Judgment Not Followed — Property Properly Awarded: Petitioner requested a Writ of Supervisory Control to have an ejection order declared illegal in a property dispute. The Supreme Court in reviewing the proceedings stated that a judgment debtor desiring to stay the execution of a judgment or order of a District Court must proceed under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). That rule provides that if an appellant desires a stay of proceedings where the court has made no such order, he may present to the court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond. In this case, the District Court fixed the amount of the bond but the bond was never presented to the court for approval prior to the ejection order. Therefore, the judgment holder was entitled to enforcement of the judgment by execution under 25-13-101 and 25-13-201. The District Court followed these statutes and was authorized to order delivery of the possession of the property under 25-13-307. State ex rel. Cady v. District Court, 203 M 522, 662 P2d 602, 40 St. Rep. 610 (1983).

Remedy for Execution in Excess of Judgment: Where Writ of Execution was issued to enforce a judgment, the fact that the levy of $23,610.25 was allegedly $5,000 in excess of the amount owed by the debtor did not provide grounds for a motion to quash the Writ; the proper remedy would have been to move to set aside the excess. Heller v. Osburnsen, 168 M 232, 548 P2d 607 (1975).

General Execution Improper — Use of Certified Copy of Judgment: Where one of two defendants had impounded a sum of money pending appeal from a judgment prosecuted by its codefendant and the judgment was reversed and judgment was thereupon entered directing that the money be paid over to the prevailing party, such judgment was not enforceable by levy of a general execution upon the property of the party holding the fund but, under 25-13-203, by service of a certified copy of the judgment; hence an order refusing to issue a Writ of Execution was proper. Nepstad v. E. Chicago Oil Ass'n, 96 M 183, 29 P2d 643 (1934).

No Application to Foreclosure Decree: This section has no application to sales in foreclosure, the District Court having inherent power to order such sales without a formal execution and the Sheriff deriving his power to sell from the decree and not from a so-called order of sale. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Payment of Judgment for Money by Sale of Property — Warrant Not Required: If the property of a defendant, against whom an ordinary money judgment is entered, is subjected to the payment of the judgment by operation of law, the Sheriff cannot proceed without a warrant for so doing. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

"Process" Not to Include Order of Sale: The word "process", employed in Art. VIII, sec. 27, 1889 Mont. Const., does not include the order of sale found in the decree of a court of equity in foreclosure proceedings. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Equity Decree for Payment of Money: When properly docketed, a decree in equity directing the payment of money becomes a lien upon the real estate of the debtor and may be enforced by execution in the same manner as a judgment in an action at law. Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1907), distinguished in Lewis v. Lewis, 109 M 42, 94 P2d 211 (1939).

No Application to Foreclosure Decree: This section has no application to sales in foreclosure, the District Court having inherent power to order such sales without a formal execution and the Sheriff deriving his power to sell from the decree and not from a so-called order of sale. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

General Execution Improper — Use of Certified Copy of Judgment: Where one of two defendants had impounded a sum of money pending appeal from a judgment prosecuted by its codefendant and the judgment was reversed and judgment was thereupon entered directing that the money be paid over to the prevailing party, such judgment was not enforceable by levy of a general execution upon the property of the party holding the fund but, under this section, by service of a certified copy of the judgment; hence an order refusing to issue a Writ of Execution was proper. No Notice Required Prior to Seizure of Assets — Dismissal Proper: The plaintiffs owed a judgment debt to the defendants, who secured an ex parte warrant of execution and had sheriff's officials remove the contents of the plaintiffs' home. The plaintiffs filed an action against the defendants for a variety of violations of their rights related to the seizure of their property, including a claim that the defendants had violated this section by failing to give notice of the seizure and had therefore violated the plaintiffs' constitutional rights. The District Court dismissed the complaint, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the claim of rights violation because this section does not require notice before obtaining and executing a warrant of execution. Salminen v. Morrison & Frampton, PLLP, 2014 MT 323, 377 Mont. 244, 339 P.3d 602.

Separate Claims to Be Asserted In Independent Cause of Action: The District Court committed no error when it declined to hear arguments related to common-law torts or other claims not related to statutory exemptions. CBI, Inc. v. McCrea, 2012 MT 167, 365 Mont. 512, 285 P.3d 429.

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Execution of Assets — Alleged Abuse of Process, Wrongful Levy, and Conversion — Improper Dismissal of Complaint: The plaintiffs owed a judgment debt to the defendants. After the plaintiffs had filed a notice of claimed exemptions and requested a hearing, the defendants secured a warrant of execution and had sheriff's officials remove the contents of the plaintiffs' home. The plaintiffs ultimately filed an action against the defendants for a variety of violations of their rights related to the seizure of their property, most of which was exempt from execution. The District Court dismissed the complaint, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the District Court had erred in dismissing the claims of abuse of process, wrongful levy, and conversion. The Supreme Court concluded that certain facts alleged by the plaintiffs, if proved, would entitle them to relief. Salminen v. Morrison & Frampton, PLLP, 2014 MT 323, 377 Mont. 244, 339 P.3d 602.

How Lawful Authority to Enter and Search Private Home Under Writ of Execution Obtained — Execution Warrant: When an officer has been unable to secure property that would satisfy an underlying judgment and there is reason to believe that personal property subject to execution may be located within the debtor's residence, an "execution warrant" should be obtained pursuant to the following procedures in order to avoid violation of the debtor's constitutional rights. An execution warrant should be issued only by a judge "upon reasonable cause supported by affidavit setting out that a writ of execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part and that the affiant has reason to believe that there is property subject to execution in the possession of the debtor kept and maintained within the debtor's residence, not otherwise available for execution, describing the property sought and the place and purpose of the execution". If the judge is satisfied that there is a reasonable cause to believe the statements set out in the affidavit, the judge may then issue an execution warrant authorizing the officer to enter the premises and levy upon property subject to execution. An execution warrant obtained under these procedures will protect the judgment debtor's right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure under both the U.S. and Montana Constitutions. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Nebr. v. Hinchey, 374 NW 2d 14 (Nebr. 1985).

Conversion Evidenced by Notification and Procedural Shortcomings: Johnston owned a mobile home, entitling her to possession, and Galayda owned the property on which the mobile home was located. Galayda claimed that by virtue of various notices to quit the premises, a default judgment against Johnston for back rent, and a writ of assistance directing the Sheriff to remove the mobile home, Galayda had legal authority to physically evict Johnston and her mobile home from the premises. However, a number of procedural errors occurred during the removal process that rendered the eviction actions unauthorized, including: (1) Galayda's failure under 70-24-422 to give Johnston notice to pay rent prior to filing a complaint for nonpayment and possession of the premises; (2) basing the default judgment on Galayda's incorrect sworn affidavit that Johnston owed back rent, which had in fact been paid; (3) Galayda's contract with a third party to remove the mobile home under the writ of assistance rather than having the Sheriff carry out the process, in violation of this section; (4) Galayda's service on Johnston of a notice of abandonment without sufficient facts showing absolute abandonment, in violation of 70-24-430; and (5) Galayda's failure to notify Johnston under 70-24-730 of the location of the property and of the steps necessary to reclaim the property. Failure to meet these notification and procedural steps was evidence that Johnston was wrongfully deprived of her property and constituted conversion on the part of Galayda. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Sheriff to Whom Directed: This section, declaring that a Writ of Execution must be directed "to the sheriff", means the Sheriff of the county where process is to be served. Merchants Credit Serv., Inc. v. Chouteau County Bank, 112 M 229, 114 P2d 1074 (1941), distinguished in Stokke v. Graham, 129 M 96, 281 P2d 1025 (1955).

Application to Foreclosure Decree: There is nothing in this section requiring a Writ of Execution to carry a decree of foreclosure into effect. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Sufficiency of Foreclosure Decree: Before an officer is authorized to sell, under an ordinary judgment, he must have specific directions to do so; but in a degree of foreclosure, the property to be subjected to the payment of the debt is already indicated by and described in the decree, coupled with a mandate that it be sold by the Sheriff to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Lack of Seal of Court — Effect: The failure of the clerk to affix the seal of the court to an execution is a clerical misprision, rendering the execution voidable only. Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903). See also Burton v. Kipp, 30 M 275, 76 P 563 (1904); In re Farrell, 36 M 254, 92 P 785 (1907).

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Enforceability of Civil Judgment Insufficient Compelling State Interest to Justify Warrantless Search of Judgment Debtor's Residence: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. The argument was made that the compelling state interest justifying the warrantless search and seizure was the enforcement of monetary judgments by the seizure of the judgment debtor's property and the preservation of the credibility of the judicial system. Although the Supreme Court has held that a compelling state interest justifying an intrusion into a person's privacy may exist when the state is acting to enforce its criminal laws for the benefit and protection of other fundamental rights of its citizens, in this case, entry was not effectuated to enforce the state's criminal laws or to protect society in general from the actions of criminal wrongdoers, but rather for the purpose of enforcing a civil judgment between two private citizens. The state's interest in postjudgment execution cases is not so compelling as to justify an intrusion into a person's private home, without the person's consent, for purposes of searching that home and seizing any property that might have some value. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Entry of Residence to Levy Upon Personal Property While Judgment Debtor Incarcerated — Entry and Search of Private Home Not Authorized by Writ of Execution: Dorwart was named defendant in two small claims actions, resulting in the entry of default judgments against him and the issuance of writs of execution to enforce the judgments. About 1 month later, while driving his truck, Dorwart was stopped and served with the two writs and was subsequently also arrested for driving under the influence and incarcerated. While Dorwart was in jail, two Sheriff's deputies entered Dorwart's home and garage without his permission or a warrant and seized various items of personal property pursuant to the writs, relying on the writs as the sole authority for authorization to enter the residence and conduct the search and seizure. Dorwart later filed a complaint, alleging various state and federal claims and common-law tort claims and contending that Montana's postjudgment execution statutes are unconstitutional. The District Court found that the deputies did not violate Dorwart's constitutional right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure because the writs constituted judicial authorization for their actions. On appeal, the prosecution relied on Ramsey v. Burns, 27 M 154, 69 P 711 (1902), for the proposition that one of the implied powers authorized by a writ of execution includes the levying officer's entry into a judgment debtor's residence or place of business in order to execute the writ and that on that basis, entry of the home was not unreasonable. The Supreme Court distinguished Ramsey because no constitutional search and seizure issue was raised in that case. Dorwart had a legitimate expectation of privacy in his home, and government intrusion without a search warrant was per se unreasonable, subject to only a few exceptions that did not apply. Citing Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 US 523, 18 L Ed 2d 930, 87 S Ct 1727 (1967), and G.M. Leasing Corp. v. U.S., 429 US 338, 50 L Ed 2d 530, 97 S Ct 619 (1977), the court found that the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure applies in civil as well as criminal contexts because all citizens have a strong interest in securing their homes from government intrusion, regardless of the reason for the intrusion, and that placing limitations on the discretion of when, where, and how to conduct a search that intrudes upon a private area is the precise reason behind the search warrant requirement. Postjudgment execution procedures and writs of execution issued under the procedures did not sufficiently limit the deputies' discretion in executing the writs to satisfy constitutional search and seizure provisions. Thus, entry into Dorwart's residence and seizure of his property without permission or a warrant, relying only on the authority of the writs, violated Dorwart's constitutional search and seizure rights. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Nebr. v. Hinchey, 374 NW 2d 14 (Nebr. 1985).

The Supreme Court distinguished Ramsey because no constitutional search and seizure issue was raised in that case. Dorwart had a legitimate expectation of privacy in his home, and government intrusion without a search warrant was per se unreasonable, subject to only a few exceptions that did not apply. Citing Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 US 523, 18 L Ed 2d 930, 87 S Ct 1727 (1967), and G.M. Leasing Corp. v. U.S., 429 US 338, 50 L Ed 2d 530, 97 S Ct 619 (1977), the court found that the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure applies in civil as well as criminal contexts because all citizens have a strong interest in securing their homes from government intrusion, regardless of the reason for the intrusion, and that placing limitations on the discretion of when, where, and how to conduct a search that intrudes upon a private area is the precise reason behind the search warrant requirement. Postjudgment execution procedures and writs of execution issued under the procedures did not sufficiently limit the deputies' discretion in executing the writs to satisfy constitutional search and seizure provisions. Thus, entry into Dorwart's residence and seizure of his property without permission or a warrant, relying only on the authority of the writs, violated Dorwart's constitutional search and seizure rights. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Nebr. v. Hinchey, 374 NW 2d 14 (Nebr. 1985).

Procedure for Stay of Execution of Judgment Not Followed — Property Properly Awarded: Petitioner requested a Writ of Supervisory Control to have an ejection order declared illegal in a property dispute. The Supreme Court in reviewing the proceedings stated that a judgment debtor desiring to stay the execution of a judgment or order of a District Court must proceed under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). That rule provides that if an appellant desires a stay of proceedings where the court has made no such order, he may present to the court and secure its approval of a supersedeas bond. In this case, the District Court fixed the amount of the bond but the bond was never presented to the court for approval prior to the ejection order. Therefore, the judgment holder was entitled to enforcement of the judgment by execution under 25-13-101 and 25-13-201. The District Court followed these statutes and was authorized to order delivery of the possession of the property under 25-13-307. State ex rel. Cady v. District Court, 203 M 522, 662 P2d 602, 40 St. Rep. 610 (1983).

Execution in Wrong County — Authority of Sheriff: Outside of his bailiwick a Sheriff has no more power to serve process than a private citizen; hence a Writ of Execution directed to the Sheriff of one county but sent to and served by the Sheriff of another county ordering him to levy upon property of the judgment debtor in his county does not create a lien upon such property. Merchants Credit Serv., Inc. v. Chouteau County Bank, 112 M 229, 114 P2d 1074 (1941), distinguished in Stokke v. Graham, 129 M 96, 281 P2d 1025 (1955).

Sheriff to Whom Issued: The word "must" in the second sentence is mandatory and peremptory, excludes discretion, and imposes an absolute duty to perform the requirement of the statute. Chapter 510 in (6)(a) inserted third sentence requiring earnings withheld from judgment debtor to be remitted to sheriff or levying officer within 5 days of withholding; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 515 in (1)(a) in introductory clause after "no later than" substituted "120 days" for "60 days"; inserted (1)(b) regarding service of a writ upon a corporation or other legal entity; inserted (1)(c) providing that a levy under subsection (1)(b) is effective when the writ is served by personal service or by mail; inserted (3) requiring a third party to respond within 10 business days after the date of levy, based on assets held at the time of levy; in (5) near middle after "within the" substituted "120 days" for "60 days"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 560 in (1) near beginning of introductory clause after "shall" inserted "subject to subsection (6)" and after "no later than" substituted "120 days" for "60 days"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) With respect to earnings of a judgment debtor, an employer shall respond to the levy based upon the earnings accrued to the end of the regular pay period in which the levy occurred"; in (5) near end after "within the" substituted "120 days" for "60 days"; inserted (6) regarding a levy upon the earnings of a judgment debtor; inserted (7) providing that this section does not supersede applicable state or federal laws regarding priority; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 89 in (1)(c) substituted "the judgment creditor or the judgment creditor's attorney" for "the plaintiff or his attorney"; inserted (3) requiring an employer to respond to a levy based upon earnings for the pay period in which the levy occurred; inserted (4) providing for a holding period following notification to the judgment debtor before levied property may be sold; inserted (5) providing for additional levies to satisfy the writ until the judgment is satisfied; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 16, 1999.

Applicability: Section 10, Ch. 89, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to an execution of judgment commenced on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective March 16, 1999.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 88 near beginning of first sentence inserted 60-day limitation on execution of writ.

Chapter 548 in first sentence, near beginning, and in third sentence, near middle, after "the sheriff", inserted "or levying officer".

Case Notes

Erroneous Denial of Motion to Quash Writ of Execution: A federal District Court allowed a default judgment against Clark in favor of plaintiffs. In order to execute the judgment on Clark's Montana assets, plaintiffs docketed the judgment in federal District Court in Montana, and about the same time, plaintiffs brought an action in Montana state court, asserting that Clark fraudulently transferred real property in order to avoid reimbursing plaintiffs. Following denial of the fraudulent transfer claim in Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001), plaintiffs docketed the federal judgment in Lake County District Court, requesting and receiving a writ of execution, and a levying officer than executed on Clark's accounts. Upon notice of the levy on the accounts, Clark moved to quash the writ of execution, asserting that the federal judgment was invalid, that the writ was void because the federal District Court never obtained proper personal jurisdiction, and that service by publication was inadequate because the federal order required personal service. The state District Court concluded that Clark cited no authority allowing a state court to invalidate a federal District Court's judgment when the federal transcription of judgment is filed for execution in state court, so Clark's motion to quash was denied, and Clark appealed. As set out in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), a party seeking to vacate a foreign judgment filed in Montana state courts may do so only upon defenses that make the underlying judgment invalid or unenforceable, which include a lack of personal or subject matter jurisdiction of the rendering court, fraud in the procurement of the judgment, lack of due process, or satisfaction. However, if a foreign judgment is valid, it should have the same credit, validity, and effect in every other court of the United States that it had in the court in which it was pronounced. Thus, the state District Court erred in concluding that it had no authority to review whether the federal court had personal jurisdiction over Clark. The Supreme Court then went on to consider whether Clark was properly subject to the federal court's jurisdiction in order to determine if the federal default judgment was valid. Service by publication did not provide the federal court with jurisdiction to enter the default judgment because that service was not properly completed and was thus ineffective. In its order granting service by publication, the federal court concluded that service could not be accomplished other than by publication, effectively determining, based on plaintiffs' representations, that personal service had not been accomplished. Therefore, the state District Court committed reversible error when it failed to hold that service by publication was not properly accomplished pursuant to the federal court order. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2003 MT 87, 315 M 121, 68 P3d 673 (2003).

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Enforceability of Civil Judgment Insufficient Compelling State Interest to Justify Warrantless Search of Judgment Debtor's Residence: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. The argument was made that the compelling state interest justifying the warrantless search and seizure was the enforcement of monetary judgments by the seizure of the judgment debtor's property and the preservation of the credibility of the judicial system. Although the Supreme Court has held that a compelling state interest justifying an intrusion into a person's privacy may exist when the state is acting to enforce its criminal laws for the benefit and protection of other fundamental rights of its citizens, in this case, entry was not effectuated to enforce the state's criminal laws or to protect society in general from the actions of criminal wrongdoers, but rather for the purpose of enforcing a civil judgment between two private citizens. The state's interest in postjudgment execution cases is not so compelling as to justify an intrusion into a person's private home, without the person's consent, for purposes of searching that home and seizing any property that might have some value. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Entry of Residence to Levy Upon Personal Property While Judgment Debtor Incarcerated — Entry and Search of Private Home Not Authorized by Writ of Execution: Dorwart was named defendant in two small claims actions, resulting in the entry of default judgments against him and the issuance of writs of execution to enforce the judgments. About 1 month later, while driving his truck, Dorwart was stopped and served with the two writs and was subsequently also arrested for driving under the influence and incarcerated. While Dorwart was in jail, two Sheriff's deputies entered Dorwart's home and garage without his permission or a warrant and seized various items of personal property pursuant to the writs, relying on the writs as the sole authority for authorization to enter the residence and conduct the search and seizure. Dorwart later filed a complaint, alleging various state and federal claims and common-law tort claims and contending that Montana's postjudgment execution statutes are unconstitutional. The District Court found that the deputies did not violate Dorwart's constitutional right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure because the writs constituted judicial authorization for their actions. On appeal, the prosecution relied on Ramsey v. Burns, 27 M 154, 69 P 711 (1902), for the proposition that one of the implied powers authorized by a writ of execution includes the levying officer's entry into a judgment debtor's residence or place of business in order to execute the writ and that on that basis, entry of the home was not unreasonable. The Supreme Court distinguished Ramsey because no constitutional search and seizure issue was raised in that case. Dorwart had a legitimate expectation of privacy in his home, and government intrusion without a search warrant was per se unreasonable, subject to only a few exceptions that did not apply. Citing Camara v. Municipal Court, 387 US 523, 18 L Ed 2d 930, 87 S Ct 1727 (1967), and G.M. Leasing Corp. v. U.S., 429 US 338, 50 L Ed 2d 530, 97 S Ct 619 (1977), the court found that the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure applies in civil as well as criminal contexts because all citizens have a strong interest in securing their homes from government intrusion, regardless of the reason for the intrusion, and that placing limitations on the discretion of when, where, and how to conduct a search that intrudes upon a private area is the precise reason behind the search warrant requirement. Postjudgment execution procedures and writs of execution issued under the procedures did not sufficiently limit the deputies' discretion in executing the writs to satisfy constitutional search and seizure provisions. Thus, entry into Dorwart's residence and seizure of his property without permission or a warrant, relying only on the authority of the writs, violated Dorwart's constitutional search and seizure rights. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Nebr. v. Hinchey, 374 NW 2d 14 (Nebr. 1985).

How Lawful Authority to Enter and Search Private Home Under Writ of Execution Obtained — Execution Warrant: When an officer has been unable to secure property that would satisfy an underlying judgment and there is reason to believe that personal property subject to execution may be located within the debtor's residence, an "execution warrant" should be obtained pursuant to the following procedures in order to avoid violation of the debtor's constitutional rights. An execution warrant should be issued only by a judge "upon reasonable cause supported by affidavit setting out that a writ of execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part and that the affiant has reason to believe that there is property subject to execution in the possession of the debtor kept and maintained within the debtor's residence, not otherwise available for execution, describing the property sought and the place and purpose of the execution". If the judge is satisfied that there is a reasonable cause to believe the statements set out in the affidavit, the judge may then issue an execution warrant authorizing the officer to enter the premises and levy upon property subject to execution. An execution warrant obtained under these procedures will protect the judgment debtor's right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure under both the U.S. and Montana Constitutions. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998), following Nebr. v. Hinchey, 374 NW 2d 14 (Nebr. 1985).

Setoff at Time of Presentation of Writ of Execution: A judgment creditor claimed that because a bank took no action to exercise its right of setoff before a writ of execution was presented, the writ took precedence over the setoff. However, the bank acquired a right to setoff at the time payment became delinquent but chose instead to perform the setoff when presented with the writ. The judgment creditor had no greater right against the bank than did the debtor at that time, and because a judgment creditor seeking execution of a debtor's property in possession of a third party stands in the shoes of the debtor as far as the rights of the third party are concerned, the writ did not take precedence. Under these circumstances, 30-4-303 did not apply. The bank properly asserted the setoff at the time the writ was presented. Victor Werlhof Aviation Ins. v. Farmers St. Bank, 237 M 51, 771 P2d 962, 46 St. Rep. 613 (1989).

Surplus Proceeds — Duty of Sheriff to Deliver to Debtor: A Sheriff selling property on execution pursuant to a judgment is a trustee for the debtor as well as the creditor, and he is bound, unless otherwise directed by the court, if the property sells for more than enough to pay the judgment and costs, to pay the overplus to the judgment debtor. Sherlock v. Vinson, 90 M 235, 1 P2d 71 (1931).

No Application to Judgment Lien — Notice and Sale Only Necessary: The object of a levy is to bring property within the custody of the law, but where it, by operation of a judgment lien, is already in the custody of the law, no levy is necessary; nothing more is required than to give the necessary notice and sell. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Case Notes

Amendment of Writ — Service: Where 2 years after a Writ of Execution, which was good in the county in which it was issued but invalid in the county to which it was sent and served, the trial court ordered its amendment by changing the name of the county in which the Sheriff was directed to serve it, without notice to the party upon whom it had been served, the amendment resulted in effect in a new Writ which was never served, and the attempted amendment was ineffectual for the purpose of validating the original service. Merchants Credit Serv., Inc. v. Chouteau County Bank, 112 M 229, 114 P2d 1074 (1941), distinguished in Stokke v. Graham, 129 M 96, 281 P2d 1025 (1955).

General 445
Application to Debtor's Cause of Action 446

GENERAL

Failure to Record Aircraft Conveyance With Federal Agency — Unrecorded Ownership Interest Invalid to Cut Off Right to Levy on Aircraft: Ford signed a promissory note for $28,503.62, plus interest, for products purchased from Lewistown Propane Co. (Lewistown). Lewistown sought to collect on the promissory note, and Ford subsequently filed a confession of judgment with the District Court for the full amount. At this time, Becky was allegedly helping Ford to refinance Ford's debt, and Ford sold three pieces of farm machinery and an airplane to Becky. Section 503(c) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 requires that every aircraft transfer be evidenced by a recorded instrument before the rights of innocent third parties can be affected; however, neither Ford nor Becky recorded the transfer. When Lewistown attempted to collect on its judgment, it inquired with the state Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration about the ownership of the aircraft and determined that the aircraft was still registered in Ford's name and had no liens or encumbrances attached, and that Ford had paid the annual federal registration fees. Lewistown then seized the aircraft and advised Ford that it intended to sell the aircraft to satisfy the judgment against Ford. Upon learning of the seizure of the aircraft, Becky intervened and sought a stay of execution of judgment, which the District Court granted. Lewistown appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Lewistown, as judgment creditor, was entitled to rely on the federal records, but because Becky's ownership interest was unrecorded at the time of Lewistown's execution of the levy, Becky's interest was invalid as to Lewistown and could not be used to cut off Lewistown's right to levy on the aircraft. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Ford, 2002 MT 27, 308 M 243, 42 P3d 229 (2002), applying Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633 (1986).

Equitable Ownership Interest Adequate for Lien Purposes: In order to determine whether the holder of an equitable title was an owner of real property for purposes of establishing a lien under 25-9-301, the Supreme Court decided an equitable ownership interest was sufficient. The intent of this section is clearly to make a judgment lien operative against all real property interests. Hannah v. Martinson, 232 M 469, 758 P2d 276, 45 St. Rep. 1203 (1988).

Third Person Subject to Attachment — Notice and Writ Required: This section provides that the procedures prescribed by 27-18-401 are required to attach a debt when a Writ of Execution is involved. This section and 27-18-401 establish that a Writ of Attachment or Execution is not alone sufficient to create a lien under 27-18-307 when a debt owed by a third person is the subject of attachment; also required is notice that the debt owing is attached in pursuance of the Writ. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Fraudulent Conveyances: The lien, which a creditor who seeks to have a conveyance of realty set aside as fraudulent must have acquired as a condition precedent to his right to maintain the action, may be acquired, under this section, by levy of execution, and having once been acquired, it is not lost by failure of the Sheriff to hold a sale but, instead, making return nulla bona. Stone-Ordean-Wells Co. v. Strong, 94 M 20, 20 P2d 639 (1933).

Corporate Stock — Manner of Levy: Under this section, shares of stock in a building and loan association are levied upon by the Writ of Execution in the same manner as upon a Writ of Attachment. Fousek v. DeForest, 90 M 448, 4 P2d 472 (1931).

Unrecorded Interest Not Subject to Lien: This section, construed with 25-9-301, leads to the conclusion that an interest undisclosed by the records is not subject to the lien of a docketed judgment. Piccolo v. Tanaka, 78 M 445, 253 P 890 (1927), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937); McMillan v. Davenport, 44 M 23, 118 P 756 (1911), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

Redemption Rights Not Subject to Execution: The right to redeem is a personal privilege and not a property right, and hence it does not come within the category of any of the interests enumerated in this section as subject to execution. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Purpose of Section: The purpose of the Legislature in enacting this section was to furnish an expeditious method of satisfying a judgment, and not to extend the operation of the lien. In other words, the purpose was to put upon the same footing, so far as the levy of execution is concerned, personal property and interests in real estate that are not affected by the lien of the judgment. McMillan v. Davenport, 44 M 23, 118 P 756 (1911).

APPLICATION TO DEBTOR'S CAUSE OF ACTION

Plaintiff Cannot Purchase Judgment Debtor's Tort Action Against County to Satisfy Judgment — Order to Set Aside Levy and Purchase of Action Upheld: The plaintiff was not able to collect on a judgment she received against the defendant. After she conducted a debtor's examination and learned the defendant had filed a personal injury lawsuit against the county, the plaintiff obtained a writ for the sheriff to seize and sell the defendant's action against the county, purchased the defendant's cause of action, and filed a motion to be substituted as the plaintiff in it. The District Court denied her motion as void under state law and ordered that the levying sale and purchase be set aside, and the plaintiff appealed. In affirming the District Court, the Supreme Court noted that Montana is one of several states that do not honor the sale of causes of action involving a tort. Rather, to satisfy the judgment, the plaintiff could petition the District Court to assign the proceeds from the defendant's tort action. Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748.

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing.

Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on former Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that former Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993). See also Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748, holding that a cause of action deriving from a tort is not subject to levy and purchase.

Cause of Action Not Property or Debt: A cause of action for personal injuries is not subject to execution at the instance of the judgment debtor of one bringing the action, being neither property nor a debt, within the meaning of this section. Toole v. Paumie Parisian Dye House, 101 M 74, 52 P2d 162 (1935).

Cause of Action Not Subject to Attachment Before Judgment: A cause of action for personal injuries is not a "chose in action" such as may be classed as personal property, within the meaning of this section and 27-18-407, does not constitute a "debt" as the term is used in the same section, and is not subject to attachment before judgment. Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935). See also Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748.

Levy Upon Cause of Action: A cause of action being personal property not capable of manual delivery, levy of execution upon it must, under this section, be made in like manner as upon a Writ of Attachment, which is, under subsection (1) of 27-18-405, by leaving a copy of the Writ and a notice that the cause of action is levied upon with the owner; hence where the copy and notice were delivered to the Clerk of the District Court and not to the owner, the levy was ineffective. State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1925).

Recovery of Money as Chose in Action: A cause of action is the right which a party has to institute a judicial proceeding, and if the relief sought is the recovery of money, the cause of action is designated a "thing" or "chose in action", which is personal property and therefore subject to seizure and sale in satisfaction of a judgment. State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1925), distinguished in Baker v. Tullock, 106 M 375, 77 P2d 1035 (1938).

Equitable Title to Amounts Due to Prevail: In garnishment the equitable title to the property sought to be reached will prevail over the bare legal title. Notice or knowledge by a county of the assignment by its Sheriff to a deputy of his claim for mileage was not necessary unless it acted to its prejudice before notice. A judgment creditor who levies execution on all money due from a county to his debtor (here a Deputy Sheriff), acquires all the rights which the debtor had at the time of the levy to the extent of the creditor's claim. Part 6
Property Exempt From Execution

Part Case Notes

Writs of Execution Used to Enter, Search, and Seize — Damages for Violation of Constitutional Rights — Immunity of Peace Officers: Two brothers sued the Sheriff and two deputies for violating their Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Neither writs of execution issued to enforce default judgments against one brother nor the postjudgment statutes under which they were issued expressly directed or authorized local peace officers to enter the other brother's house and search for and seize property of the brother against whom the writs were issued and who lived in the house. Therefore, 2-9-103 did not give the peace officers immunity from suit on the basis that they acted "under the authority of law". However, to the extent that any claim for damages for violation of due process is based on failure to provide the brother against whom the writs were issued with notice of property that is exempt from execution and a timely hearing, the claim results from the execution statutes' constitutional inadequacy, and recovery for those procedural inadequacies is barred by the provision in 2-9-103 for immunity for an action under authority of a law subsequently found unconstitutional. The District Court's dismissal, based on statutory immunity, of the brothers' other claims was reversed. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Workers' Compensation — No Bankruptcy Exemption: Workers' compensation benefits are not exempt from federal bankruptcy. 42 St. Rep. 2043 (U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Montana; order of Dec. 26, 1985).

Spendthrift Provision Valid — Exemption From Collection by Creditors: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court held spendthrift provisions in trusts to be valid. In this case, the beneficiary's attempted assignment of trust income to his creditors was invalid, though the creditors could execute against the income after payment of the income to the beneficiary. A lower court order directing trustee to pay the trust income directly to the creditors was reversed. Section 72-24-210 (now repealed) did not apply because: (1) the trust was made up of personal property and three contracts for deed, which under the doctrine of equitable conversion are personal property to the seller; and (2) the trust provided that any income not distributed was to be added to principal, thus providing a direction for accumulation. Lundgren v. Hoglund, 219 M 295, 711 P2d 809, 42 St. Rep. 2031 (1985).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Residential Homestead Property — Lien for Welfare Payments Not Allowed: A county may not execute on a lien for welfare payments against residential property owned by welfare recipients when there has been a homestead declaration recorded on the property. 42 A.G. Op. 112 (1988).

Provisions Inapplicable to Property Under Tax Lien: The exemption provisions of this part do not apply when personal property is seized and sold for payment of delinquent personal property taxes. 41 A.G. Op. 90 (1986).

Exemption Procedures: When asked for an opinion on the proper procedure to be followed by a Sheriff presented with an exemption affidavit by the debtor, the Attorney General concluded that: (1) the Sheriff may require an indemnity bond from the attachment creditor; (2) the Sheriff may request attachment debtors to file their exemption affidavits in the Justice Court for a determination of validity; and (3) if the debtor refuses to file the affidavit in court, the Sheriff is forced to determine the validity of the claim, but the Sheriff may require a bond of indemnity from the attachment plaintiff. 28 A.G. Op. 38 (1959).

25-13-601. Waiver of exemptions in unsecured note unenforceable.

Constitutionally Protected Property Interest in Statutory Exemption From Execution — Due Process Requiring Notice and Hearing to Allow Assertion of Available Exemptions: In order to establish a property interest in a benefit such as the personal property exemptions from execution, a person must show a legitimate claim of entitlement to the benefit. Case Notes

Inherited IRAs Not Exempt From Bankruptcy Estate: Although Montana exemption laws are intended to be liberally construed, the construction cannot disregard the plain language of a statute. As a result, a debtor may not claim an exemption in an inherited IRA from a bankruptcy estate pursuant to 25-13-608. In re Golz, 2015 MT 318, 381 Mont. 385, 360 P.3d 1142.

Household Bank Account Not Exempt: A household bank account is not considered to be a "household good" and therefore is not exempt from the execution of a lien. Bank of America v. Ivey, 2010 MT 131, 356 Mont. 388, 234 P.3d 867.

Bankruptcy — Proceeds From Sale of Business Stock Not Considered Exempt Benefits When Used to Pay Debtor's End-of-Life Care and Medications: On a certified question from federal Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether a debtor may claim an exemption under this section in proceeds from the sale of shares of stock in a business under an agreement to sell the stock, as exempt benefits, when the proceeds are used exclusively to pay for the debtor's end-of-life medical, surgical, or hospital care and medications. Although exemption laws are liberally construed, that construction may not disregard plain legislative mandate. The court held that in the context of subsection (1)(f) of this section, benefits include only those payments to a debtor that are expressly earmarked for the sole purpose of paying medical, surgical, or hospital bills. When, as here, there are no contractual restrictions on the debtor's use of proceeds from the sale of business stock, the debtor may not claim the proceeds as exempt benefits even when the proceeds are actually used exclusively to pay for the debtor's end-of-life medical, surgical, or hospital care and medications. In re Archer, 2006 MT 82, 332 M 1, 136 P3d 563 (2006), distinguishing Dayton v. Ewart, 28 M 153, 72 P 420 (1903).

Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution Considered Judgment Debt — Not Assessable Against Exempt VA Disability Benefits: The District Court included a portion of the husband's Veterans Benefits Association (VA) disability benefits as part of the division of marital property and assessed attorney fees against the husband. He contended that federal law precluded both and that because his VA benefits composed his sole source of income, his wife's attorney fees would have to be paid from property that was exempt from execution under 38 U.S.C. 5301 and this section. The Supreme Court reversed, agreeing that VA disability benefits are not considered "disposable retired pay" to be treated as marital property and holding that an award of attorney fees in a dissolution action comprises a judgment debt that may not be executed against exempt federal disability benefits. Under Montana law prior to adoption of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, attorney fees were treated as a form of temporary support or alimony pendente lite. However, that Act contains separate statutory provisions for an award of costs and attorney fees and an award of temporary maintenance or support, expressing a legislative intent that a judgment for attorney fees not be characterized as a form of maintenance or support (see also 27B C.J.S. Divorce §343). In this case, the District Court did not direct the payment of attorney fees from the husband's disability benefits, so the Supreme Court directed that, on remand, the District Court revisit the issue after considering property distribution, maintenance, and child support, with the husband's payment potentially coming instead from the value of his nonexempt property. In re Marriage of Strong, 2000 MT 178, 300 M 331, 8 P3d 763, 57 St. Rep. 709 (2000), following Dyche v. Dyche, 507 SW 2d 293 (Mo. 1978).

By stating that judgment debtors are entitled to the statutory property exemptions, the Legislature has given judgment debtors a legal right to claim and benefit from those exemptions. Therefore, Montana judgment debtors have a property interest in the statutory exemptions from execution that is protected by constitutional due process guarantees. Montana's postjudgment execution statutes violate those due process guarantees because they do not provide for notice to a judgment debtor of the seizure of the debtor's property, of the availability of statutory exemptions from execution and where to locate additional information about them, and of the availability of procedures by which to claim exemptions from execution. Further, the statutes are deficient from a due process standpoint because they do not provide for a prompt hearing on claimed exemptions. Dorwart v. Garnishment of Social Security Benefits for Unpaid Maintenance — Proper for Former Spouse During Custodial Period: Pursuant to a divorce decree, the husband failed to pay child support or maintenance. At the wife's request, the District Court subsequently issued an order directing the Social Security Administration to withhold the total delinquent child support and maintenance from the husband's Social Security benefits. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that pursuant to the three conditions outlined in statute, the husband's Social Security benefits may be garnished for maintenance only for the amount of maintenance that accrued during the 7-month period that the wife was the child's custodial parent. In re Marriage of Mikesell, 276 M 403, 916 P2d 740, 53 St. Rep. 418 (1996).

Maintenance Not a Debt: The duty of a spouse to support separates court-ordered maintenance from a judgment debt. Spousal maintenance is an obligation and not a debt, so the spouse owing maintenance is not a judgment debtor granted an exemption. A union disability pension may be used to meet maintenance payments. In re Marriage of Boharski, 257 M 71, 847 P2d 709, 50 St. Rep. 161 (1993).

Husband's Annuity Constituting Retirement — Not Exempt From Marital Support: Based on the analysis presented in Villasenor v. Villasenor, 657 P2d 889 (9th Cir. 1982), appellant's civil service disability annuity constitutes "retirement" benefits, rather than "disability" benefits. Because retirement benefits are not exempt from execution, the District Court did not err in ordering direct payment to ex-spouse of a share of former husband's monthly disability retirement annuity. In re Marriage of Castor, 249 M 495, 817 P2d 665, 48 St. Rep. 807 (1991), distinguished in In re Marriage of Boharski, 257 M 71, 847 P2d 709, 50 St. Rep. 161 (1993).

Social Security Benefits Traceable to Spouse — Exempt From Execution: The District Court found that under this section, social security benefits of the judgment debtor were exempt from execution but that similar benefits belonging to the debtor's spouse and traceable to the couple's joint bank account were not exempt. The Supreme Court held that under 42 U.S.C. 407(a) and the decisions in Philpott v. Essex County Welfare Bd., 409 US 413, 34 L Ed 2d 608, 93 S Ct 590 (1973), and Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Deskins, 474 NE 2d 1207 (Ohio App. 1984), social security benefits deposited in bank accounts, if reasonably traceable, are exempt from execution. Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990).

DECISIONS UNDER SECTION 25-13-609

Four-Wheel All-Terrain Vehicle Not a Sporting Good: On a certified question from federal Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court concluded that under state law, debtors may not claim a four-wheel all-terrain vehicle (ATV) as an exempted sporting good under 25-13-609(1). Rather, an ATV falls within the motor vehicle exemption provided in 25-13-609(2). In re Holzapfel, 2011 MT 257, 362 Mont. 251, 262 P.3d 1114.

Household Bank Account Not Exempt: A household bank account is not considered to be a "household good" and therefore is not exempt from the execution of a lien. Bank of America v. Ivey, 2010 MT 131, 356 Mont. 388, 234 P.3d 867.

Montana Debtor May Claim Exemption for One Gun in Addition to Statutory Exemptions: On a certified question from the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court held that the plain language of 25-13-613(1)(b) allows a Montana debtor to claim an exemption for one gun in addition to the exemption allowed and claimed for firearms, within monetary limits, allowed under subsection (1) of this section. In re Maynard, 2006 MT 162, 332 M 485, 139 P3d 803 (2006), distinguishing Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978).

Business Expense Account Not Exempt From Execution: The husband maintained an account for business expenses that were not personal income. The District Court exempted that account from execution for a property settlement that survived the husband's bankruptcy. The Supreme Court reversed. The funds that passed through the account were neither tools of the trade nor a percentage of the husband's disposable earnings, and the District Court did not have authority to exempt an account that was not addressed or exempted from execution by statute. Further, the exemption was a retroactive modification of the property settlement that violated 40-4-208 and improperly restricted the wife's ability to levy execution. In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004).

Joint Bankruptcy Debtors Allowed to Claim Separate Exemption of Interest in Jointly Owned Personal Property: Three married couples filed similar joint bankruptcy petitions wherein each spouse claimed a separate set of personal property exemptions pursuant to this section. The bankruptcy trustee objected to the claimed objections in each case, contending that joint debtors were limited to a single set of exemptions. The U.S. Bankruptcy Court certified the question to the Montana Supreme Court. The court held that the specific provisions of 31-2-106 control over the general personal property exemptions available to judgment debtors in this section. Section 31-2-106 allows each individual to claim the allowable exemptions in any bankruptcy proceeding. Because each joint debtor maintains an interest in jointly held personal property, each may claim a separate exemption of personal interest in that property, essentially stacking the two exemptions in one item of personal property. However, in cases when the personal property is owned solely by one of the joint debtors, only the debtor with the ownership interest may claim an exemption for that property. In re Zimmermann, Landon, & Maly, 2002 MT 90, 309 M 337, 46 P3d 599 (2002).

Constitutionally Protected Property Interest in Statutory Exemption From Execution — Due Process Requiring Notice and Hearing to Allow Assertion of Available Exemptions: In order to establish a property interest in a benefit such as the personal property exemptions from execution, a person must show a legitimate claim of entitlement to the benefit. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER EXEMPTION
SECTIONS 25-13-611 AND 25-13-612

Implements of Trade:

Debtor is a self-employed excavation contractor. His backhoe and flatbed trailer are exempt from execution in a bankruptcy proceeding as they are tools or implements within the meaning of this section and are necessary to the debtor to carry on his trade as an excavator. The fact that the backhoe and trailer are not necessary to the debtor's obtaining employment is not relevant. The section does not provide a contingency that a showing that the debtor could obtain work without the items negates the exemption. MacDonald v. Mercill, 220 M 146, 714 P2d 132, 43 St. Rep. 247 (1986).

It is not necessary that claimant shall have plied his trade without interruption, and if, though temporarily resorting necessarily to some other means of livelihood, he intended to return to original occupation when circumstances permitted, he is entitled to protection of the statute. State ex rel. Bartol v. Justice of the Peace Court, 102 M 1, 55 P2d 691 (1936).

Truck Equipped With Crane — Not Tool or Implement to Carry on Trade — Bankruptcy: A truck, equipped as a mobile crane used as a hoist for heavy equipment repair, used by the bankruptcy debtor in his trade or business, is not a "tool or implement" within the meaning of 25-13-612 (since repealed). In re Gehnert, 40 St. Rep. 1894 (1983).

Denial of Motion to Release Attached Property — Ruling Not Final: Where a ruling denying defendant's motion to release attached property was based on what the District Court considered to be an informality of the accompanying affidavit, the ruling lacked finality and was not a bar to a new motion and affidavit. Kidder v. Varner, 136 M 328, 347 P2d 721 (1959).

Motion to Exempt — Use of Affidavits: It is customary in the practice in this state to use affidavits with motions to exempt; however, it is not required by statute. A showing of jurisdiction and exempt status can be made by deposition or at a hearing on a motion or by petition to exempt. Kidder v. Varner, 136 M 328, 347 P2d 721 (1959).

Res Judicata: Where a ruling denying defendant's motion to release attached property was based on what the District Court considered to be an informality of the accompanying affidavit, the ruling lacked finality and was not a bar to a new motion and affidavit. Kidder v. Varner, 136 M 328, 347 P2d 721 (1959).

Irrigation Works: The property of a reservoir company which furnished water to landowners in an irrigation district which owned majority of stock of the reservoir company was not subject to execution by construction company which enlarged reservoir and obtained judgment against the reservoir company for work done, not because of district's ownership of stock but because the supplying of water to landowners of irrigation district was public service. Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (1940), reversing Ackroyd v. Brady Irrigation Co., 27 F. Supp. 503 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

State Property: No state property or the property of any state agency whatever is referred to or included in the broadest reading of this section, but it may not be argued that under the doctrine of inclusio unius est exclusio alterius there are no other exemptions, to permit foreclosure upon property belonging to the state or used by the sovereign authority of the state for public purposes (irrigation). Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (1940).

Jurisdiction of Justice of Peace to Determine Exemption: A Justice of the Peace may, on motion supported by affidavit or evidence, determine the validity of a claim for exemption of personal property seized under attachment issued out of his court. State ex rel. Bartol v. Justice of the Peace Court, 102 M 1, 55 P2d 691 (1936).

Miner's Exemption: Coal cars, timbers, rails, and a wagon scale used in coal mining are exempt from attachment to the value of $1,000 under subsection (1)(e), when the miner is married or the head of a family, as "implements" forming a part of his equipment for work. State ex rel. Bartol v. Justice of the Peace Court, 102 M 1, 55 P2d 691 (1936).

Exemption Statute to Be Liberally Construed: Exemption statutes should be liberally construed for the benefit of the exemption claimant. McMullen v. Shields, 96 M 191, 29 P2d 652 (1934).

Motor Vehicle as Constituting a "Wagon": In application of the rule of liberal construction, under this section (prior to enactment of sections 93-5819 through 93-5822, R.C.M. 1947, now codified as 25-13-602 (since repealed) and 25-13-617 (since repealed)), exempting to a farmer, as the head of a family, a cart or wagon, an automobile, constituting the only means of conveyance of supplies to and products from the farm to market and taking the place of and serving the purposes of a wagon is exempt from execution as a "wagon". McMullen v. Shields, 96 M 191, 29 P2d 652 (1934).

Liberal Construction of Exemption Statute Required: Exemption law must be liberally construed, provided claimant is within class exempted. In re Frazier, 5 F. Supp. 903 (D.C. Mont. 1934).

Physicians and Surgeons — Optometrist Not Included: Optometrist was not within the provision exempting from execution the instruments and office furniture of "physician" or "surgeon". In re Frazier, 5 F. Supp. 903 (D.C. Mont. 1934).

Purpose of Section: Exemption statutes, such as this section, are primarily intended for the protection of the home as well as for the protection of the state, which is interested in the welfare of the homes within its confines and the throwing of safeguards about them. In re Metcalf's Estate, 93 M 542, 19 P2d 905 (1933).

Burden of Proof: Exemption statutes must be liberally construed, yet where an exemption is extended to a certain class of persons, as by 25-13-611 and 25-13-612 (since repealed), the claimant must bring himself within the spirit of its provisions; i.e., he must show that he belongs to one of the classes mentioned. Swanz v. Clark, 71 M 385, 229 P 1108 (1924).

Identification of Exempt Property Required: Where a debtor owns more property of a given class than the law exempts, he must, in order to secure the benefit of the exemption, identify the property he claims as exempt and segregate it from the portion liable to seizure. Tetrault v. Ingraham, 54 M 524, 171 P 1148 (1918), distinguished in Weir v. Hom Tong, 100 M 1, 46 P2d 45 (1935), and followed in Brenton v. Estate of Sandvig, 250 M 220, 819 P2d 184, 48 St. Rep. 859 (1991).

Saving Clause: Section 13, Ch. 302, L. 1987, provided: "This act does not affect rights and duties that matured, penalties that were incurred, or proceedings that were begun before the effective date of this act." Effective October 1, 1987.

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 302, L. 1987, was a severability section.

Social Security Benefits Traceable to Spouse — Exempt From Execution: The District Court found that under 25-13-608, social security benefits of the judgment debtor were exempt from execution but that similar benefits belonging to the debtor's spouse and traceable to the couple's joint bank account were not exempt. The Supreme Court held that under 42 U.S.C. 407(a) and the decisions in Philpott v. Essex County Welfare Bd., 409 US 413, 34 L Ed 2d 608, 93 S Ct 590 (1973), and Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Deskins, 474 NE 2d 1207 (Ohio App. 1984), social security benefits deposited in bank accounts, if reasonably traceable, are exempt from execution. Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990).

Unlimited Use of Forty-Five Day Exemption: There is no limit to the number of times a judgment debtor can claim the 45-day exemption under 25-13-614 (now under 25-13-610) on earnings for personal services. Blakely v. Dupre, 209 M 282, 679 P2d 1255, 41 St. Rep. 708 (1984).

2007 Amendment: Chapter 449 in (1)(a) at beginning after "all" substituted "necessary firefighting equipment and facilities of a governmental fire agency organized under Title 7, chapter 33" for "fire engines, hooks, and ladders, with the cart, trucks, and carriages, hose, buckets, implements, and apparatus thereto appertaining, and all furniture and uniforms of any fire company or department organized under any laws of this state"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective June 1, 2007.

1989 Amendment: In (1) deleted "25-13-611" and deleted brackets around "25-13-609(1)".

Erroneous Reference: The reference in subsection (1) to 25-13-611 is erroneous. Section 25-13-611 was repealed by Ch. 302, L. 1987. Section 25-13-609(1), enacted by Ch. 302, appears to most closely correspond to the property formerly mentioned in 25-13-611.

1985 Amendment: Near beginning of (1) after "judgment debtors", deleted "who are married or who are heads of families".

Montana Debtor May Claim Exemption for One Gun in Addition to Statutory Exemptions: On a certified question from the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, the Supreme Court held that the plain language of subsection (1)(b) of this section allows a Montana debtor to claim an exemption for one gun in addition to the exemption allowed and claimed for firearms, within monetary limits, allowed under 25-13-609(1). In re Maynard, 2006 MT 162, 332 M 485, 139 P3d 803 (2006), distinguishing Dept. of Revenue v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 179 M 255, 587 P2d 1282 (1978).

State Money Exempt From Execution: The state cannot be a judgment debtor because an execution would result in the impairment of sovereign powers and would be contrary to public policy and because construction would not result in the state gaining any beneficial powers. First Nat'l Bank v. Sourdough Land & Cattle Co., 171 M 390, 558 P2d 654 (1976).

Denial of Motion to Release Attached Property — Ruling Not Final: Where a ruling denying defendant's motion to release attached property was based on what the District Court considered to be an informality of the accompanying affidavit, the ruling lacked finality and was not a bar to a new motion and affidavit. Kidder v. Varner, 136 M 328, 347 P2d 721 (1959).

Motion to Exempt — Use of Affidavits: It is customary in the practice in this state to use affidavits with motions to exempt; however, it is not required by statute. A showing of jurisdiction and exempt status can be made by deposition or at a hearing on a motion or by petition to exempt. Kidder v. Varner, 136 M 328, 347 P2d 721 (1959).

Irrigation Works: The property of a reservoir company which furnished water to landowners in an irrigation district which owned majority of stock of the reservoir company was not subject to execution by construction company which enlarged reservoir and obtained judgment against the reservoir company for work done, not because of district's ownership of stock but because the supplying of water to landowners of irrigation district was public service. Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (1940), reversing Ackroyd v. Brady Irrigation Co., 27 F. Supp. 503 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

State Property: No state property or the property of any state agency whatever is referred to or included in the broadest reading of this section, but it may not be argued that under the doctrine of inclusio unius est exclusio alterius there are no other exemptions, to permit foreclosure upon property belonging to the state or used by the sovereign authority of the state for public purposes (irrigation). Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (1940).

25-13-614. Earnings of judgment debtor.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1989 Amendment: In (1) substituted "Earnings of a judgment debtor that are not subject to garnishment as provided in this section are exempt" for "No earnings are exempt unless the judgment debtor complies with 25-13-411." Amendment effective March 24, 1989.

Effective Date — Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 301, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] is effective on passage and approval and applies to bankruptcy petitions in which discharge takes place on or after [the effective date of this act]." Approved March 24, 1989.

1987 Amendment: Redesignated former (2)(a) as (1); and substituted (2) through (5) (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "Except as provided in subsection (2), the earnings of the judgment debtor for his personal services rendered during the 45-day period prior to the levy of execution or attachment are exempt to the extent such earnings are necessary for the support of his family.

(2) (a) No earnings are exempt unless the judgment debtor complies with 25-13-411.

(b) Earnings are exempt under this section from judgments or orders for maintenance or child support only to the extent allowed by 15 U.S.C. 1673.

(c) One-half of earnings are not exempt for debts incurred by the judgment debtor or his family for gasoline and the common necessaries of life.

(3) The words "his family", as used in this section, except to the extent that these words include a person covered by a judgment or order under subsection (2), are to be construed to include:

(a) the judgment debtor's spouse;

(b) every person who resides with the judgment debtor under his care or maintenance and who is:

(i) a minor child of the judgment debtor or of his spouse or former spouse;

(ii) a minor grandchild, brother, or sister or minor child of a brother or sister of the judgment debtor or of his spouse;

(iii) a father, mother, grandfather, or grandmother of the judgment debtor or of his spouse or former spouse;

(iv) an unmarried sister, brother, or any other relative of the judgment debtor mentioned in this section who has attained the age of majority and is unable to care for or support himself."

Saving Clause: Section 13, Ch. 302, L. 1987, provided: "This act does not affect rights and duties that matured, penalties that were incurred, or proceedings that were begun before the effective date of this act." Effective October 1, 1987.

Severability: Section 14, Ch. 302, L. 1987, was a severability section.

1985 Amendment: In (1) substituted "subsection (2)" for "this section", substituted "during the 45-day period prior to" for "at any time within 45 days next preceding", substituted "are exempt to the extent such earnings are necessary for the support of his family" for "when it appears by the debtor's affidavit or otherwise that such earnings are necessary for the use of his family supported in whole or in part by his labor, are exempt"; inserted (2)(a) requiring judgment debtor to comply with 25-13-411; in (2)(b) after "Earnings" deleted "for personal services"; and substituted (2)(c) as rephrasing of former (3) that read: "Whenever debts are incurred by any such person or his wife or family for gasoline and for the common necessaries of life, then the one-half of such earnings are nevertheless subject to execution, garnishment, and attachment to satisfy debts so incurred."

Saving Clause: Section 4, Ch. 538, L. 1985, was a saving clause.

1983 Amendment: At beginning of (1), inserted exception clause; at end of (1), deleted "but where"; inserted (2) limiting personal services earnings exemption to extent allowed by 15 U.S.C. 1673 as to maintenance or child support; at beginning of (3) inserted "Whenever"; and in (4), inserted exception clause referring to (2).

1981 Amendment: In (2) substituted specific enumeration of family members for "the words "his family", as used in this section, are to be construed with the words "head of family", as used in 70-32-102".

Federal Statutes: Federal restrictions on garnishment are found in 15 U.S.C. 1673. The federal minimum wage is found in 29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1).

Case Notes

Business Expense Account Not Exempt From Execution: The husband maintained an account for business expenses that were not personal income. The District Court exempted that account from execution for a property settlement that survived the husband's bankruptcy. The Supreme Court reversed. The funds that passed through the account were neither tools of the trade nor a percentage of the husband's disposable earnings, and the District Court did not have authority to exempt an account that was not addressed or exempted from execution by statute. Further, the exemption was a retroactive modification of the property settlement that violated 40-4-208 and improperly restricted the wife's ability to levy execution. In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004).

Wage Garnishment for Past Maintenance Payments Allowed — Execution Required Prior to Garnishment: Although this section allows for garnishment from wages for maintenance obligations, execution on either a judgment or an order is required before a salary can be garnished for past due amounts. In re Marriage of Mease, 2004 MT 59, 320 M 229, 92 P3d 1148 (2004), following White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844 (1981).

Judgment Lien Against Husband's Property Not Supportive of Execution Against Interests of Second Wife and Children — Property Subject to Prior Judgments Only: Following dissolution of his marriage, Ken Jones purchased real property in 1986. In May 1987, he executed a homestead declaration on the property pursuant to 70-32-105. In July 1987, he conveyed the property by quitclaim deed, with one-half interest to himself and one-half to his second wife and their two daughters in equal shares. In January 1988, his second wife also filed a declaration of homestead. Also in 1988, Ken declared bankruptcy. As a result of that filing, a dissolution decree property settlement provision that he pay certain sums to his first wife Rita was redesignated as a maintenance obligation. Ken appealed that order, and while the appeal was pending, Ken and his second wife conveyed the real property to Poindexter. Rita executed upon one-half of the sale proceeds, which Poindexter had withheld to satisfy Ken's past-due maintenance and support, but $2,113.53 remained due on the underlying judgment. Rita moved for an order of sale of the property so that she could recover the remaining maintenance plus her attorney fees. The District Court determined that Ken's homestead exemption was abandoned when he sold the property to Poindexter and that because Rita's judgment liens had never been removed or extinguished, the liens attached and encumbered the property at the time the homestead exemption was abandoned and thus the property was conveyed to Poindexter subject to the liens and the execution order. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed because: (1) Rita had already executed on Ken's half of the sale proceeds and further execution would be against the interests of the second wife and daughters and was therefore unsupported; and (2) the maintenance payments became due and judgments were entered after Ken sold the property. Under 70-21-306, a purchaser takes property subject only to prior judgments; therefore, execution was inappropriate on the property for judgments entered after Poindexter's purchase. In re Marriage of Jones v. Poindexter, 253 M 408, 833 P2d 1044, 49 St. Rep. 501 (1992).

Earnings Not Subject to Unpaid Alimony Claim: Prior to 1987, this section did not differentiate between different types of judgments but plainly provided an exemption of earnings against execution regardless of the nature of the underlying claim, and the Supreme Court could not insert an exception for delinquent alimony payment judgments. Earnings were exempt from execution on a judgment for unpaid alimony, and though an alimony claim is not strictly a debt, when reduced to judgment it becomes merged in the judgment and loses its underlying character, and the judgment created a debt the same as any other money judgment. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981).

Proceeding in Federal Court — State Law Applicable: Prior to the 1983 amendment, this section and not 15 U.S.C. § 1673 governed, by virtue of Rule 69(a), Fed.R.Civ.P., whether a judgment creditor could levy execution on the wages of its debtor in an action brought in federal court. U.S. v. Dumont, 416 F. Supp. 632 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Waiver of Exemption Not Effective: General waiver of statutory exemption in secured promissory note was not enforceable as against divorcee working to provide the necessities for herself and her children; a levy of execution could not be had on her wages. Anaconda Fed. Credit Union v. West, 157 M 175, 483 P2d 909 (1971).

Liberal Construction Required: Exemption statutes must be liberally construed in favor of the exemption claimant. Williams v. Sorenson, 106 M 122, 75 P2d 784 (1938).

Mileage and Traveling Expenses as "Earnings": Mileage and traveling expenses allowed a county officer are properly considered "earnings" under this section when it appears they are necessary for the use of his family, the word "earnings" being more comprehensive than "wages" and "salary". They are part of the compensation for services rendered by such officer. Williams v. Sorenson, 106 M 122, 75 P2d 784 (1938).

Necessity of Earnings as Reasonable Necessity: It is not necessary for exemption claimant to show that his earnings are necessary for the support of his family in the purchase of the necessities of life; if they are "necessary for the use" of the family, it is sufficient, the word "necessary" not meaning an absolute or indispensable necessity but reasonable, requisite, and proper. A revolving fund (now a state special revenue fund) used to pay an assessor's mileage and expenses allowed by law or by contract of employment is for the necessary use of his family within the meaning of this section. Williams v. Sorenson, 106 M 122, 75 P2d 784 (1938).

Mine Products: This section, prior to its amendment, was construed to exempt to a placer miner the gold dust taken from his claim by his own labor within the statutory period next preceding a levy of execution or attachment, when he was shown to be a poor man who resided in the state and depended for support upon his personal labor in working his mine, and the debt was not for the common necessaries of life. Dayton v. Ewart, 28 M 153, 72 P 420 (1903).

"Personal Services Rendered" as Including Self-Employment: The words "personal services rendered" do not necessarily contemplate that the services be rendered another; they may, in proper cases, mean the services which one renders to himself. Dayton v. Ewart, 28 M 153, 72 P 420 (1903).

Property of Spouse: Where the wages of a judgment debtor were levied upon and by him claimed as exempt from execution as his personal earnings and necessary for the use of his family residing in this state, supported wholly or in part by his labor, evidence on behalf of the officer making the levy, in an action against him to recover such wages, as to the quantity and value of the property held in the name of plaintiff's wife and used by the family in common during such period is admissible upon the issue as to whether or not the family was in fact supported by the earnings of the plaintiff or from some other source. Cushing v. Quigley, 11 M 577, 29 P 337 (1891), distinguished in Tetrault v. Ingraham, 54 M 524, 171 P 1148 (1918).

Case Notes

Personal Service on Defendant or Defendant's Counsel Not Required for Execution Sales: Mikelson argued that former Rules 5(a) and 81(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), when read together, required that notice of a Sheriff's sale of Mikelson's property be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. However, those rules deal with notice within District Court proceedings and do not relate to notice in execution sales, which are governed by this section. Nothing in this section requires that notice of an execution sale be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Posting on Private Building in Public Area Constituting Adequate Notice: This section mandates that notice of a Sheriff's sale of property be posted in three public places in the county where the property is situated. In the present case, notice was posted next to the main door of a private, vacant structure on the property, which Mikelson contended was in a private rather than public place. However, the notice was posted immediately adjacent to a publicly traveled road and sidewalk where the public had a right to be, which constituted posting in a public place, so the Supreme Court determined that the posting was adequate. Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Actual Notice to Mortgagor Not Required: This section does not require personal notice to the mortgagor in sales on execution of judgment on real property. When stockholders of the defendant corporation were represented by counsel and appeared in person at the proceedings leading up to the judgment against them held before the execution sale, failure to provide the corporation with actual notice of the judicial sale was not a denial of due process. Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bratsky Farms, 238 M 398, 778 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 1366 (1989), distinguishing Peterson v. Mont. Bank of Bozeman, N.A., 212 M 37, 687 P2d 673 (1984).

Restraint of Sale — Additional Notice Required: District Court ordering the restraining of a sale of real property on execution can determine if additional notice is required after the injunction is lifted if the initial notice requirements of this section have been met. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Failure to State Time of Sale in Notice as Irregularity: Where the plaintiff caused an execution to be issued on the defendant's mineral rights and the Sheriff failed to state the exact hour of the execution sale in the published notice but did so in the posted notice, the omission of the hour is an irregularity not affecting the validity of the sale, as the statute does not require that the hour of sale be included. Fox v. Curry, 96 M 212, 29 P2d 663 (1934).

Sale of Mining Machinery in Violation of Section — Penalty: In selling mining machinery under an execution as personal property, upon 5 days' notice only, instead of as real property on notice of 20 days, a Sheriff violates the provisions of this section and subjects himself and his surety to the penalty prescribed in 25-13-702. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Failure to Give Notice as Not Invalidating Sale: Failure to give the notice does not invalidate the sale, the remedy provided in 25-13-702 being exclusive. Burton v. Kipp, 30 M 275, 76 P 563 (1904), followed in Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bratsky Farms, 238 M 398, 778 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 1366 (1989).

Bar of Deficiency Judgment Inapplicable to Improper Sale of Collateral: Despite their concession that the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) did not govern the improper sale of collateral in a judicial foreclosure sale, Haugens sought to apply the U.C.C. remedy barring deficiency judgment to a violation of this section, but could cite no authority for limiting the District Court to a U.C.C. remedy in a non-U.C.C. case. Although a secured party is precluded from obtaining a deficiency judgment for failing to give adequate notice, the total bar of a deficiency judgment is unwarranted absent a showing that the creditor proceeded in bad faith or with unclean hands, as in this case when the creditor proceeded diligently for 5 ½ years and the amount of collateral improperly sold amounted to only 15% of the judgment. It was equitable and within the court's power to fashion a remedy allowing a supplemental pleading to determine the amount of damages sustained by the Haugens through the unlawful sale of collateral and to require the Haugens to prove the damages, rather than apply the U.C.C. remedy to the execution sale. Blaine Bank of Mont. v. Haugen, 260 M 29, 858 P2d 14, 50 St. Rep. 927 (1993).

Requirement of Cash Payment: At a personal property execution sale, the execution officer is bound to accept only cash for the bid. "Purchase money" required to be paid by 25-13-708 does not include checks. Proto v. Missoula County, 230 M 351, 749 P2d 1094, 45 St. Rep. 265 (1988).

Impeachment of Sheriff's Return: A statement in the Sheriff's return that he sold the land in separate parcels, as required by this section, may be overcome only by clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence. Husky Hi Power, Inc. v. Schmidt, 140 M 353, 372 P2d 142 (1962).

Hour of Sale: In the absence of a provision in this section fixing the hour when an execution sale of oil and gas rights in certain described lands was required to be held, the fact that the posted notice designated a certain hour while the published one failed to give the hour, was a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of the sale. Fox v. Curry, 96 M 212, 29 P2d 663 (1934).

Property Not Consisting of Known Lots — Law Inapplicable to Foreclosure: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to foreclose a mortgage and obtained a default judgment, the court correctly refused to remove language from the judgment directing that the property foreclosed be sold together as a unit. This statute requiring sale in separate units in certain instances is not applicable to sales under mortgage foreclosure. Even were it applicable, the fact that the land in question is comprised substantially of 13 ½ 40-acre subdivisions does not indicate it is divided into known lots or parcels. Elston v. Hix, 67 M 294, 215 P 657 (1923).

Section Directory Only — Sale in Gross as Voidable: This section is directory only so that a sale in gross is voidable only and not void or open to collateral attack. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911), distinguished in Holt v. Sather, 81 M 442, 264 P 108 (1928).

Presumption of Officer's Compliance With Statute — Gross Sales: It must be presumed that an officer complied with the statute in the sale of a city lot, though it was composed of two parcels and was sold in gross, since the parcels may not have been known or may have been offered separately and sold in gross only after it was found that there were no bidders for the parcels. Burton v. Kipp, 30 M 275, 76 P 563 (1904).

Sale Not Invalidated by Inadequate Price: Mere inadequacy of the price, not attended by fraud, mistake, or surprise tending to influence the result, does not invalidate a sale under execution. Burton v. Kipp, 30 M 275, 76 P 563 (1904).

Measure of Damages: In an action by the Sheriff, under this section, to recover loss on resale of property made necessary by the purchaser's repudiation of his bid at the prior execution sale, the measure of his recovery is not the value of the property but the amount of his previous bid. Sherlock v. Vinson, 90 M 235, 1 P2d 71 (1931).

Notice of Resale After Refusal to Pay: Where the Sheriff regularly readvertised real property for sale after the highest bidder at the first sale had repudiated his bid, thus giving notice to all the world including such bidder, the latter was not entitled to special notice of resale to hold him liable for loss sustained by his default under this section. Sherlock v. Vinson, 90 M 235, 1 P2d 71 (1931).

Tender of Certificate of Sale Not Required: Defendant, a defaulting purchaser of realty at execution sale, in an action by the Sheriff brought under this section to recover the difference in the amount of defendant's bid and the amount which the officer received on resale, was not in a position to rely on the Sheriff's failure to tender him a certificate of sale where he had stated that he would not have paid the amount of his bid even if a certificate had been tendered, thus showing that tender would have been an idle ceremony not required by law. Sherlock v. Vinson, 90 M 235, 1 P2d 71 (1931).

No Error in Ordering Foreclosure of Personal Real Property for Failure to Repay Business Loans — Deficiency Judgment Proper: Defendants, husband and wife, failed to make scheduled payments on two bank loans, and the bank filed for foreclosure of two deeds of trust. Defendants were in the process of obtaining a divorce. The husband failed to respond to the complaint, and a default judgment was entered against him. The District Court then granted summary judgment against the wife, ordered foreclosure and sale of the collateral real property, and entered a deficiency judgment holding the wife responsible for any deficiency following sale of the real property. The wife appealed on grounds that the District Court erroneously granted summary judgment by: (1) determining that any oral representations made by bank agents were merged into written documents; (2) holding that the bank was entitled to a deficiency judgment; and (3) finding that the bank had no fiduciary duty to the wife. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and affirmed. First, the written loan agreements expressed the entire agreement between the parties, and any alleged oral understandings that were not reduced to writing were invalid. Second, although a deficiency judgment may not issue if the secured property is a single-family residence, in this case, the security agreements provided that the collateral property be used for business purposes, so even though the property was defendants' primary residence, the trust indenture was not strictly residential, and the District Court did not err in ordering a deficiency judgment. Third, as stated in Coles Dept. Store v. First Bank, 240 M 226, 783 P2d 932 (1989), to establish a fiduciary relationship, in addition to a long history of bank dealings, a bank must act in some capacity other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor-creditor relationship. Here, no prior banking relationship existed between the parties, and given the wife's extensive legal and marketing background, she would not have needed to rely on the bank to interpret the loan documents for her or to act as her adviser, so no fiduciary relationship or duty existed. First Sec. Bank v. Abel, 2008 MT 161, 343 M 313, 184 P3d 318 (2008), following First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203 (1987), and Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Failure to Record Aircraft Conveyance With Federal Agency — Unrecorded Ownership Interest Invalid to Cut Off Right to Levy on Aircraft: Ford signed a promissory note for $28,503.62, plus interest, for products purchased from Lewistown Propane Co. (Lewistown). Lewistown sought to collect on the promissory note, and Ford subsequently filed a confession of judgment with the District Court for the full amount. At this time, Becky was allegedly helping Ford to refinance Ford's debt, and Ford sold three pieces of farm machinery and an airplane to Becky. Section 503(c) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 requires that every aircraft transfer be evidenced by a recorded instrument before the rights of innocent third parties can be affected; however, neither Ford nor Becky recorded the transfer. When Lewistown attempted to collect on its judgment, it inquired with the state Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration about the ownership of the aircraft and determined that the aircraft was still registered in Ford's name and had no liens or encumbrances attached, and that Ford had paid the annual federal registration fees. Lewistown then seized the aircraft and advised Ford that it intended to sell the aircraft to satisfy the judgment against Ford. Upon learning of the seizure of the aircraft, Becky intervened and sought a stay of execution of judgment, which the District Court granted. Lewistown appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Lewistown, as judgment creditor, was entitled to rely on the federal records, but because Becky's ownership interest was unrecorded at the time of Lewistown's execution of the levy, Becky's interest was invalid as to Lewistown and could not be used to cut off Lewistown's right to levy on the aircraft. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Ford, 2002 MT 27, 308 M 243, 42 P3d 229 (2002), applying Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633 (1986).

Foreclosure of Rights in CRP Payments During Redemption: When the District Court foreclosed all of the Jordans' right, title, and interest in and to "various grazing rights, government crop allotments, government subsidies or payments-in-kind compensation pertaining to the property", the foreclosure included the first security interest in federal CRP payments. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992).

When Judgment Lien Attaches: A judgment lien can only attach to the actual interest of the judgment debtor. It cannot attach to an interest that does not exist, nor can it claim superiority as against a valid prior interest. A judgment lien can only bind an interest in real property when the debtor himself, during the existence of the judgment lien, could voluntarily transfer or alienate the interest. Hannah v. Martinson, 232 M 469, 758 P2d 276, 45 St. Rep. 1203 (1988), followed in Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864, 57 St. Rep. 1288 (2000).

No Deficiency Judgment Upon Foreclosure of Trust Deed: A lender, electing to foreclose on its security under a trust deed by judicial procedure, is not entitled to remedies inconsistent with the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana. Specifically, the lender may not recover a deficiency judgment against the borrower, and the borrower has no right of redemption as is accorded in a judicial foreclosure of a conventional mortgage. First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203, 44 St. Rep. 451 (1987).

Foreclosure Payment Not as Constituting Acceptance of Third Mortgage: Defendants, with legal title to property by purchase at foreclosure sale but strangers to contract creating third mortgage debt, had not assumed it by their tender of the amount due and did not discharge the lien of plaintiff's third mortgage but thereby stopped the running of interest and subjected plaintiff, refusing to accept, to costs of suit. Parcells v. Nelson, 103 M 412, 63 P2d 131 (1936).

Holder of Mortgage Lien Protected — Equity of Redemption: The purpose of preserving to a holder of a mortgage lien an equity of redemption is to protect him from loss, and if he receives all that he is entitled to, his lien is extinguished and with it his equity of redemption. Parcells v. Nelson, 103 M 412, 63 P2d 131 (1936).

Suit to Compel Satisfaction of Third Mortgage After Foreclosure Purchase: Defendants, with legal title to property by purchase at foreclosure sale under first and second mortgages, who made tender and deposited the money in court, could, if they desired, sue the holder of the third mortgage to compel an acceptance and the satisfaction of the mortgage; and this they are required to do to clear their title to the premises. Parcells v. Nelson, 103 M 412, 63 P2d 131 (1936).

Rights of Debtor and Purchaser in Property Sold:

On sale of real property under execution or decree of foreclosure, the purchaser is substituted for and acquires all the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor in the property sold, leaving in the latter only the bare statutory right to redeem, which right is a personal privilege and not a property right and is not subject to levy and sale under execution. Hillsdale College v. Thompson, 99 M 400, 44 P2d 753 (1935).

A sale of real property pursuant to decree of foreclosure divests the mortgagor of his title and vests it in the purchaser, the only right left the mortgagor being that of redemption. Hillsdale College v. Thompson, 99 M 400, 44 P2d 753 (1935); Williard v. Campbell, 91 M 493, 11 P2d 782 (1932).

Under this section, the purchaser at a foreclosure sale is substituted to and acquires all the interest of the judgment debtor in the property sold, leaving in the judgment debtor only the bare right to redeem. Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

After foreclosure sale and before redemption, the judgment debtor has neither legal nor equitable title to the property sold. State ex rel. Hopkins v. Stephens, 63 M 318, 206 P 1094 (1922).

An execution sale transfers the legal title to the purchaser, leaving in the judgment debtor simply the right to redeem. McQueeney v. Toomey, 36 M 282, 92 P 561 (1907).

Defective Title in Debtor — No Greater Right Transferred to Purchaser: The rule of caveat emptor applies to sales under execution, and the purchaser acquires no title where the judgment debtor was holding the legal title as trustee for another. Stauffacher v. Great Falls Pub. Serv. Co., 99 M 324, 43 P2d 647 (1935); Vaughn v. Schmalsle, 10 M 186, 25 P 102 (1890); McAdow v. Black, 6 M 601, 13 P 377 (1887); Story v. Black, 5 M 26, 1 P 1 (1883); Chumasero v. Vial, 3 M 376 (1879).

Purchaser as Actual Owner — Protection of Rights Against Assignee: The purchaser on execution sale becomes the actual owner of the property, subject only to the right of redemption, and as such is entitled to protect his interest and contest the right of the assignee of a subsequent judgment to redeem. Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931); Brown v. Timmons, 79 M 246, 256 P 176 (1927); Libby Lumber Co. v. Pac. States Fire Ins. Co., 79 M 166, 255 P 340 (1927); Reynolds v. Davis, 78 M 56, 252 P 386 (1926); Leonard v. Western, 74 M 513, 241 P 523 (1925).

Certificate of Sale as "Conveyance" — Certificate to Be Recorded: The certificate of sale issued to purchaser under a foreclosure sale by the Sheriff is a "conveyance" within the meaning of the laws requiring recording. Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Application to Foreclosure Sales: This section, though apparently pertaining exclusively to sales under levies by execution upon judgments, includes sales made under foreclosure decrees.

Banking Corp. of Mont. v. Hein, 52 M 238, 156 P 1085 (1916); Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Right of Redemption as Applicable to Power of Sale Under Mortgage: The provisions of the code governing the right of redemption apply not only to redemption from sales on execution but also to those had under a power of sale contained in a mortgage or deed of trust. Banking Corp. of Mont. v. Hein, 52 M 238, 156 P 1085 (1916).

Trust for Debtor Created: Although this section provides that on execution sale the purchaser is substituted to and acquires the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor, yet, if the purchaser is a close friend and business associate of the debtor and agrees to buy four properties without severance at sale for a grossly inadequate consideration and to hold whatever little he gets only as a mortgage and after sale before expiration of the redemption period again agrees so to hold the property and the debtor within 2 years offers to redeem, the purchaser acquires no title of the debtor, who may redeem at any time, the transaction being a trust, and once a mortgage, remaining always a mortgage. Leggat v. McLure, 234 F 620 (1916).

Directed Verdict Proper Despite Claim That Sale Not Commercially Reasonable: Defendants contended that no deficiency judgment should have been granted because the sale of their truck was done in a manner that was not commercially reasonable for the following reasons: (1) the repossession affidavit signed by the bank officer was false; and (2) plaintiff improperly refused to credit defendants with credit life and credit disability insurance refunds received during foreclosure and canceled defendants' insurance. However, defendants demonstrated no way in which the affidavit changed the amount received from the sale or credited to defendants, and evidence showed that defendants' maintenance account on the truck was credited with the insurance refund. Further, defendants stipulated at trial that notice of the sale was received and that a commercially reasonable price had been obtained for the truck and thus could not raise issues as to the time, place, or advertising of the sale on appeal. Application to Personal Property Sale — Revival of Judgment: Though a purchaser of real property at a judicial sale, title to which fails, has a double remedy under this section, in that he may bring an action in the nature of one for money had and received or have the original judgment revived for his own use and benefit and proceed against the judgment debtor, a buyer of personalty is confined to the latter remedy. Tetrault v. Ingraham, 54 M 524, 171 P 1148 (1918).

Application to Foreclosure Sales: This section applies to sales under foreclosure. McCarthy v. St. Bank of Townsend, 54 M 319, 170 P 15 (1918).

Void Foreclosure Sale — Failure of Service: A purchaser of lands at a foreclosure sale under a decree which, unknown to him but known to the judgment creditor, was void because of nonservice of summons on some of the defendants, may, under this section, as well as in the absence of statute, by independent action recover reimbursement from the judgment creditor, subrogation not offering any remedy. McCarthy v. St. Bank of Townsend, 54 M 319, 170 P 15 (1918).

Eviction by Judgment Creditor: When the purchaser of real estate sold on execution is evicted therefrom under the provisions of this section in proceedings instituted by the judgment creditor, by which the judgment and execution under which he purchased were declared void, he may recover the purchase money from the judgment creditor. Case Notes

Fraudulently Transferred Property Awarded to Debtor — Right of Redemption Available — Appeal Not Moot: A District Court awarded to the plaintiff property that the court ruled had been fraudulently transferred. The defendant did not file for a stay, and the property was transferred to the plaintiff subject to a right of redemption. The defendant filed an appeal, and the plaintiff argued that the appeal was moot because he had already taken possession of the property and there was no remedy available to the previous title holder. The Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that a court could award the defendant restitution in an amount to allow her to redeem the property. Larson Lumber Co., Inc. v. Bilt Rite Constr. & Landscaping, LLC, 2014 MT 61, 374 Mont. 167, 320 P.3d 471.

Substantial Compliance With Redemption Statutes Sufficient: Savoy purchased two tracts of land at a foreclosure sale. Six days before the expiration of the redemption period, Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) notified the Cascade County Sheriff's office that it was redeeming the property purchased by Savoy at the foreclosure sale. Savoy argued that FmHA had failed to properly follow statutory requirements in that it filed the notice with the Sheriff rather than the County Clerk and had not filed an affidavit of the amount owing and that the notice was inadequate to prove that FmHA had a redeemable interest in the property. The Supreme Court held that substantial compliance with the statutes is sufficient, as in the present case in which Savoy had not been prejudiced by FmHA's failure to strictly comply with statutory requirements. Savoy v. Cascade County Sheriff's Dept., 268 M 507, 887 P2d 160, 51 St. Rep. 1300 (1994).

Foreclosure Sale Order Not Violative of Conveyance Restriction or Redemption Right: Defendant contended the wording of an order of sale in a foreclosure proceeding, stating that defendants "have no lien, right, title, estate, claim, or interest on or to the mortgaged property, whether real, personal, or mixed hereinafter described", incorrectly severed his interest in the land prior to foreclosure sale and severely hindered his attempts to sell the land and satisfy the promissory note. However, the language did not violate 71-1-202 because it did not enable the mortgage owner to recover possession without a foreclosure and sale. Further, the statement did not affect the defendant's 1-year statutory right of redemption. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Cancellation of Joint Tenant's Interest — No Right to Redeem: A joint tenant whose right, title, and interest in real property was canceled prior to a foreclosure sale no longer had the right to redeem under this section. Jesmain v. Mills, 224 M 154, 728 P2d 800, 43 St. Rep. 2093 (1986).

Right of Redemption as Statutory — Imposition of Conditions of Redemption: The right of redemption is a purely statutory one exercisable only within the time and under the conditions specified by the statutes; it is not property in any sense but a bare personal privilege; a person from whom statutory redemption is sought cannot impose any conditions upon the redemptioner not imposed by statute. Lester v. J. & S. Inv. Co., 171 M 149, 557 P2d 299 (1976).

"Successor in Interest" Defined: The use of the expression "successors in interest" means nothing more than that one who has succeeded to the title to the property or has been substituted to the rights of the debtor or redemptioner has the same right. Williard v. Campbell, 91 M 493, 11 P2d 782 (1932); Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Recording of Certificate of Sale — Right of Creditor to Redeem: A Sheriff's certificate of sale on foreclosure issued to the purchaser is a conveyance within the meaning of the laws requiring recording. By virtue of the sale the legal and equitable title of the mortgagor passes to the purchaser and there remains in the former the mere personal privilege of redeeming within the statutory period, such right to redeem being also accorded, under this section, to a redemptioner, i.e., a creditor having a lien by judgment, mortgage, or attachment subsequent to that on which the property was sold. Dipple v. Neville, 82 M 280, 267 P 214 (1928).

Transfer of Right to Redeem: The right of redemption is not one of property but a mere personal privilege, which cannot be levied upon or sold on execution at the instance of a judgment debtor but may be transferred to another by the debtor, the transferee being a "successor in interest" within the meaning of this section and as such entitled to redeem. Brown v. Timmons, 79 M 246, 256 P 176 (1927).

Attachment Before Redemption Period Expired — Rights Acquired: Where real property had been sold on mortgage foreclosure and a creditor of the judgment debtor levied a Writ of Attachment on it before the period of redemption had expired, he acquired no lien by virtue of it and therefore did not become a redemptioner within the meaning of subsection (2) of this section, so as to entitle him to a Sheriff's deed. State ex rel. Hopkins v. Stephens, 63 M 318, 206 P 1094 (1922).

"Debtor" Defined: The term "debtor", as used in subsection (1)(a) of this section, refers exclusively to the debtor whose land was subjected to forced sale. Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 559, 154 P 714 (1916).

Wife of Debtor Not Redemptioner: The wife of a mortgagor of real property is not, by virtue of her relationship to him, a "redemptioner" as that term is defined by this section. Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 559, 154 P 714 (1916). See State ex rel. Harnden v. Crawford, 58 M 72, 189 P 1119 (1920).

Case Notes

Person Not in Residence on Mortgaged Property Not Entitled to Possession During Statutory Redemption Period: Halseth defaulted on several promissory notes, so Independence Bank filed a foreclosure action on Halseth's property in Blaine County. At trial, Halseth contended that because he was currently residing on the property, he was entitled to possession of the property during the 1-year redemption period following the foreclosure sale. Although Halseth maintained a residence in Harlem, he testified that he had moved a camper trailer to the Blaine County property for the sole purpose of establishing his right to retain the property during the redemption period. The District Court applied the definition of residence in 1-1-215, and determined that Halseth resided in Harlem, not on the Blaine County property, and that he was therefore not entitled to retain possession during the redemption period. Halseth appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's findings. Even though he moved the camper trailer to Blaine County, Halseth retained ties to the Harlem residence and did not intend to relinquish it. Absent a demonstration of the union of act and intent necessary to change permanent residence from Harlem to Blaine County, Halseth could not be said to reside at the Blaine County property and was not entitled to retain possession of the property during the redemption period. Independence Bank v. Halseth, 2002 MT 100, 309 M 398, 46 P3d 657 (2002).

Reimbursement by Title Insurance Company on Property Redeemed — Buyer Not Entitled to Purchase Price From Seller — Subrogation: A buyer received payment equivalent to the purchase price from a title insurance company pursuant to a policy held by the seller. He later sought to recover the purchase price from the seller after the title was redeemed by the original owners. The lower court applied the principle of subrogation in determining that the claim of the buyer was subrogated to the title insurance company, and that since the buyer had been compensated, it would not be just to permit him to pursue the seller for the purchase price. McDonald v. Grassle, 228 M 25, 740 P2d 1122, 44 St. Rep. 1312 (1987).

No Deficiency Judgment Upon Foreclosure of Trust Deed: A lender, electing to foreclose on its security under a trust deed by judicial procedure, is not entitled to remedies inconsistent with the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana. Specifically, the lender may not recover a deficiency judgment against the borrower, and the borrower has no right of redemption as is accorded in a judicial foreclosure of a conventional mortgage. First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203, 44 St. Rep. 451 (1987).

Accounting of Rents and Profits Not Available: Where a redemptioner, proceeding under this section, deposited with the Sheriff the amount paid by the purchaser at execution sale with interest and at the same time demanded an accounting of the rents and profits received by the latter, which could only be done under 25-13-822, the attempt to redeem under this section was nullified and therefore the redemption not completed by the deposit. Leonard v. Western, 74 M 513, 241 P 523 (1925). See also Reynolds v. Davis, 78 M 56, 252 P 386 (1926).

No Payment of Junior Liens by Judgment Debtor: While a "redemptioner" must, when redeeming property sold under forced sale, pay to the purchaser the amount of his purchase and any prior lien he may hold on the property, the judgment debtor may redeem by paying simply the amount of the purchase price, with interest, etc. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

No Retroactive Application of Amendment: The 1895 amendment of this section extending the period of redemption from 6 months to 1 year could not constitutionally be applied to a mortgage executed before the effective date of the mortgage. State ex rel. Cruse Sav. Bank v. Gilliam, 18 M 109, 45 P 661 (1896), reversing 18 M 94, 44 P 394 (1896).

Case Notes

Effect of Sale to Judgment Debtor or Creditor — Redemptioner: A redemption from foreclosure of mortgaged real property by the judgment debtor (mortgagor) or his successor in interest terminates the effect of the sale, restores one or the other to his estate, and restores junior liens, wiped out by the sale; but a redemption by a redemptioner (a creditor) transfers to him the rights of the purchaser under the sale, and at the expiration of all periods of redemption, he is entitled to a Sheriff's deed on the original certificate of sale. Dipple v. Neville, 82 M 280, 267 P 214 (1928).

Time for Redemption by Judgment Debtor: The right of redemption may be invoked only by compliance with the statutory provisions; under them the judgment debtor may redeem from foreclosure at any time within 1 year from the date of sale, and this period of limitation cannot be shortened by any action of a redemptioner. On the other hand, on the expiration of the 1-year period, his right of redemption ceases and he is in no position thereafter to question the title of a redemptioner who acted within the time given him by the statute. Dipple v. Neville, 82 M 280, 267 P 214 (1928).

Redemption by Judgment Debtor From Redemptioner: In providing that a judgment debtor, in redeeming, must make the same payments as are required to effect a redemption by a redemptioner, the Legislature intended to declare merely that if a judgment debtor redeems from a redemptioner, he must make the payments which have been made by the redemptioner. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Time for Execution of Sheriff's Deed: The Sheriff is authorized to execute his deed to real estate, sold under execution, only at the expiration of a year from the day of the sale. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Deficiency Attaching to Property Redeemed by Judgment Debtor: If the debtor redeems, the effect of this section is to terminate the sale and restore the estate to him, whereupon any deficiency would attach as a lien. McQueeney v. Toomey, 36 M 282, 92 P 561 (1907), followed in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

Substantial Compliance With Redemption Statutes Sufficient: Savoy purchased two tracts of land at a foreclosure sale. Six days before the expiration of the redemption period, Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) notified the Cascade County Sheriff's office that it was redeeming the property purchased by Savoy at the foreclosure sale. Savoy argued that FmHA had failed to properly follow statutory requirements in that it filed the notice with the Sheriff rather than the County Clerk and had not filed an affidavit of the amount owing and that the notice was inadequate to prove that FmHA had a redeemable interest in the property. The Supreme Court held that substantial compliance with the statutes is sufficient, as in the present case in which Savoy had not been prejudiced by FmHA's failure to strictly comply with statutory requirements. Savoy v. Cascade County Sheriff's Dept., 268 M 507, 887 P2d 160, 51 St. Rep. 1300 (1994).

Sufficiency of Information in Notice of Redemption: Defendant argued that a notice of redemption was deficient in that it did not set forth exactly what was owed on the judgment, what the purchase price was, what interest had been paid, what taxes had been paid, or what the purchaser's lien debt was. Instead, the notice provided a description of the real property, the date of the judgment and decree of foreclosure, the amount of the judgment, the total amount paid in redemption, and the required signature of redemptioner. This section does not require that the notice include any of the information defendant listed; rather, the information provided was sufficient for the purpose of giving notice. Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bratsky Farms, 238 M 398, 778 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 1366 (1989).

Misrepresentation by Sheriff: For the purposes of redemption, this section makes the Sheriff the agent of the purchaser at the sale. It is his duty to know when the time for redemption expires. A false representation made by him upon the subject is in legal effect a misrepresentation made by the purchaser or creditor, and though it be innocently made, the latter cannot profit by it. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

Effect of Sale to Judgment Debtor: A redemption from foreclosure of mortgaged real property by the judgment debtor (mortgagor) or his successor in interest terminates the effect of the sale, restores one or the other to his estate, and restores junior liens, wiped out by the sale; but a redemption by a redemptioner (a creditor) transfers to him the rights of the purchaser under the sale, and at the expiration of all periods of redemption, he is entitled to a Sheriff's deed on the original certificate of sale. No Time Requirement Related to Notice: Defendant contended that a Sheriff's deed cannot be issued until 60 days after notice of redemption has been given. Here, because redemption occurred in February, the notice was dated June 17, and the deed was dated July 7, defendant claimed the deed was void and invalid as a basis for the writ of assistance. However, this section allows a Sheriff's deed to be issued when: (1) 60 days have elapsed after redemption; (2) no other redemption has been made; (3) notice of redemption has been given; and (4) the time for redemption has expired. This section establishes no time requirement related to the notice; therefore, the deed was valid as a basis for the writ. Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bratsky Farms, 238 M 398, 778 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 1366 (1989).

Time for Conveyance to Purchaser: A purchaser at foreclosure sale went into possession after the expiration of the year within which the mortgagor was entitled to redeem. Nearly 4 years afterward the then Sheriff, as successor of the Sheriff making the sale, at the request of the purchaser executed to him a deed. The mortgagor made no offer to redeem. Occupation of Foreclosed Land as Home — Payment of Rents and Profits Not Required: Defendants occupied the land that was foreclosed on as their home. To require that they pay rent or profits from the land diminished their unqualified right to possession under 71-1-229 and this section in a way that was not provided for by the Legislature. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991), distinguishing Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Foreclosure Sale Order Not Violative of Conveyance Restriction or Redemption Right: Defendant contended the wording of an order of sale in a foreclosure proceeding, stating that defendants "have no lien, right, title, estate, claim, or interest on or to the mortgaged property, whether real, personal, or mixed hereinafter described", incorrectly severed his interest in the land prior to foreclosure sale and severely hindered his attempts to sell the land and satisfy the promissory note. However, the language did not violate 71-1-202 because it did not enable the mortgage owner to recover possession without a foreclosure and sale. Further, the statement did not affect the defendant's 1-year statutory right of redemption. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Vendees of Mortgagee Not "Execution Debtors": Purchasers who took premises subject to preexisting mortgage and who had not assumed payment of mortgage, even though occupying premises as their home at time of foreclosure, were not "execution debtors" within meaning of statute and were not entitled to possession of premises during 1-year period of redemption. First Nat'l Bank of Circle v. Hastetter, 149 M 142, 423 P2d 306 (1967).

Right to Possession Inapplicable to Business Establishment: The right of possession during the period of redemption, granted to a mortgagor by this section, does not apply unless the debtor occupies the premises as a home for himself and family and does not apply to a business establishment. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935).

Right to Possession — Change of Possession: The right granted by this section to remain in possession during the period of redemption is exempt from forced sale. The right, however, is lost if there is a change of possession. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Waiver of Right to Possession Previously Allowed:

Prior to the 1933 amendment, the contention that the stipulation for waiver of any claim of homestead or right of possession of the mortgaged premises during the period of redemption is invalid on the ground that the right conferred by this section was in the nature of a homestead and that, therefore, the stipulation was void as contrary to the public policy of the exemption laws, could not be sustained. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Prior to the 1933 amendment, under authority of 71-1-105, the parties to a real estate mortgage could incorporate therein a stipulation for immediate possession by the mortgagee in case of default by the mortgagor to make payment of interest, taxes, etc., promptly, notwithstanding this section. Kelly v. Roberts, 93 M 106, 17 P2d 65 (1932).

Prior to the 1933 amendment, where a mortgagor agreed to the incorporation of a clause in the mortgage to relinquish his right to remain in possession of the property on foreclosure sale, public policy did not prevent the enforcement of the agreement if it sufficiently identified the right sought to be relinquished. Kelly v. Roberts, 93 M 106, 17 P2d 65 (1932).

Premises Not Occupied as Home — Purchaser Entitled to Possession: The purchaser at a sale of realty under foreclosure is, as against the judgment debtor, entitled to possession during the period of redemption if the premises are not occupied by the debtor as a home for himself and his family. Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931); Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927); State ex rel. Flowerree v. District Court, 71 M 89, 227 P 579 (1924); Dyer v. Foreclosure of Rights in CRP Payments During Redemption: When the District Court foreclosed all of the Jordans' right, title, and interest in and to "various grazing rights, government crop allotments, government subsidies or payments-in-kind compensation pertaining to the property", the foreclosure included the first security interest in federal CRP payments. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992).

Occupation of Foreclosed Land as Home — Payment of Rents and Profits Not Required: Defendants occupied the land that was foreclosed on as their home. To require that they pay rent or profits from the land diminished their unqualified right to possession under 25-13-821 and 71-1-229 in a way that was not provided for by the Legislature. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991), distinguishing Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Management Fee Disallowed: Purchaser may not offset rents and profits with a so-called management fee. In taking possession of the property, the buyer is taking a calculated chance and the buyer may have gained the property at a bargain price. Management is part of the price of his investment, a chance that he takes. Lester v. J. & S. Inv. Co., 171 M 149, 557 P2d 299 (1976).

Time for Demand for Accounting: While the holder of an inferior mortgage lien may, under this section, after foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage, demand an accounting of rents and profits from the purchaser, he must do so within 1 year; after expiration of such period, his demand is ineffectual even though the provisions of the section be invoked on resort to equitable redemption. Parcells v. Nelson, 103 M 412, 63 P2d 131 (1936).

Measure of Rents and Profits — Who Entitled: The purchaser of real property at foreclosure sale, from the time of the sale until redemption, and a redemptioner, from the time of his redemption until another redemption, are entitled to receive the rents from the property sold from the tenant in possession or the value of the use and occupation thereof. Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931).

Recognition of Landlord-Tenant Relationship — Rights to Rent: Where the purchaser of mortgaged lands upon taking possession found thereon a tenant engaged in growing a crop who thereafter recognized the purchaser as his landlord and agreed to pay him as rent one-third of the crop, the former under this section, was entitled to receive from the latter the rent or the value of the use and occupation of the land. Swanberg v. Schaefer, 88 M 16, 289 P 561 (1930).

Vendor Reserving Rents and Profits — Loss of Right Upon Foreclosure: Where the vendee of mortgaged farm lands, then in possession of a tenant, held under a deed in which the vendor reserved to himself the right to receive the rents therefrom, the vendor lost such right on foreclosure sale, the purchaser at such sale then having become entitled to the rents until redemption. Dolin v. Wachter, 87 M 466, 288 P 616 (1930).

Contract for Crop Rents Creating "Tenant in Possession": A contract between the owner of land and one who desires to farm it, under which the latter agrees to pay as rental a portion of the crops raised thereon, is a lease and not a cropping agreement. The tenant becomes the owner of the crops as personal property, subject to his obligation to deliver the portion agreed upon to his landlord and is a "tenant in possession" within the meaning of this section. Blodgett Loan Co. v. Hansen, 86 M 406, 284 P 140 (1930), distinguished in Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931).

Successive Foreclosure Sales — Apportionment of Rent: Under this section, rents payable in crops under a lease executed by the purchaser of mortgaged lands on foreclosure of a second mortgage and a tenant and in force at the time the holder of the first mortgage foreclosed and became its purchaser were properly apportionable between the two purchasers on the basis of the time the property was held by them, respectively, and the contention that the section has application only to cases where a redemption has been had cannot be sustained. Blodgett Loan Co. v. Hansen, 86 M 406, 284 P 140 (1930), distinguished in Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931).

Accounting Furnished After Expiration of Redemption Period — Time for Redemption: A redemptioner of real property from execution sale who, just prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, demanded from the purchaser a verified statement of the rents and profits, which was furnished after the expiration of such period, to then effect a redemption under that section was required to tender the amount due within 5 days after receiving the statement, to effect a redemption; and failure of plaintiff to allege that he had made such tender rendered the pleading insufficient in an action to enjoin issuance of the deed to the purchaser. Reynolds v. Davis, 78 M 56, 252 P 386 (1926).

Protest of Amount of Rents and Profits: A redemptioner who considers the statement furnished him by the purchaser at execution sale of real property of the rents and profits thereof incorrect, must, to effect the redemption under this section, nevertheless tender the amount apparently due but may do so under protest, thus advising the Sheriff that the excess is not intended as a gift and making him a bailee of the redemptioner for the portion of the tender considered excessive. Reynolds v. Davis, 78 M 56, 252 P 386 (1926).

Redemptioner to Assume All Burdens of Statute: Since the right to redeem is purely statutory, a redemptioner availing himself of the provisions of this section, under which the amount he has to pay to the purchaser may be much less than he would have to pay if proceeding under 25-13-802 and under which the time within which redemption may be made is extended, must assume its burdens in order to enjoy its benefits. Leonard v. Western, 74 M 513, 241 P 523 (1925).

Time for Tender of Redemption if Accounting Made: A redemptioner, proceeding under 25-13-802, must within 1 year from date of execution sale tender or pay the amount paid by the purchaser with interest up to the time of redemption. Where, however, he proceeds under this section and asks for an accounting of the rents and profits received by the purchaser, a tender is not necessary until an account has been made, either voluntarily, in which event the period of redemption is extended 5 days after it is made, or compulsorily by means of a suit in equity, in which case the period is extended 15 days after final determination of the suit; but the redemption is not completed until the accounting is had and the amount due determined and paid or tendered within time. Leonard v. Western, 74 M 513, 241 P 523 (1925).

Action for Accounting — Designation of Defendant: Where a loan company had transferred its interest in real property bought by it at foreclosure sale to another with the understanding that the legal title and right of possession should remain in it until full payment had been made, the proper party defendant in an action for an accounting of rents and profits therefrom was the company and not the vendee. Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Redemptioner Entitled to Rents and Profits Actually Received: In the absence of any showing of willful default or negligence on the part of the purchaser of realty at foreclosure sale, the redemptioner is entitled, under this section, to demand an accounting by notice or suit in equity, only to the rents and profits actually received by the former. Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan &

Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922), distinguished in Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991).

"Tenant" Defined: In an action for an accounting by a redemptioner against the purchaser at a foreclosure sale for rents and profits received by the latter, the word "tenant" used in this section is not to be construed in its strict or technical sense but as indicating one who holds possession of the land by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, at will, or at sufferance. Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Court Outside of County of Defendant's Residence — Defendant Not Required: A debtor may not be required to attend court outside the county of his residence in a proceeding initiated under this section. Belote v. Bakken, 139 M 43, 359 P2d 372 (1961).

Reference to Referee — Discretion of Trial Court: Where referee is appointed to conduct proceedings supplementary to execution in response to an application for an order requiring judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property, notice to the judgment debtor need not be given before ordering his examination or the examination of third persons in absence of statutory requirement; the time and place for appearance of the debtor are properly left to be fixed by the referee within bounds of the statute. The existence of exceptional conditions requiring reference was for trial court to determine in exercise of sound discretion; and where numerous persons were to be examined at various places, a reference was proper. Bair v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 112 F2d 247 (9th Cir. 1940).

Manner of Application of Statute: This section is applicable to cases wherein the judgment creditor has no knowledge of the existence of any property subject to levy under execution, and in such a case any order for examination of the judgment debtor may be obtained only after execution is returned. Section 25-14-102 applies where the judgment creditor has knowledge of property belonging to the debtor, but he has been unable to locate or have it levied upon under execution, and the order may be obtained after issuance of execution and before its return. Brindjonc v. Brindjonc, 96 M 481, 31 P2d 725 (1934).

Order Requiring Defendant to Appear — Time for Use: A creditor's bill to enforce a judgment lien against property claimed by defendants under a judicial sale need not be preceded by proceedings supplementary to execution, as such summary process is applicable to the discovery of property subject to execution, concealed or withheld by the debtor or others in collusion with him without pretense of substantial right, and not to cases where the attitude of the parties to the property in controversy is fully understood. Ryan v. Maxey, 14 M 81, 35 P 515 (1894). See also Wilson v. Harris, 21 M 374, 54 P 46 (1898), distinguished in Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908).

Compelling Delivery of Property: If there be property which cannot be reached directly by execution and which the judgment debtor refuses to apply, he may be compelled, in proceedings supplementary to execution, to deliver it up in satisfaction of the judgment. Sperling v. Calfee, 7 M 514, 19 P 204 (1888). See also Bank of Minn. v. Hayes, 11 M 533, 29 P 90 (1891).

Case Notes

Description of Property Found Insufficient: A creditor's affidavit on information and belief that the debtor had property that could be applied to the judgment but not specifying any such property was insufficient to initiate a proceeding under this section; such affidavit, if sufficient at all, initiates a proceeding under 25-14-101. Belote v. Bakken, 139 M 43, 359 P2d 372 (1961).

Description of Property Found Sufficient: In proceedings supplemental to execution brought under this section, affidavit of judgment creditor that execution had been issued and still remained in the Sheriff's hands, that the debtor had refused to pay the judgment, that he had money as a result of settlement of a personal injury claim, which could be applied to the settlement of the judgment, was sufficiently definite and certain as to what money was referred to therein. Brindjonc v. Brindjonc, 96 M 481, 31 P2d 725 (1934).

Manner of Application of Statute: Section 25-14-101, providing for proceedings supplemental to execution, is applicable to cases wherein the judgment creditor has no knowledge of the existence of any property subject to levy under execution, and in such a case an order for examination of the judgment debtor may be obtained only after execution is returned. This section applies where the judgment creditor has knowledge of property belonging to the debtor, but he has been unable to locate or have it levied upon under execution, and the order may be obtained after issuance of execution and before its return. Brindjonc v. Brindjonc, 96 M 481, 31 P2d 725 (1934).

Judgment After Order for Examination — Irregular Proceedings: Where no judgment had been entered or valid execution issued at the time of an order for the examination of a defendant on proceedings supplementary to execution, the proceedings are irregular and cannot be cured by the subsequent entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc. Barber v. Briscoe, 9 M 341, 23 P 726 (1890).

Alternative Remedies: In a suit by a judgment creditor against the judgment debtor and others who claimed an interest in the property involved, the plaintiff alleged that such interest was unknown to him, and therefore prayed, not that the title be quieted, but that the extent of his interest and the amount of his judgment lien be adjudged, and the complaint was sufficient against general demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.). While he could have had recourse to 70-28-101 relative to quieting title or to this section relating to supplementary proceedings, neither proceeding is necessarily exclusive. Christie v. Morris, 116 M 210, 149 P2d 250 (1944), distinguished in Cut Bank v. Clapper Motor Co., 120 M 274, 182 P2d 474 (1947).

Third Persons Holding Funds of Judgment Debtor Subject to Court Order: Where in proceedings supplemental it is made to appear that a third person, not made a party, holds funds belonging to the judgment debtor which could be applied to the judgment, it is the duty of the court under this section to bring in such person to be examined, and if he makes no claim to the funds, the court may order their application on the judgment. If, on the other hand, he disputes the claim of the judgment debtor to their possession, the court may empower the judgment creditor to bring suit to recover the amount and enjoin transfer or other disposition of the funds or appoint a receiver to collect and apply the money. Brindjonc v. Brindjonc, 96 M 481, 31 P2d 725 (1934).

Scope of Supplementary Proceedings — Court Bound by Statute: If there is a denial of ownership of property sought in proceedings supplementary, the court is not to determine whether the claim is valid or invalid but may only proceed under the provisions of this section. Hustad v. Reed, 133 M 211, 321 P2d 1083 (1958).

Scope of Supplementary Proceedings — Contested Claims Not to Be Litigated: Contested claims as to title to property that the judgment creditor seeks to subject to his execution cannot be litigated in proceedings supplementary to execution. Letz v. Letz, 123 M 494, 215 P2d 534 (1950).

Statutory Basis of Powers: In proceedings supplemental to execution, the only powers possessed by the court are those given it by 25-14-107 and this section. Johnson v. Lundeen, 61 M 145, 200 P 451 (1921).

Complaint — No Requirement to Allege Court Permission: In an action under this section, it is not necessary to allege that an order was made by the court permitting the action to be brought. Sweeney v. Schlessinger, 18 M 326, 45 P 213 (1896).

Copartners Not Parties — Partnership Property Not Subject to Supplemental Proceedings: In supplemental proceedings in aid of execution, District Court had no authority to render judgment ordering plaintiff to recover against all doctors, copartners, doing business as a medical clinic, a copartnership, so that judgment against one doctor became a judgment against his three associates, where his associates were not served with process, were not present, were not parties to the proceedings, and were not represented. Hoopes v. District Court, 141 M 128, 375 P2d 691 (1962).

Disputed Claims to Property — Authority of Court: If there is a denial of ownership of property which is sought in proceedings supplementary, the court is not to determine whether the claim is valid or invalid but may only apply the provisions of 25-14-104 and order that an action be instituted to determine the fact in dispute. Hustad v. Reed, 133 M 211, 321 P2d 1083 (1958).

Disputed Claims to Property — Court Not to Direct Delivery: This statute may be the basis of an order of application only when the supplementary proceedings result in the discovery of property or assets in the hands of a third person which indisputably belong to the debtor, and if the ownership of the property is in dispute, the court is powerless to make an order directing its delivery to the creditor. Hustad v. Reed, 133 M 211, 321 P2d 1083 (1958).

Statutory Basis of Judicial Powers: In proceedings supplemental to execution, the only powers possessed by the court are those given it by this section and 25-14-104. Johnson v. Lundeen, 61 M 145, 200 P 451 (1921).

Jurisdiction of Court Over Sale Contract Proceeds: Where an owner sold his land on the installment plan and put the land contract and his deed in escrow with a bank, to be delivered to the purchaser upon completion of the payments, but in the meantime the land was attached as the property of the vendor and judgment obtained upon which execution was returned unsatisfied and there still remained in the bank some of the money paid in on the land contract, the court had jurisdiction in proceedings supplementary to execution under this section to order the judgment and execution to be satisfied and discharged out of the balance held by the bank; but 25-14-104 had no application to such a proceeding. Appointment of Receiver Allowable, After Service of Order to Attend, Without Notice to Judgment Debtor: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by issuing an ex parte order appointing a receiver without notice to the judgment debtor. The plain language of this section specifically provides that the court may appoint a receiver at any time after the order to attend and be examined has been served on the judgment debtor and may do so without further notice to the judgment debtor. The order was served in this case. May v. First Nat'l Pawn Brokers, Ltd., 270 M 132, 890 P2d 386, 52 St. Rep. 111 (1995).

UNIFORM DISTRICT COURT RULES

Chapter Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendments — March 15, 2011, Order: Supreme Court Order AF 07-0110, dated March 15, 2011, provided: "We hereby adopt the attached Montana Uniform District Court Rules, which reflect several amendments to those Rules. Specifically, in Rule 1(a)(5)[sic], we have simplified the requirements for the type of recycled paper to be used in court filings, reflecting an upcoming change to the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Second, in the opening clause of Rule 10, we have added a reference to our recent express authorization of limited scope representation by Montana attorneys via amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Rules of Civil Procedure. Finally, we have made technical changes substituting references to "counsel" with references to "parties" and substituting gender-neutral phrases for references to "he" and "him." In all other substantive respects, the Rules are unchanged.

The attached Montana Uniform District Court Rules shall become effective on October 1, 2011...."

Chapter Case Notes

Use of Verdict Form Not Abuse of Discretion: Defendant claimed the District Court abused its discretion in using a verdict form offered by the state, contending it was confusing. The Supreme Court found no error, noting the form was: (1) consistent with the amended information; (2) clearly framed; (3) carefully explained by the County Attorney during closing argument; and (4) further explained by a jury instruction. St. v. Kills On Top, 243 M 56, 793 P2d 1273, 47 St. Rep. 984 (1990).

Grant of Extension for Filing Briefs Under Rule 2 — Notification Required: Under Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R., extensions of time for filing briefs may be granted on oral application. However, the court must be notified by counsel of the desire or need for an extension before one may be granted. St. v. Onstad, 234 M 487, 764 P2d 473, 45 St. Rep. 2071 (1988).

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in former Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and, with respect to service, are found in former Rules 5 and 6, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Uniform Rules for District Courts — Time Limit for Filing Brief in Support of Rule 12 Motion: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Local Rule as Conflicting With Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Local court Rule 3, Park County District Court, states in part that a party opposing a motion has 10 days after the filing and service of the moving party's brief to serve and file a reply brief. When applied to a motion for summary judgment, local Rule 3 conflicts with former Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Whenever a local rule conflicts with the M.R.Civ.P., the local rule must be set aside. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 606 P2d 1082 (1980).

Ex Parte Trial Briefs: A District Court rule allowing for the filing of ex parte trial briefs used solely by defendant to inform the trial court of complex arguments to be presented at trial does not violate the plaintiff's due process rights. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979).

Briefs Required on Preliminary Motion: Trial court rule requiring filing of briefs in support of preliminary motion is proper exercise of authority under this rule and may be enforced by summary denial of motion where brief has not been filed. Hansen v. Kiernan, 159 M 448, 499 P2d 787 (1972).

Case Notes

New Evidence Introduced in Reply Brief — Not Arbitrary Where Surreply Allowed: The plaintiffs, who were tenants of the defendants' apartment complexes, filed suit against the defendants, alleging that their rental agreements violated the state's landlord-tenant act (Title 70, ch. 24) and security deposit act (Title 70, ch. 25). The plaintiffs filed a motion for class certification. In the reply brief, the plaintiffs introduced new evidence and the defendants sought to strike that information. The District Court did not strike the evidence; however, it allowed the defendants to file a surreply brief. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the District Court had not acted arbitrarily by admitting the evidence. Worledge v. Riverstone Residential Group, LLC, 2015 MT 142, 379 Mont. 265, 350 P.3d 39.

District Court Decision Regarding Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Appropriate — Oral Hearing Not Required — No Due Process Concerns for Failure to Provide Hearing: In a child custody dispute, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction without providing for the opportunity for an oral hearing. The Supreme Court determined that Rule 2(c), M.U.D.C.R., and Rule 12(i), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), do not require the District Court to hold an oral hearing. As applied to the facts, there was ample evidence, based on affidavits and other filings of the parties, upon which the District Court could base its subject matter jurisdiction decision. Moreover, the District Court did not fail to afford due process by refusing to hold a hearing, as a decision was not issued regarding the child custody issue, and the petitioning parent was not deprived of a liberty interest. In re Marriage of Sampley, 2015 MT 121, 379 Mont. 131, 347 P.3d 1281.

Motion for Contempt — Denial of Request for Entry of Default Upheld: The mother moved for a finding of contempt against the father for failing to pay child support. He failed to file a timely response brief and the mother requested an entry of default. The District Court, however, denied her motion based on the record before it. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the record indicated that the father was not in violation of the support order. In re Marriage of Marez/Marshall, 2014 MT 333, 377 Mont. 304, 340 P.3d 520.

Petition for Judicial Review of Denial of Unemployment Benefits — Supporting Brief Not Required to Be Filed with Petition: The appellant filed a petition for judicial review of an adverse unemployment benefits determination by the Board of Labor Appeals (now the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board). The District Court denied the petition because she failed to file a supporting brief or to state issues of law for review in violation of Rule 2 of the Montana Uniform District Court Rules. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a full review of the administrative record, holding that the specific judicial review process outlined in 39-51-2410 requires only that the aggrieved party file a petition, rather than a motion and supporting brief as required under Rule 2. Additionally, the Supreme Court found that the appellant was not required to provide discussion or legal authority in support of her request for judicial review of the Board's decision; instead, the court found that the appellant's statement that her claim was not processed accurately, honestly, fairly, or ethically, resulting in a gross miscarriage of justice, was a sufficient statement of the grounds on which she sought review. Jacky v. Avitus Group, 2013 MT 296, 372 Mont. 134, 311 P.3d 423.

Dismissal for Failure of State to Timely File Response Brief Reversed Given Established Briefing Schedule: Child was charged with three counts of vehicular homicide while under the influence and one count of perjury. An omnibus order was issued establishing a briefing schedule. Child subsequently moved to dismiss on June 27, alleging that the state failed to secure evidence in violation of Child's right to due process. The state filed a response brief on August 4. On August 7, the District Court granted the motion to dismiss on grounds that the state violated Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R., by failing to file an answer brief within 10 days. The state appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. The briefing dates set forth in the omnibus order clearly stated that response briefs had to be filed by August 15. Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R., therefore had no application. The state's brief was timely filed and dismissal on grounds of untimely filing was improper. St. v. Child, 2009 MT 148, 350 M 369, 207 P3d 339 (2009).

Failure to Comply With Briefing Schedule on Issue of Personal Jurisdiction —Jurisdiction Defense Waived: A former wife brought a contempt petition against her former husband for his alleged failure to pay debts pursuant to the parties' Georgia marriage dissolution. The husband's counsel appeared in District Court and indicated that a motion might be filed objecting to personal jurisdiction. The court set a schedule for filing the motion and set a date for hearing, but counsel failed to submit a motion or brief within the time set by the court or to request an extension. At the hearing and without having filed a motion and brief, counsel raised the question of personal jurisdiction. The court ordered briefing on the question of whether counsel's failure to file a motion and brief by the original deadline amounted to waiver of the personal jurisdiction issue, but counsel's subsequent brief addressed only the jurisdiction issue and not the waiver issue. The court then overruled the objection to personal jurisdiction and the case went to trial. The husband appealed the denial of his motion to dismiss based on lack of personal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. When a defendant who has been served with process files an appearance, indicates the intent to file a motion challenging personal jurisdiction, and then fails to file the motion or a supporting brief within the timeframe established by the scheduling order, the defendant waives the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction. Smith v. Smith, 2008 MT 461, 348 M 174, 199 P3d 824 (2008), distinguishing Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171 (1993).

Failure to Respond to Motion to Dismiss Counterclaim — Motion Well-Taken: Defendants contended that the District Court improperly denied their counterclaim. However, defendants failed to respond to plaintiff's motion to dismiss the counterclaim, and the failure to respond was considered an admission that the motion was well-taken, so dismissal of the counterclaim was affirmed. Eisenhart v. Puffer, 2008 MT 58, 341 M 508, 178 P3d 139 (2008).

Discretion of District Court to Grant Enlargement of Time to Respond to Motion: The wife filed a motion to enforce the pension provisions of a dissolution decree, and the husband moved for an enlargement of time nearly a month later. The District Court declined to grant the enlargement because there was nothing to indicate that the husband's failure to respond within the required 10 days was the result of excusable neglect. On appeal, the husband contended that under former Rules 6 and 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), he was entitled to an enlargement of time in order to reply to the motion to enforce. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Parties are not entitled to an enlargement of time; rather, the granting of an enlargement of time is within the discretion of the District Court, which in this case found the husband's arguments unpersuasive. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Error to Dismiss Action in Light of Evidence That Plaintiff Did Not Receive Motion: City Judge Dorrington cited attorney Fennessy for contempt of court for allegedly making false statements to the court and for a lack of responsibility in the performance of duties and lack of respect for the court. Fennessy filed a motion in District Court to stay the contempt proceeding in City Court, contending that Dorrington did not have jurisdiction to issue the contempt citation and was prohibited from acting as the complaining witness, prosecutor, and judge for the contempt proceedings. Dorrington then filed a motion to dismiss and 3 days later moved to continue the hearing and quash subpoenas. In his response to the motion to continue, Fennessy stated that if Dorrington had filed a motion to dismiss, Fennessy had not received the motion thus he had no opportunity to review it. Nevertheless, that same day the District Court granted the motion to dismiss. Fennessy moved to reconsider and included affidavits from his attorney and staff stating that a motion to dismiss had never been received, but the motion to reconsider was denied, so Fennessy appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. A motion to dismiss is viewed with disfavor and rarely granted, and dismissal of an action is justified only when the allegations of a complaint clearly demonstrate that plaintiff does not have a claim. A court may not dismiss a claim unless it appears that plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that could be proved in support of a claim. In this case, the District Court failed to follow this rule by dismissing Fennessy's motion before the 10-day time limit to respond had expired and abused its discretion by refusing to reconsider its order of dismissal even though there was evidence that Fennessy had not received the motion to dismiss and thus was unable to respond to or review it. Fennessy v. Dorrington, 2001 MT 204, 306 M 307, 32 P3d 1250 (2001).

Appropriateness of Treatment Plan Requirement That Parents Provide Explanation of Child's Injuries: Four treatment plans were developed with the parents, the purpose of all of which was to: (1) return the child to parental custody; (2) enable the parents to provide a safe and nurturing environment for the child; (3) enable the parents to develop an awareness of the child's needs and an ability to meet those needs; (4) help the parents develop minimal parenting skills; and (5) resolve the issues that led to the child's abuse, which included a requirement that the parents provide a reasonable and consistent explanation for the child's injuries. The parents were subsequently convicted of endangering the welfare of the child, and the state petitioned for custody. Prior to the permanent custody hearing, the mother moved to strike the task that required an explanation of the child's injuries, but the state never filed a brief in response to the motion. Nevertheless, the motion was denied. Following the termination of the mother's parental rights, she challenged the appropriateness of that task on grounds that the task placed her in the untenable position of having to choose between incriminating herself and failing to complete the treatment plan, in violation of her right against self-incrimination, relying on In re A.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427 (2000). The Supreme Court found her reliance on In re A.N. misplaced. The mother waived her self-incrimination privileges by voluntarily testifying regarding her knowledge of the child's injuries at both the permanent custody hearing and during the criminal proceeding and could not argue later that the disputed task impinged on her constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Further, the state's duty to protect children, as set out in 41-3-101, necessitated that the parents come to terms with the reasons why the child was abused, and without demonstrable willingness from the parents to resolve the abuse issues, the District Court had no assurance that the child would not be abused again. Thus, the task was a fair requirement in the treatment plan, and the District Court did not err in concluding that the plan was appropriate or in denying the motion to strike the task from the plan. Denying the motion was within the court's discretion regardless of whether the state filed a brief in response to the motion. In re A.C., 2001 MT 126, 305 M 404, 27 P3d 960 (2001).

Reasonable Assumption of Time Remaining to Appeal Following Reinstatement — Error in Dismissal for Failure to Timely Appeal: Roses' complaint against Abrahamses for unpaid rent was dismissed in Justice's Court and subsequently appealed to District Court, where it was scheduled for a pretrial conference. After scheduling, Roses filed a motion for substitution of counsel. Notice of a new pretrial conference date was sent to previous counsel, but substituted counsel did not receive notice of the date. Neither Roses nor counsel appeared at the hearing, so the action was dismissed for failure to appear. The court rescinded that order upon Roses' motion for relief on grounds that Roses were not properly notified; however, prior to dismissal, Abrahamses filed a motion to dismiss for failure to timely appeal, and following rescission of its order, the District Court granted Abrahamses' motion based on its sua sponte conclusion that Roses had failed to file an answer brief within the 10-day period required by this rule. The court reasoned that the time to respond to the motion to dismiss was tolled during the time that Roses' action had been dismissed for failure to appear, but that when that order was rescinded, Roses had only so much time remaining as had been remaining when the appeal was first dismissed. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed, holding that in the interest of resolving the controversy on its merits, without notice to the contrary, it was reasonable for Roses to assume that 10 days remained from reinstatement of the appeal to respond to the motion to dismiss and that the appeal was dismissed for a second time before that 10-day period elapsed. Rose v. Abrahams, 1999 MT 314, 297 M 255, 991 P2d 459, 56 St. Rep. 1263 (1999).

Failure to File Supporting "Brief" — Dismissal Reversed: Moody filed a wrongful discharge action followed by an amended complaint. In filing a motion to dismiss the action, the defendant filed an answer to Moody's amended complaint rather than a brief supporting the motion to dismiss. The District Court, after designating the answer as a supporting brief, dismissed Moody's complaint with prejudice. Moody appealed, alleging that the defendant failed to file a "brief" in support of the motion to dismiss within 5 days as required by this rule. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case, holding that documents that have procedural significance beyond the merits of their contents are required to be correctly labeled. The District Court erred when it granted the motion to dismiss because the defendant's motion was not supported by a properly identified brief. Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997).

Court May Not Grant Unanswered but Legally Unsupported Motion: The city moved to have Pizzola's motion for a trial de novo denied on the basis that he had not filed the motion within the required 10 days. On appeal, the city acknowledged that the motion was timely because intermediate holidays and weekend days are not counted in calculating the 10-day appeal period. The city argued that the dismissal was still appropriate because Pizzola had not responded to its motion and that therefore the District Court had the discretion to grant the city's unanswered motion. The Supreme Court held that a District Court cannot properly grant a legally unsupported and insupportable motion to which a timely response has not been filed by the other party. The Supreme Court stated, moreover, that a "deemed admission" that a motion is well taken under subsection (b) of this rule cannot convert a motion that is incorrect as a matter of law into a motion that is well taken as a matter of law. St. v. Pizzola, 283 M 522, 942 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 774 (1997).

Failure to Respond to Motion for Attorney Fees — Grounds for Granting Motion: The provision of subsection (b) of this rule that failure to file an answer brief to a motion within 10 days is an admission that the motion is well taken does not require the District Court to grant the unanswered motion. Therefore, the District Court did not have to grant former wife's motion for attorney fees in her proceeding for modification of child support on the ground that former husband did not respond to the motion. In re Marriage of Dishon, 277 M 501, 922 P2d 1186, 53 St. Rep. 816 (1996).

Failure to Answer Motion to Strike Amended Complaint Following Extension — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: The District Court, despite defendant's objections, accommodated plaintiff by extending the time in which he could amend his complaint. Having granted the extension, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying further extensions or in denying leave to amend after plaintiff failed to file an answer to defendant's motion to strike the complaint. Gursky v. Parkside Professional Village, 258 M 148, 852 P2d 569, 50 St. Rep. 470 (1993).

Failure to File Brief in Support of Motion for Interest — Right Waived to Appeal Interest: Lumber Enterprises, Inc. received a judgment on a contract against Hansens, but the District Court refused to award prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of interest based on the failure of Lumber Enterprises to file a brief in support of its motion to amend the findings of the District Court to allow the award of interest. By failing to abide by subsection (b) of this rule, the Supreme Court held that Lumber Enterprises waived its right to bring a request to the Supreme Court to award that interest. Lumber Enterprises, Inc. v. Hansen, 257 M 11, 846 P2d 1046, 50 St. Rep. 138 (1993).

Lack of Supporting Brief and Notice of Motion — Ruling Not Invalidated: Coward made a motion to alter or amend judgment but failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days and failed to give notice to Grounds that the motion would be heard along with the hearing on her motion for contempt. These omissions notwithstanding, the District Court partially granted Coward's motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Citing Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285 (1989), the Supreme Court said that even though failure to file a brief is an admission that the motion is not well taken, the District Court still has discretion whether to grant the motion. The parties were also invited to propose a briefing schedule and/or evidentiary hearing date to present supplemental arguments, but failed to do so. Under these circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993). See also St. v. Winter, 2014 MT 235, 376 Mont. 284, 333 P.3d 222.

Oral Pronouncement of Guilt and Delayed Sentencing — Appeal Improper Pending Final Judgment: Following a nonjury trial on February 5, the Justice of the Peace orally pronounced defendant guilty of DUI and driving while the privilege to do so was suspended or revoked and ordered defendant to obtain an alcohol evaluation and return for sentencing February 26. On February 7, the Justice's Court issued a written order and mailed it to the prospective parties. On February 11, defendant filed a notice of appeal with the District Court, and the case was transferred on March 11. On March 28, the state filed a motion to dismiss on the basis that the appeal was premature because defendant had not been sentenced. On April 1, the District Court dismissed and remanded the case back to Justice's Court for sentencing before defendant had an opportunity to respond with a brief. An appeal cannot be utilized until judgment has been fully rendered. Dismissal was proper because the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction absent final judgment by the Justice's Court. St. v. Wilson, 252 M 264, 827 P2d 1286, 49 St. Rep. 243 (1992).

Attempt to Amend Pleadings in Responsive Brief Properly Ignored: Defendant claimed that the District Court disregarded his affidavit and subsequent demand in his responsive brief to amend the pleadings to conform to his filed affidavit alleging fraudulent conduct. However, because there was no allegation of misconduct in his complaint and he did not properly file a motion to amend his pleadings, attempting rather to amend his pleadings in his responsive brief, defendant did not meet the requirements of this rule and his demand for amended pleadings was properly ignored. Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991).

Failure to File Supporting Brief — New Trial Denied: Defendant maintained that he was entitled to a new trial pursuant to 46-16-701 and 46-16-702. The state contended that a summary ruling was proper under this rule because defendant failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days. Defendant argued that this rule did not apply to criminal cases. The state contended that the decision to deny the motion for a new trial was a matter of trial court discretion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion when defendant failed to provide sufficient information to support his motion for a new trial. St. v. Sor-Lokken, 246 M 70, 803 P2d 638, 47 St. Rep. 2264 (1990).

Discretion of District Court to Grant or Deny Unanswered Motions: Following the District Court's entry of judgment, plaintiffs filed and served motions to amend the findings, for a new trial, and to alter the judgment. Defendants did not file a response to the motions within the 10 days allowed under former Rule 59(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Plaintiffs then moved that the motions be deemed admitted and well-taken as allowed under this uniform rule. The court denied the motions, and plaintiffs argued that defendants' failure to file a response in the time allowed requires the court to grant the unanswered motions. However, this rule does not remove the discretion of the District Court to grant or deny unanswered motions as it sees fit. Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285, 46 St. Rep. 1287 (1989), followed in Petri v. Mont. St. Univ., 260 M 392, 860 P2d 154, 50 St. Rep. 1133 (1993), and St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996). See also St. v. Pizzola, 283 M 522, 942 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 774 (1997), holding that a legally unsupported motion may not be granted on the basis that it is unanswered.

Failure to File Brief Not Admission That Summary Judgment Motion Well Taken: This rule provides that failure to file a brief by the moving party is considered an admission that the motion is without merit and that failure to file a reply brief an admission that the motion is well taken. The Supreme Court held that the essential question for a District Court deciding a summary judgment motion is whether a genuine issue of material fact exists that cannot be decided on a merely technical fact, such as the filing of briefs on time. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989), followed in SVKV, L.L.C. v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006), and Chapman v. Maxwell, 2014 MT 35, 374 Mont. 12, 322 P.3d 1029.

Failure to File Brief Not Waiver of Right to Oral Argument: The Supreme Court ruled that the right to oral argument on a former Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), motion cannot be waived by failing to file a brief. In some cases, the lower court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but in the ordinary case, the right to a hearing must be specifically waived by all parties. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989), followed in SVKV, L.L.C. v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006). However, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992), in which case, after the granting of a summary judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants hired a new attorney who filed several motions and requested a hearing but failed to raise any factual matters relevant to issuance of the summary judgment. In this case, failure to raise any genuine issue of material fact relevant to the motion for summary judgment constituted waiver of a hearing.

Absence of Answer Brief Insufficient to Compel Granting of Posttrial Motions: A parent in an adoption proceeding made posttrial motions to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, and to stay execution of sentence pending appeal. No responsive briefs were filed within the time allowed. The District Court properly granted the stay of execution because no responsive brief was timely filed pursuant to this rule; however, it refused to grant the other motions because they related to the determination of facts. The absence of a responsive brief did not change the court's determination of the facts or compel a grant of all posttrial motions. In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988), followed in In re Support of K.F., 232 M 326, 756 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 1087 (1988).

Rule 4. Filing of Discovery.

Advisory Commission Notes

Adoption of this rule requires an amendment to Rules 30(f) and 33(a), Mont.R.Civ.P. It is the opinion of the Commission, after long discussion, that the benefits of not routinely filing discovery outweigh the disadvantages.

There are several counties, Lewis & Clark, Silverbow, and at least one district of Cascade County for example, that do not have discovery routinely filed at the present date - in contravention of the Rules of Civil Procedure.

Case Notes

Motion Referring to Discovery to Precede Summary Judgment Hearing: The District Court did not err in failing to consider an issue raised for the first time in proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law and filed 2 days after the court signed a summary judgment order. Whatever is filed and however the filing is accomplished, it must precede the summary judgment hearing; otherwise, the issue is not properly before the court. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990).

Rule 5. Pre-Trial Order and Pre-Trial Conference.

Advisory Commission Notes

The pre-trial order is intended to supersede the pleadings and to state the issues to be tried. It is not intended that parties be held to or examined concerning claims and other matters contained in prior pleadings. This is contrary to the holding in Easterday v. Canty, 712 P.2d 1305 (Mont. 1986), which case would, in part, be overruled by adoption of this Rule.

Case Notes

Refusal to Admit Letter Introduced During Trial Not Error: In a dispute over the charges for the care and training of horses, the parties agreed that Watkins would accept $5,000 for his services. The Williamses gave Watkins two checks for $2,500, but they stopped payment on the second check and refused to tender the rest of the money on the basis that one of the horses had been mistreated. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Watkins for $20,191 for services. The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in excluding a letter introduced during trial that purported to contain material terms of compensation for Watkins' services. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had not erred in excluding the letter because the Williamses had failed to produce the letter in response to discovery requests and had not listed it as an exhibit as required by the lower court's scheduling order. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Additional Peremptory Challenges Granted to Hostile Parties — Rule to Be Applied: King sued the Montana Power Company and two wholly owned subsidiaries for wrongful discharge. At trial, the District Court granted eight peremptory challenges to the three codefendants. Because a requirement for a demonstration of prejudice would invade the internal processes of the jury, the Supreme Court held that no prejudice need be shown in order for additional peremptory challenges to be granted to one side in a lawsuit and expressly overruled Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976), which required prejudice. The Supreme Court held that parties seeking additional peremptory challenges must request them prior to trial, the issue should be raised by motion prior to voir dire if no pretrial conference is held, the number of peremptory challenges should be included in the pretrial order, and the trial court should expressly set forth in the record the reasons for its ruling. If peremptory challenges are improperly granted, prejudice is presumed as a matter of law. In the present case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly required "diversity of interest" instead of "hostility" and that the facts showed insufficient hostility to require additional peremptory challenges allowed by the District Court. The District Court therefore committed reversible error in granting those additional challenges, and a new trial was ordered. King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038, 50 St. Rep. 117 (1993).

Rule 6. Briefs.

Advisory Commission Notes

After long debate, it is the opinion of the Commission that all briefs must be served upon opposing counsel. "The day is gone when the prototype old fashioned attorney produced the hidden witness at trial or the uncited but decisive case and left the opposing attorney lying bloody on the courtroom floor. Justice is achieved, under the spirit of our modern rules, by full and open disclosure of law and fact." Hill v. Squibb & Sons, E.R., 592 P.2d 1383, 1391 (Mont. 1979). Indeed, Rule 19 of the Thirteenth Judicial District, upheld in Hill, has now been modified to require service of all briefs on opposing counsel.

Case Notes

No Error in Refusing Jury Instruction on UTPA Facts No Longer at Issue: Defendant insurer offered a jury instruction regarding defendant's liability under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), but the District Court declined to give the instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court had earlier granted summary judgment in defendant's favor on the issue of UTPA liability, so defendant's proposed instruction was rendered irrelevant. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

Strict Recitation of UTPA Statutory Language Not Required in Jury Instruction: Defendant insurer asserted that the District Court erred in giving a jury instruction concerning plaintiff's Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) common-law bad faith claim by substituting the word "claims" for the statutory reference to "coverages", resulting in prejudice to defendant. The Supreme Court first noted that there is no requirement that a District Court adopt verbatim the applicable statutory language when instructing the jury, as long as any modification does not alter the meaning of the statute and the District Court maintains conformity with the law while remaining appropriate in the factual context of the case. In this case, the District Court did not change the meaning of the statute, and because the submission and processing of insurance claims is a more fact-driven process than the issue of insurance coverage, there was no error in including a reference to claims within the purview of the UTPA statutory prohibition in 33-18-201. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

Montana Pattern Instruction No. 2.06 — Instruction to Be Coordinated With 27-1-317: After Lacock was injured in a shooting at a 4B's restaurant, he brought an action against 4B's, claiming that the restaurant should have foreseen that he would be injured. The District Court gave Montana Pattern Instruction No. 2.06, but left off the last line of the instruction in deference to Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court held that leaving off the last line of the instruction was error because the decision in Kitchen Krafters must be coordinated with 27-1-317. Without the last line of the instruction, the Supreme Court noted that a jury will be mistakenly led into believing that to be held liable, a defendant must foresee the specific injury to the plaintiff. Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373, 53 St. Rep. 492 (1996).

Use of Verdict Form Not Abuse of Discretion: Defendant claimed the District Court abused its discretion in using a verdict form offered by the state, contending it was confusing. The Supreme Court found no error, noting the form was: (1) consistent with the amended information; (2) clearly framed; (3) carefully explained by the County Attorney during closing argument; and (4) further explained by a jury instruction. St. v. Kills On Top, 243 M 56, 793 P2d 1273, 47 St. Rep. 984 (1990).

Late Filing of Proposed Findings and Conclusions Allowed by Extension of Time: In a divorce proceeding, the wife filed proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law the day before the trial. On the day of the trial, the husband requested sanctions for late filing, and the judge prohibited the wife from presenting any evidence at trial. When reminded by the wife that he had previously agreed to allow her an extension of time to file her proposals, the judge withdrew the sanction. In the absence of a showing that the judge abused his discretion, the Supreme Court would not overturn the ruling. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

2011 Amendments — March 15, 2011, Order: Supreme Court Order AF 07-0110, dated March 15, 2011, provided: "We hereby adopt the attached Montana Uniform District Court Rules, which reflect several amendments to those Rules. Specifically, ...in the opening clause of Rule 10, we have added a reference to our recent express authorization of limited scope representation by Montana attorneys via amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct and the Rules of Civil Procedure.....[W]e have made technical changes substituting references to "counsel" with references to "parties" and substituting gender-neutral phrases for references to "he" and "him." In all other substantive respects, the Rules are unchanged." Order effective October 1, 2011.

Case Notes

Failure to Provide Notice to Codefendant — Reversible Error: The defendant was held vicariously liable for injuries her son caused during a tractor accident. Prior to a bench trial, the defendant's counsel withdrew as her attorney and noted that she was incompetent and required a conservator. The defendant argued on appeal that the plaintiffs failed to meet the notice requirements when her counsel withdrew his representation. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that the plaintiffs' failure to provide notice to the defendant under 37-61-405 constituted reversible error. Stewart v. Rice, 2013 MT 55, 369 Mont. 203, 296 P.3d 1174, following Quantum Elec., Inc. v. Schaeffer, 2003 MT 29, 314 Mont. 193, 64 P.3d 1026.

Failure to Provide Rule 10 Notice — Reversal Not Required When Case Essentially Over: In the plaintiff's wrongful discharge suit, the jury found for the defendant, who then sought and was granted attorney fees and costs. The plaintiff contended that the defendant's failure to provide notice of counsel's withdrawal from the case pursuant to Rule 10 of the Uniform District Court Rules warranted reversal of the award of fees and costs. The Supreme Court, while not condoning the defendant's failure to provide Rule 10 notice, nevertheless held that by the time counsel's withdrawal motion was granted, the case was essentially over and no further proceedings were to be had against the plaintiff, so the defendant's failure to provide notice did not require reversal. The District Court was affirmed. Prescott v. Innovative Resource Group, LLC, 2010 MT 35, 355 Mont. 220, 225 P.3d 1253.

No Error in Disallowing Continuance Following Withdrawal of Counsel on Day of Trial: A dissolution trial was delayed multiple times over nearly 2 ½ years following the husband's petition for dissolution, including three continuance requests by the husband. Only 2 weeks before trial, the husband dismissed his attorney, and his counsel withdrew on the scheduled trial date. Nevertheless, the trial court declined a motion by the husband for another continuance and instead proceeded to go through the basic requirements for dissolution and to get uncontested facts on the record, even though the husband declined to participate. The court then gave the husband the rest of the day to find an attorney, but he was not successful. The next day, the court again declined the husband's request for a continuance and proceeded to take testimony, although the husband was generally uncooperative when questioned by the wife's counsel. Following testimony, the court gave the husband 30 days in which to have a new attorney file an appearance and make any appropriate posttrial motions, but cautioned the husband that if he did not get counsel within a reasonable time, the court would make a decision based on the evidence before it. The husband eventually acquired new counsel, who filed a notice of appearance about 50 days after trial, but the husband filed no additional motions and provided the court with no additional evidence, and his new counsel had no further contact with the court or the wife's counsel. More than 3 months after trial, the court entered its decision and dissolution decree, and the husband appealed on grounds that the court erred by denying a continuance after his counsel withdrew on the day of trial. The Supreme Court affirmed. The husband's counsel did not withdraw without the client's consent, but rather was fired. Allowing a party to fire counsel and be granted a continuance on the day of trial would effectively place control of proceedings in the hands of the party rather than with the court and would result in an impermissible interruption in the functioning of the judicial system. By shortening the first day of trial so that the husband could seek new counsel and by granting 30 days after trial in which to obtain counsel and to notify the court of further motions or evidence, the trial court compensated for the counsel's withdrawal on the day of trial and provided adequate notice to the husband; thus, the trial court did not err in disallowing a further continuance. In re Marriage of Hardin, 2008 MT 154, 343 M 254, 184 P3d 1012 (2008), distinguishing Quantum Elec., Inc. v. Schaeffer, 2003 MT 29, 314 M 193, 64 P3d 1026 (2003), and followed in In re Guardianship of A.M.M., 2015 MT 250, 380 Mont. 451, 356 P.3d 474.

Withdrawal of Counsel — No Requirement That Party Provide Written Notice of Hearing Until Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel Filed: Defendant moved for sanctions and dismissal based on discovery abuses. Notice was sent to plaintiffs' counsel regarding a hearing on the motion, but plaintiffs' counsel had decided to withdraw. Although counsel mentioned the hearing to plaintiffs, plaintiffs failed to appear at the hearing, so defendant's motion was granted. No notice was filed with the court formalizing withdrawal of counsel until after the hearing. Plaintiffs' new counsel moved to set aside the judgment on grounds of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect, asserting that defendant was required to notify plaintiffs in writing before the hearing, but the motion was denied, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant was not required to provide written notice to plaintiffs until their former counsel filed a notice of withdrawal, and the rules of professional conduct prohibited defendant from contacting plaintiffs in person. Until the notice of withdrawal was filed, defendant was entitled to presume that plaintiffs' former counsel continued to provide representation and that plaintiffs had been properly notified of the hearing by counsel. Under these circumstances, denial of the motion to set aside the judgment was not an abuse of discretion. Flesch v. McDonald's Restaurant, 2005 MT 235, 328 M 407, 121 P3d 527 (2005).

Required Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel: When counsel for a party withdraws, in order to properly protect the interests of the unrepresented party, the opposing party, by written notice, must require the unrepresented party to appoint another attorney or appear in person, as provided in 37-61-405. The written notice must include the date of the next action required in the case and notice that if the unrepresented party fails to appoint an attorney or appear in person within 20 days from the date of notice, the action or other proceeding will proceed and may result in a judgment or other order being entered against the unrepresented party. Once proper notice is given, any continued refusal by the unrepresented party to participate in the proceedings may justly result in default judgment or other final judgment against that party's interests. Quantum Elec., Inc. v. Schaeffer, 2003 MT 29, 314 M 193, 64 P3d 1026 (2003), following McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), and overruling Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973), and Audit Serv., Inc. v. Kraus Constr., Inc., 189 M 94, 615 P2d 183 (1980), to the extent that Sikorski and Audit Serv. waived a failure of opposing counsel to comply with 37-61-405.

Withdrawal of Counsel — "Rule 10 Notice" Sent to Last-Known Address Held "Notice as Required by Law": In a dissolution proceeding between Christina and Laramie, Laramie's counsel withdrew after he had not been contacted by Laramie for approximately 18 months. In the notice of withdrawal, Laramie's counsel provided Christina's counsel with Laramie's last-known address. Christina's counsel then sent a "Rule 10 notice", pursuant to this rule, to Laramie at the address provided by his former counsel, informing Laramie that he must appoint another attorney, that trial was scheduled for a particular date, and that if he did not appoint an attorney or appear, a default judgment might be made against him. That notice was returned by the post office because Laramie was apparently no longer living at that address. After a decree of dissolution was entered, Christina's counsel obtained Laramie's address from his mother and sent Laramie a notice of entry of judgment. Fifty-six days later, Laramie moved, pursuant to former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to set aside the judgment, arguing that Christina's counsel did not exercise due diligence in obtaining his correct mailing address and that if Christina's counsel obtained his correct address through his mother after entry of judgment, Christina's counsel could have done so before entry of judgment. Citing McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), the Supreme Court held that Christina's counsel, by mailing the Rule 10 notice to Laramie's last-known address, satisfied the requirement that he make a good faith effort to notify Laramie and that Christina's counsel had no obligation to "track down" Laramie through his mother. In re Marriage of Wallace, 284 M 360, 944 P2d 227, 54 St. Rep. 920 (1997).

Notice Required When Counsel Withdraws — Discovery Deadline Tolled: Only 3 days before the deadline for answers to discovery requests, Holms's counsel moved to withdraw, citing irreconcilable personal and professional differences with Holms regarding handling of the case and a breakdown in attorney-client communication. Four days after the discovery deadline, Stanleys moved for summary judgment based to a great extent on matters considered admitted by Holms's failure to respond to requests for admissions pursuant to former Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Twelve days after the motion for summary judgment, the court heard and granted counsel's motion to withdraw. On the same day, Stanleys served Holms with confirmation of the court's oral instruction to Holms regarding this rule and with a notice of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment. Seven days before the hearing, Holms's new counsel agreed to undertake representation and the following day moved to amend the pleadings, to file amended responses to Stanleys' first discovery requests, and to continue Stanleys' motion for summary judgment. On the date set for hearing on the summary judgment, the court heard oral argument and granted Stanleys' motion about 3 months later. In its order, the court concluded that the 30-day deadline in former Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P., was not tolled because this rule did not apply. However, pursuant to 37-61-405 and this rule, the opposing party with notice of the withdrawal of counsel has a duty to provide adequate notice to the unrepresented party when that party's attorney ceases to act as such, not just when the attorney dies or is removed, suspended, or actually withdraws, before taking advantage of a default on the part of the other side. The purpose of this notice requirement is to prevent a represented party from taking unfair advantage of the situation of the opposing party who has actually or effectively lost representation and to ensure that the unrepresented party receives a fair trial. The case was remanded for consideration of the motion to amend the pleadings and reconsideration of the summary judgment motion in light of the amended pleadings, the discovery responses, and the state of the record at the time that the motion for summary judgment is heard. Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196, 54 St. Rep. 195 (1997), following McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and followed in In re Marriage of Wallace, 284 M 360, 944 P2d 227, 54 St. Rep. 920 (1997). On remand, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in conducting the summary judgment hearing and ruling on Stanley's motion for summary judgment without allowing Holms the opportunity to conduct further discovery. Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999), following Howell v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 240 M 383, 785 P2d 1018, 46 St. Rep. 2216 (1989).

Committee Notes: The committee notes printed with individual Rules were provided by the Montana Supreme Court with the order adopting the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure effective October 1, 2011.

Effect of Publishing Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Section 2, Ch. 1, L. 1979 provided: "(1) The legislature recognizes the supreme court's authority pursuant to Article VII, section 2, of the Montana constitution to make rules governing procedure and practice before the courts.

(2) The legislature also recognizes that the practice of printing such rules with the Montana statutes is of benefit to code users and facilitates implementation of Article VII, section 2(3), of the Montana constitution concerning disapproval by the legislature.

(3) Therefore, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, printed as chapter 20, Title 25, MCA; the Montana Rules of Appellate Civil Procedure [now Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, now superseded], printed as chapter 21, Title 25, MCA; and the Montana Rules of Evidence, printed as chapter 10, Title 26, MCA, appear only for the purpose of facilitating use of the code. Neither this act nor publication of the rules may be construed as an attempt to readopt or promulgate the rules."

Former Chapter Case Notes

Application of Rules When Prevailing Practice at Odds With Them: When called upon to decide a case involving the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, the court's task is to apply the rules as written, not to conform the rules to what may be a prevailing practice that is at odds with what the rules clearly and unambiguously require. Busch v. Atkinson, 278 M 478, 925 P2d 874, 53 St. Rep. 1020 (1996).

Notice and Hearing Required: Plaintiff changed attorneys during a proceeding. The order substituting counsel provided for attorney fees to the original counsel. It was error for the District Court to award fees without notice to the plaintiff and without providing an opportunity for a hearing. Bink v. First Bank West, Great Falls, Inc., 246 M 414, 804 P2d 384, 48 St. Rep. 17 (1991).

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., and, with respect to service, are found in Rules 5 and 6, M.R.Civ.P. The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Retroactivity of Rules of Procedure: Although legislative intent to give retrospective force to a statute must appear and all doubt will be resolved against retrospective application, the Rules of Civil Procedure apply retrospectively. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966); Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 34 F.R.D. 515 (D.C. Mont. 1964); Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 177 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Former Rule 1. Scope of rules

Failure to Serve Original Summons Cured by Service of Amended Summons — Failure to Obtain Leave of Court to Amend Summons and Remove Party From Summons Not Fatal to Service of Process: Schmitz filed a pro se action for medical malpractice against Vasquez and Sanz on April 5, 1994. On April 1, 1997, after determining that her claim against Sanz had not gone through the Montana Medical Legal Panel procedure, Schmitz amended her complaint without permission of the District Court and, through counsel, filed the amended complaint. A new summons was issued by the Clerk of District Court on April 1, 1997, and was served on Vasquez the same day. The amended complaint and the new summons were identical to those previously filed and issued except that they did not include any claim against or notice to Sanz. The District Court dismissed the suit because the original summons had not been served within 3 years of its issuance, as required by Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that since the amended complaint and new summons had only the effect of deleting Sanz as a defendant, Vasquez received the same notice from the amended complaint and second summons that he would have received from the first complaint and summons and therefore was not prejudiced by Schmitz's failure to serve the first complaint within 3 years and failure to obtain leave of court to amend the summons by removing Sanz as a defendant. For these reasons and because the purpose of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure is to obtain a just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action, the Supreme Court held that Schmitz complied with the substance and purpose of Rule 41(e) and that the District Court erred in dismissing the suit. Schmitz v. Vasquez, 1998 MT 314, 292 M 164, 970 M 1039, 55 St. Rep. 1288 (1998).

Denial of Motion for Temporary Change of Custody Not Appealable: The Supreme Court held that although the denial of Shupe's motion for a temporary change of custody was not appealable under appellate rules, the District Court also denied Shupe's petition to modify custody and that order was appealable. In re Marriage of Shupe, 276 M 409, 916 P2d 744, 53 St. Rep. 447 (1996).

Applicability of Rules of Civil Procedure to Workers' Compensation Court: Since the Workers' Compensation Court is expressly made subject to the Montana Administrative Procedure Act and the Act allows each agency subject to the Act to promulgate its own procedural rules, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure are not directly applicable to the court. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Writ of Supervisory Control — Needless Litigation: Because an order denying a motion to dismiss is not an appealable order, a Writ of Supervisory Control is proper to prevent needless litigation. State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Effect of Former Case Law: By adopting the Rules of Civil Procedure, the Supreme Court did not abandon its prior decisions. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Disposal on Grounds Other Than Merits: The rules encourage disposition of cases quickly and on the merits. Close scrutiny should be given when one party moves to have the case disposed of on grounds other than the merits. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Effect of Rules: The effect of the Rules of Civil Procedure is to give greater emphasis to the substance of the pleadings and not the mere form. The court erred here in dismissing complaint with prejudice for failure to state a claim. Spaberg v. Johnson, 143 M 500, 392 P2d 78 (1964).

Former Rule 2. One form of action

Record-Based or Nonrecord-Based Information Determinative of Appropriateness of Direct Appeal or Petition for Postconviction Relief — Direct Appeal Dismissed When Record Insufficient to Substantiate Effectiveness of Counsel: In 1999, White moved for an evidentiary hearing to allow the development of facts that were not part of the record but that were necessary to sustain a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. The Supreme Court declared by order that a petition for postconviction relief would be the proper avenue for White's nonrecord-based ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Nevertheless, in late 2000, White appealed, contending that the claim of prejudicial error resulting from her trial counsel's various failures to provide representation, such as the failure to call witnesses, make an opening statement, or offer a theory of the case at any stage of the proceedings, was supported by the record and proper for direct appeal. The general rule set out in Hagen v. St., 1999 MT 8, 293 M 60, 973 P2d 233 (1999), is that when ineffective assistance claims are based on facts of record, they must be raised on direct appeal, while claims based on allegations not documented in the record must be raised by petition for postconviction relief. The underlying principle of the rule is that a silent record cannot rebut the strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. The two distinct classifications of on-record and off-record actions tend to overlap at times, and though not easily distilled into a formula, the definitive question that decides whether actions are on-record or off-record is whether the record fully explains why counsel took the particular course of action. Generally, an alleged failure to object to the introduction of evidence, to the testimony of a witness, or to prosecutorial misconduct at trial is considered record-based and appropriate for direct appeal. Likewise, counsel's own conduct in presenting the case, such as improperly eliciting damaging testimony from a witness or rendering an improper opening statement or closing argument, may be pointed to as record-based. Decisions regarding the timing and number of objections and whether to offer no opening statement at all lie within counsel's tactical discretion, indicating that nonrecord-based information explaining the tactic may be involved. Similarly, counsel's failure to adequately investigate, to prepare a defense, to become familiar with critical areas of the applicable law, to offer a particular jury instruction, to object to the trial court's failure to consider sentencing alternatives, to object to the admission of evidence that is evidenced by the record, or to fully inform defendant of the consequences of various options and rights, even though the prejudicial results of the ineffectiveness appear on the record, may constitute a nonrecord-based claim. In White's case, the record supplied some indicia of why a certain objection was raised at a particular time, but was still insufficient to determine to what extent counsel's actions were purely tactical or resulted from deficient representation. Thus, the information was considered nonrecord-based and should have been raised by petition for postconviction relief, so White's direct appeal was dismissed without prejudice. St. v. White, 2001 MT 149, 306 M 58, 30 P3d 340 (2001), followed in St. v. Earl, 2003 MT 158, 316 M 263, 71 P3d 1201 (2003), St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 247, 317 M 331, 77 P3d 224 (2003), St. v. Notti, 2003 MT 296, 318 M 146, 79 P3d 289 (2003), St. v. Rinkenbach, 2003 MT 348, 318 M 499, 82 P3d 8 (2003), St. v. Novak, 2005 MT 294, 329 M 309, 124 P3d 182 (2005), Swan v. St. Germain, 2007 MT 28, 336 M 17, 153 P3d 591 (2007), in which the Supreme Court declined to address a direct appeal of defense counsel's nonrecord-based reasons for making a double jeopardy argument and for failing to call a witness to testify in an incest case because the issues were appropriate for postconviction proceedings. See also St. v. Green, 2009 MT 114, 350 M 141, 205 P3d 798 (2009), in which an ineffective counsel appeal based on counsel's failure to request an accomplice instruction in a homicide trial was dismissed in favor of postconviction relief proceedings because plausible justifications existed for counsel's conduct that could not be addressed on appeal since the record did not resolve the factual questions surrounding counsel's actions.

Former Rule 3. Commencement of action

Lack of Standing of Person Who Fails to Allege Personal Interest or Injury: Fleenor brought an action for violation of her right to know and right to participate in a school district's decision to hire a new superintendent on grounds that she was not properly notified of votes. The suit was brought by Fleenor as a citizen of Montana and resident of the county and the school district. The District Court dismissed the suit for lack of standing, and Fleenor appealed, asserting that standing existed by virtue of her status as an interested party and that a liberal interpretation of the constitution regarding a citizen's right to know and participate included anyone with an interest in enforcing the broad constitutional policies and protections. The Supreme Court disagreed. To establish standing, a complaining party must clearly allege a past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or a civil right and allege that the injury is personal to the claimant and distinguishable from injury to the public generally. Additionally, the challenged action must result in a concrete adverseness personal to the party staking a claim in the outcome. However, simply being an informed and interested citizen is insufficient to confer standing. Fleenor made no assertion of injury and did not establish a personal, concrete adverseness that would result from the school district's action and thus failed to meet the threshold for establishing standing. The District Court was affirmed. Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006), following Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4 (1990), Carter v. Dept. of Transportation, 274 M 39, 905 P2d 1102 (1995), and Bryan v. Yellowstone County Elementary School District No. 2, 2002 MT 264, 312 M 257, 60 P3d 381 (2002), and followed in Lohmeier v. Gallatin County, 2006 MT 88, 332 M 39, 135 P3d 775 (2006), and, with regard to criteria to establish standing, in Bd. of Trustees, Cut Bank Pub. Schools v. Cut Bank Pioneer Press, 2007 MT 115, 337 M 229, 160 P3d 482 (2007). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 38, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-33-301 with this rule in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires that Rule 38 and this rule be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under Rule 38 for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Commencement of Action — Counterclaim and Third-Party Complaint: This rule provides that a civil action is commenced by filing a complaint. Thus, in determining when an action is commenced for the purposes of the Statute of Limitations in a libel action based upon allegations made in the original complaint, the date of filing the counterclaim and third-party complaint in libel is the commencement of the action, not the date 1½ years earlier when a motion for leave to file a motion to strike, amended answer, counterclaim, and third-party complaint was filed. Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871 (1980).

Jurisdiction of Court Invoked by Complaint: The District Court is a court of general jurisdiction, and has power to hear and determine all classes of cases, except petty cases, of which exclusive jurisdiction is given Justice's and police Courts by the 1889 Montana Constitution (now Art. VII, sec. 4 and 5, 1972 Mont. Const.); but it can acquire jurisdiction of a particular civil case only by the filing of a written complaint. Crawford v. Pierse, 56 M 371, 185 P 315 (1919), explained in State ex rel. Delmoe v. District Court, 100 M 131, 46 P2d 39 (1935).

Action "Commenced" by Complaint: Until a complaint is filed in a civil action, no action is commenced or can be pending. State ex rel. Working v. Mayor, 43 M 61, 114 P 777 (1911).

Statute of Limitations: A complaint filed within 6 years confers jurisdiction, though the summons is not served within that time. Haupt v. Burton, 21 M 572, 55 P 110 (1898).

Former Rule 4. Persons subject to jurisdiction — process — service

Unincorporated Association Considered Person Subject to Suit: MacPheat filed a libel complaint against Schauf and the insurance company association to which Schauf belonged, claiming that Schauf wrote a libelous letter on the association letterhead to the judge who was presiding over one of MacPheat's criminal proceedings. The association moved to be removed from the action, asserting that it was simply a federally registered service mark and not a person or legal entity subject to service of process. The District Court agreed and dismissed the association from the suit. MacPheat appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The association made the same service mark argument in Oliver v. Farmers Ins. Group of Cos., 941 P2d 985 (Okla. 1997). In that case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court acknowledged that under traditional common law, a voluntary, unincorporated association could not be sued under its name because it did not have a legal status apart from that of its individual members, but that because of the unjustness of the rule in present day society, the rule has been modified in many jurisdictions. The Oklahoma court dismissed the service mark argument, because whatever else the association did, it clearly had a name under which a number of companies insured against risks for profit. The Montana Supreme Court found that reasoning persuasive. An unincorporated association was defined in Assoc. Press v. Mont. Senate Republican Caucus, 286 M 172, 951 P2d 65 (1997), as a voluntary group of persons, without a charter, formed by mutual consent for the purpose of promoting a common enterprise or prosecuting a common objective. The association in this case was thus considered a person within the definition in Rule 4A, M.R.Civ.P., and to conclude otherwise and sanction the association's intangible classification would unnecessarily restrict those who can be sued in Montana courts and fly in the face of Montana's constitutional open courts provision. The association name was one under which its affiliates transacted business, so MacPheat could properly serve and bring suit against the association under 25-5-104 without naming and serving process on the members individually. However, once the association was brought before the court, MacPheat still had the burden of establishing the liability of the association's members, if any, under the applicable substantive law. MacPheat v. Schauf, 2002 MT 23, 308 M 215, 41 P3d 895 (2002).

Defective Service — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Questions of defective service may be raised only by a person upon whom the allegedly defective service was made, a rule that applies equally to parties and intervenors. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Service of Compliance Order on City — No Personal Service on Mayor Required — Particular Statute Control General: City's contention that service of compliance order was defective personal service because served on City Clerk and not Mayor was erroneous as express provisions relating to service of compliance order under Montana water pollution act control over general statutes relating to service of process in a civil action upon a municipality. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Livingston, 169 M 431, 548 P2d 155 (1976).

Out of State for Purpose of Statute of Limitations: When process was available at the time accident occurred to bring defendant before court, defendant was not out of state for purposes of Statute of Limitations. Baker v. Ferguson Research, Inc., 61 F.R.D. 637 (D.C. Mont. 1974); State ex rel. McGhee v. District Court, 162 M 31, 508 P2d 130 (1973).

Political Caucuses Considered Person Subject to Suit: A political party caucus is by definition considered an unincorporated association or body of two or more persons having a joint or common interest. Drawing no distinction between presession and session caucuses, the Supreme Court held, on the basis of the plain language in this rule, that a political party caucus is a person subject to court jurisdiction. Assoc. Press v. Mont. Senate Republican Caucus, 286 M 172, 951 P2d 65, 54 St. Rep. 1360 (1997).

GENERAL

Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction — District Court's Proceedings Void: Seven years of probate proceedings before a District Court were void because the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121.

Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Defendant Unreasonable — Jurisdiction Denied: Bunch purchased an airplane in Oregon and died in a crash in Montana while on a flight from Minnesota. Bunch's wife filed a product liability, negligence, and breach of warranty claim in Montana against the aircraft designers, manufacturers, and sellers, who were all out-of-state corporations. Defendants moved to dismiss the claims for lack of personal jurisdiction on grounds that they had no contacts with Montana other than the fact that their products were involved in the crash that occurred here and argued that the exercise of personal jurisdiction in Montana would be unreasonable and would not comport with due process. Bunch argued that personal jurisdiction was proper because defendants established minimum contacts with Montana when they distributed their products into the interstate stream of commerce and thus submitted themselves to jurisdiction in all states where their products might cause injury. Bunch also moved for jurisdictional discovery. The District Court agreed with defendants that personal jurisdiction did not apply, but the court concluded that because the alleged tort occurred in Montana, the exercise of long-arm jurisdiction was proper. The court then went on to consider whether the exercise of long-arm jurisdiction comported with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, applying the test adopted in Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372 (1983), and followed in B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co, 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004), for determining whether the exercise of jurisdiction comports with due process: (1) did the nonresident defendant do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act to purposefully avail himself of the privilege of conducting business in the forum, thereby invoking its laws; (2) did the claim arise out of or result from defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) would the exercise of jurisdiction be reasonable? The court concluded that defendants had not purposefully availed themselves of Montana law, that the claim did not arise from defendants' forum-related activities because the claim arose solely from the random, fortuitous, and unilateral activity of Bunch in flying to Montana, and that under the criteria set out in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 US 286 (1980), jurisdiction would not comport with notions of fair play and substantial justice, so the court dismissed the claims for lack of personal jurisdiction. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. For a Montana court to exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, two questions must be answered: (1) does the nonresident come within the provisions of Montana's long-arm jurisdiction statute; and (2) would exercise of long-arm jurisdiction comport with notions of fair play and substantial justice? In this case, the District Court correctly concluded that specific long-arm jurisdiction would be appropriate because the alleged tort accrued in Montana, but the court properly analyzed the personal jurisdiction question under Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P., in determining that personal jurisdiction would not comport with due process and would be unreasonable under these circumstances. Thus, defendants' motions to dismiss were properly granted and Bunch's motion for jurisdictional discovery was properly denied. Bunch v. Lancair Int'l, Inc., 2009 MT 29, 349 M 144, 202 P3d 784 (2009), distinguishing Rockwell Int'l Corp. v. Costruzioni Aeronautiche Giovanni Agusta, 553 F. Supp. 328 (E. Dist. Penn. 1982), and Vibratech, Inc. v. Frost, 661 S.E.2d 185 (Ga. App. 2008).

No Abuse of Discretion in Montana Court's Failure to Stay Proceedings Pending Outcome of North Dakota Proceedings: Defendant North Dakota insurance company claimed that, on grounds of comity, a Montana District Court abused its discretion by denying a motion to stay proceedings in the Montana court pending the outcome of defendant's motion for a declaratory judgment in the North Dakota courts concerning insurance stacking issues. The Supreme Court disagreed and found no abuse of discretion. Both states had an interest in the stacking issue, and both states were entitled to comity. It was within the judicial competency of the Montana court to decide the issue in the interests of preventing piecemeal litigation. Additionally, the fact that defendant sought to delay the issue in Montana in hopes of achieving a more favorable decision in North Dakota belied the comity argument. Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008), following Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372 (1983).

District Court's Subject Matter Jurisdiction Not Affected by Party's Lack of Standing — Appeal of Board of Adjustment Decision: Defendants asserted that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over them because plaintiffs failed to establish standing to challenge a boundary line relocation. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants mistakenly linked the requirement that a court have subject matter jurisdiction with the requirement that a plaintiff have standing to sue. Both are required, but they are not interdependent. Subject matter jurisdiction refers to a court's power to hear a particular type of case, while standing refers to the threshold justiciability requirement that a plaintiff have a personal stake in a particular case. If a plaintiff lacks standing, a court can grant no relief because a justiciable controversy does not exist, but a party's lack of standing does not deprive a District Court of subject matter jurisdiction. A court lacks the power to resolve a case brought by a party without standing because that party can present no actual case or controversy, not because the court has been stripped of subject matter jurisdiction. Here, the District Court had statutory subject matter jurisdiction under 76-2-327 to hear the boundary line appeal of the City Board of Adjustment decision and determined that plaintiffs had standing to challenge the boundary relocation. Even though defendants stylized the appeal as a subject matter jurisdiction issue, which may be appealed by interlocutory appeal prior to final judgment, the actual issue was the District Court's ruling on plaintiffs' standing, which the Supreme Court will not review prior to final judgment. Defendants' appeal was therefore premature, so the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal and remanded for further proceedings. Ballas v. Missoula City Bd. of Adjustment, 2007 MT 299, 340 M 56, 172 P3d 1232 (2007).

Validity of Forum Selection Language in Employment Contract: A clause in an employment contract provided that in case of disputes, venue for enforcement of the contract would be in the state District Courts of Lewis and Clark County, Montana, or in the district of choice set by the independent contractor. A dispute arose, and plaintiff independent contractor sought to enforce the contract in Lewis and Clark County. Defendant moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, and the motion was granted on grounds that the contract's forum clause did not give the court personal jurisdiction over defendant, a resident of Illinois. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As held in May v. Figgins, 186 M 383, 607 P2d 1132 (1980), parties to a contract may agree in advance to submit to the jurisdiction of a given court, and as such, forum selection clauses are prima facie valid and should be enforced unless the resisting party shows that the agreement was not deliberately and understandably made and that the contractual language did not clearly, unequivocally, and unambiguously express a waiver of personal jurisdiction. In this case, the parties knowingly consented to personal jurisdiction in Montana and the forum selection clause was clear and unambiguous. The case was remanded for further proceedings in the Montana court. Milanovich v. Schnibben, 2007 MT 128, 337 M 334, 160 P3d 562 (2007).

Justiciable Controversy Created by Intervention of Child Support Enforcement Division With Continuing District Court Jurisdiction Over Child Support Orders: As part of a marriage dissolution, the District Court ordered that the husband pay monthly child support in a specific amount. The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) subsequently notified the court that it intended to modify the order pursuant to its authority in 40-5-272 and 40-5-273. The court, sua sponte, then enjoined CSED from modifying any child support orders issued by a Montana District Court, asserting that CSED's actions in modifying a court order violated the constitutional separation of powers clause. On appeal, CSED maintained that this case did not present a justiciable controversy, primarily because neither party to the dissolution action challenged the constitutionality of the statutes in question, and that the court was therefore without jurisdiction to decide the issue. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding that a justiciable controversy did exist. Once the original equitable jurisdiction of the District Court was invoked in the dissolution action, the court retained continuing jurisdiction following entry of the child support order. As a result, the court properly used its inherent authority to protect both its continuing jurisdiction and the husband's right not to be adversely affected by an act of CSED that the court considered unconstitutional. Further, the court had personal jurisdiction over CSED because CSED's notification that it intended to intervene interjected CSED into the ongoing matter, constituting a voluntary appearance into the case under this rule and vesting personal jurisdiction over CSED with the District Court. Seubert v. Seubert, 2000 MT 241, 301 M 382, 13 P3d 365, 57 St. Rep. 1006 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Harper, 235 M 41, 764 P2d 1283 (1988), and Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112 (1997).

Lex Loci Delicti Commissi Abandoned — "Most Significant Relationship" Approach Adopted as Choice of Law to Determine Applicable Substantive Law in Issues of Tort: In a personal injury/product liability/wrongful death action in which there is a potential conflict of laws, the traditional choice of law rule, known as lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where the wrong was committed), which provides that the infliction of injury is actionable under the law of the state in which it was received, was abandoned in favor of the approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(1) (1971), which seeks to apply the law of the state with the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. This choice of law was adopted previously in contract disputes in Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and the Supreme Court found no reason not to apply it to tort issues in favor of the traditional rule in the present case. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000).

Defendant Not "Found Within" Montana — No Substantial, Systematic, Continuous Presence in State Through Advertising, Website, or Dealership — Jurisdiction Precluded: Any person found within Montana is subject to general jurisdiction of Montana courts. To be "found within" Montana, a defendant's activities must be substantial, systematic, and continuous. (See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Wash., 326 US 310, 90 L Ed 95, 66 S Ct 154 (1945).) Bedrejo contended that Triple E Canada, Ltd.'s (Triple E) advertising in national magazines, its Internet website, its travel club, and its out-of-state dealerships that served at least three Montanans established Triple E's presence within Montana. The Supreme Court found that these activities did not meet the Int'l Shoe standard. The court cited Bensusan Restaurant Corp. v. King, 937 F. Supp. 295 (S.D.C. N.Y. 1996), and Millennium Enterprises, Inc. v. Millennium Music LP, 33 F. Supp. 907 (D.C. Oreg. 1999), in rejecting the argument that the availability to a website from Montana could be construed as a basis for long-arm jurisdiction. Also, mere placement of advertisements in nationally distributed papers or journals does not rise to the level of purposeful contact with a forum in order to exercise personal jurisdiction over the advertiser, as determined in Federated Rural Elec. Ins. v. Kootenai Elec. Co-op, 17 F3d 1302 (10th Cir. 1994). Further, Triple E was not registered as a Montana business; had no employees, distributors, dealers, office, warehouse, or other real property in Montana; had no telephone listing in Montana; and did no direct advertising with Montana media. Any entry by Triple E into the state amounted to only an insignificant trickle in the stream of commerce; thus, jurisdiction by Montana courts would have been unreasonable. Bedrejo v. Triple E Canada, Ltd., 1999 MT 200, 295 M 430, 984 P2d 739, 56 St. Rep. 778 (1999), following Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983), and followed in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Child Support — No Jurisdiction Over Father When No Minimum Contacts by Father With Montana: Verleen and Howard were divorced in California, and Howard was ordered to pay child support. Thereafter, Verleen moved with the children to Montana, where she sought and obtained a decree in Missoula County to modify the California court order with respect to visitation and the amount of child support. Howard was personally served in California but did not respond to the motion. Later, Verleen obtained a default judgment against Howard. Later still, Verleen sought an order in California that Howard's home be sold to satisfy the Montana judgments. Howard responded that the Montana court had no jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that while a question of waiver was raised because of Howard's failure to raise the issue of personal jurisdiction under a Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion, the correct analysis is whether the District Court ever had personal jurisdiction over Howard. The Supreme Court held that because the requirements of 40-4-210 had not been satisfied, the only method under which jurisdiction could otherwise obtain was under this rule. Citing Kulko v. Calif. Superior Court, 436 US 84 (1978), the Supreme Court held that there were simply no facts to suggest that Howard had any "minimum contacts" with Montana to warrant a Montana court obtaining jurisdiction over him because Howard's only connection with Montana is that his children now reside here. Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171, 50 St. Rep. 1141 (1993).

No General or Long-Arm Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Subcontractor: At the request of plaintiff, a Montana contractor, a Utah tile company submitted a bid for tile work by telephone. After being awarded the contract, the Utah company discovered a mistake in its bid and informed defendant that it could not perform the job. Finding jurisdiction over the Utah company, the District Court ordered the company to pay damages. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that neither submitting a bid nor entering into a contract with the Montana contractor constitutes "substantial contracts" sufficient enough to invoke general jurisdiction or long-arm jurisdiction over the Utah company. Edsall Constr. Co., Inc. v. Robinson, 246 M 378, 804 P2d 1039, 48 St. Rep. 75 (1991), followed in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Initial Appearance — Appearance General — Waiver of All Irregularities: Defendants' attorney made an initial appearance to vacate a default judgment without reserving the question of personal jurisdiction. As a result, defendants' appearance was general and waived all irregularities in the service of process. Spencer v. Ukra, 246 M 430, 804 P2d 380, 48 St. Rep. 25 (1991), distinguished in MacPheat v. Schauf, 1998 MT 250, 291 M 182, 969 P2d 265, 55 St. Rep. 1032 (1998). However, see The Milky Whey, Inc. v. Dairy Partners, LLC, 2015 MT 18, 378 Mont. 75, 342 P.3d 13, holding that under new Rule 4, M.R.Civ.P., a notice of appearance is not a responsive pleading and does not acquiesce to the jurisdiction of the court unless it is accompanied by a motion or a responsive pleading.

Factors in Determining Reasonableness of Jurisdiction: In determining the reasonableness of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court cited the factors set out in Jackson v. Kroll, 223 M 161, 724 P2d 717 (1986): (1) the extent of defendant's purposeful interjection into Montana; (2) the burden on defendant of defending in Montana; (3) the extent of conflict with the sovereignty of defendant's state; (4) Montana's interest in adjudicating the dispute; (5) the most efficient resolution of the controversy; (6) the importance of Montana to plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief; and (7) the existence of an alternative forum. Once plaintiff shows that defendant has purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, a presumption of reasonableness arises that defendant can overcome only by presenting a compelling case that jurisdiction would be unreasonable. Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 244 M 75, 796 P2d 189, 47 St. Rep. 1397 (1990).

Contact Due to Unilateral Activity — No Jurisdiction: Plaintiff moved to Montana and filed suit against her New York dentist. Even though the exercise of personal jurisdiction was proper under this rule, defendant did not purposefully avail itself of Montana law or direct its commercial activity toward Montana. Defendant's contacts with Montana were due solely to plaintiff's unilateral activities. Assertion of personal jurisdiction over defendant would violate due process. Petrik v. Pub. Serv. Mut. Ins. Co., 879 F2d 682 (9th Cir. 1989).

Preliminary Hearing Procedure Appropriate to Determine Personal Jurisdiction Dispute: A preliminary hearing by the District Court pursuant to Rule 12(d), M.R.Civ.P., is the appropriate procedure if there are material facts in dispute regarding whether the court has personal jurisdiction. If there are jurisdictional facts intertwined with facts involving the merits of the case, the court may determine its jurisdiction in a plenary pretrial proceeding. Minuteman Aviation, Inc. v. Swearingen, 237 M 207, 772 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 741 (1989), followed in Bunch v. Lancair Int'l, Inc., 2009 MT 29, 349 M 144, 202 P3d 784 (2009), to the extent that when material jurisdictional facts are disputed, the District Court has discretion to permit discovery to resolve any factual issues.

Lack of Jurisdiction — Lack of Power to Adjudicate: Generally, courts lacking subject matter jurisdiction over a cause of action have no power to adjudicate issues in the action. Sterrett v. Milk River Prod. Credit Ass'n, 234 M 459, 764 P2d 467, 45 St. Rep. 2048 (1988).

Legal Malpractice as Tort Action Sufficient to Establish Jurisdiction of Out-of-State Attorney: A claim for legal malpractice falls within the definition of tort action as set forth in subsection (1)(b) of this Rule and is sufficient to establish court jurisdiction over an out-of-state attorney who is not within the state for general jurisdictional purposes. Turner v. Tranakos, 229 M 51, 744 P2d 898, 44 St. Rep. 1772 (1987).

Long-Arm Jurisdiction — Test: The Supreme Court applies the following three-part test, articulated in Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983), for determining if a Montana court may exercise "long-arm jurisdiction" over a defendant whose activities are neither substantial nor sufficiently continuous and systematic to invoke general jurisdiction: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction within the forum or perform some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking its laws; (2) the claim must be one which arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable. Turner v. Tranakos, 229 M 51, 744 P2d 898, 44 St. Rep. 1772 (1987). This test was applied in Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 244 M 75, 796 P2d 189, 47 St. Rep. 1397 (1990). See also Bedrejo v. Triple E Canada, Ltd., 1999 MT 200, 295 M 430, 984 P2d 739, 56 St. Rep. 778 (1999), and Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Court to Consider Reasonableness of Exercise of Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Defendant: For a Montana court to exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, it must be satisfied that: (1) the resident defendant comes within the provisions of the long-arm statutes; and (2) the exercise of long-arm jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant comports with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983), followed in Columbia Falls Aluminum Co. v. Hindin/Owne/Engelke, Inc., 224 M 202, 728 P2d 1342, 43 St. Rep. 2132 (1986), Petrik v. Colby, 224 M 531, 730 P2d 1167, 43 St. Rep. 2392 (1986), Nelson v. San Joaquin Helicopters, 228 M 267, 742 P2d 447, 44 St. Rep. 1510 (1987), Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 244 M 75, 796 P2d 189, 47 St. Rep. 1397 (1990), Bedrejo v. Triple E Canada, Ltd., 1999 MT 200, 295 M 430, 984 P2d 739, 56 St. Rep. 778 (1999), and B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co., 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004).

Nonresident Laboratory Subjected to Suit Under Long-Arm Statute — Exercise of Jurisdiction Unreasonable — Violation of Due Process: Since 1977, the Montana Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the agency responsible under Title 50, ch. 19, part 2, for the testing of newborns for metabolic disorders, has contracted with an Oregon state laboratory for the testing. Plaintiff's minor son was born in June 1977. A sample of his blood was sent to the Oregon laboratory. No abnormality was reported. A few months later the son exhibited symptoms of a metabolic disorder, and treatment was begun in September 1977. After first filing an action in Oregon, which was later dismissed on procedural grounds, plaintiff filed a negligence action in Montana against the states of Montana and Oregon, alleging that the delay in treatment had caused his son permanent and irreparable brain and neuromuscular damage. The trial court dismissed the action against the state of Oregon on jurisdictional grounds. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although both subsections (b) and (e) of Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P., potentially confer jurisdiction over the state of Oregon in this case, it would be a denial of due process for the Montana state courts to exercise that jurisdiction. The court found that Oregon had not structured its activities in such a way as to purposely avail itself of the privilege of functioning in Montana. Further, the court ruled that an evaluation of the interests of sovereignty, efficiency of resolution, and provision of important interstate medical services compels the conclusion that it would be unreasonable in this case to exercise jurisdiction over the state of Oregon. Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983). See also Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Enforcement of Foreign Judgment — Lack of Personal Jurisdiction:

A default judgment was obtained in Colorado against defendants, Montana residents, in a case which arose from defendants' participation in a reciprocal interinsurance agreement. Some of the subscribers to the agreement were Colorado residents. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to enforce the judgment in Montana, ruling that enforcement of the judgment would be a violation of the federal due process clause because the defendants had not had sufficient "minimum contacts" with the state of Colorado to warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The court stated that the provision of the Colorado long-arm statute that covered causes of action arising from "contracting to insure any person, property or risk residing or located within this state at the time of contracting" was not applicable because this was not the sort of "company" that was contemplated when the long-arm statutes were drafted. The court further stated that the defendants did not know the name of the insurance company which issued the policy and had not purposely availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities within the state of Colorado. Benham v. Woltermann, 201 M 149, 653 P2d 135, 39 St. Rep. 2017 (1982).

Figgins entered into a collective bargaining agreement with the Teamsters Union. The agreement contained provisions concerning payment to the Teamsters Pension Trust Fund located in Seattle. The agreement did not specify where the contributions were to be made, but Figgins agreed to execute all necessary forms. One form designated a bank in Colorado as the depositary bank. Figgins sent payments to the Colorado bank. Later, Figgins was audited and an action brought in Colorado to collect delinquent contributions. Figgins did not defend the Colorado suit. Plaintiff brought suit in Montana to enforce the Colorado default judgment. The Montana Supreme Court said that Figgins did not have sufficient contacts or ties to the State of Colorado to make it reasonable and just, according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice, to enforce the Colorado judgment. May v. Figgins, 186 M 383, 607 P2d 1132 (1980).

Jurisdiction of State Court Over Nonresident Federally Chartered Bank — Sufficiency of Evidence — Denial of Due Process and Equal Protection: Officers of the plaintiff corporation traveled to Reno, Nevada, to deposit money in the defendant branch bank in anticipation of business in Nevada and later brought an action in a Montana District Court against the defendant for unlawful dishonor of a check and associated charges. The District Court did not err in dismissing the action for lack of jurisdiction. Under the provisions of 12 U.S.C. § 94, a federally chartered bank may be sued, among other places, where it is "located". The U.S. Supreme Court in Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Bougas, 434 US 35 (1977), construed the term "located" to mean wherever branch offices are found. Because there is no branch bank in Montana and there has been no business operation conducted by the defendant in Montana that would constitute a waiver of the protection of federal law, the District Court had no jurisdiction. There was, moreover, sufficient evidence before the District Court for it to make the determination that there was no voluntary waiver and the U.S. Supreme Court has held in Mercantile Nat'l Bank at Dallas v. Langdeau, 371 US 555 (1963), that Congress "unquestionably" has the authority to determine those situations in which national banks can be sued. Hamelly Int'l, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank of Nev., 199 M 221, 648 P2d 282, 39 St. Rep. 1304 (1982).

Involvement in Another Lawsuit as Insufficient Minimum Contact for Jurisdiction: The United Bank of Pueblo filed suit in 1970 seeking appointment of a receiver for Larry C. Iverson, Inc., on rescission of a land sale contract. In 1980, Bouma, a party to the contract, filed this suit, claiming violation of his civil rights. United Bank and other defendants claimed lack of in personam jurisdiction under Montana's "long-arm statute", alleging that they did not receive such benefits as a result of conducting business within Montana to establish the minimum contacts necessary for jurisdiction. The court held that the only contact of United Bank of Pueblo is its involvement in a suit in Montana District Court. State court litigation in pursuit of out-of-state obligations cannot subject a corporation to local jurisdiction. Neither does United Bank's ownership of stock in Larry C. Iverson, Inc., a Montana corporation, support a claim of jurisdiction; United Bank's motion to dismiss was granted. Bouma v. Larry C. Iverson, Inc., 38 St. Rep. 765 (D.C. Mont. 1981) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Defendant Subject to Process — Absence From State No Bar to Statute of Limitations: Harmer sued Antimony for attorney fees, and Antimony counterclaimed, sounding in fraud. The court concluded that Antimony knew of Harmer's relationship with Resources (a corporation contracting with Antimony), and therefore the counterclaim is barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations, 27-2-203. Harmer's contacts with Montana were such as to subject him to the reach of Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P., and therefore the Statute of Limitations is not tolled by 27-2-402. Harmer v. Laurence, 37 St. Rep. 1333 (D.C. Mont. 1980) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Known Out-of-State Address — No Tolling of Statute of Limitations: When persons involved in a tort who were residents of the state at its occurrence subsequently moved to another state, and plaintiff insurance company was aware of their address, the Statute of Limitations didn't toll due to absence from the state under 27-2-402 because Montana District Courts had jurisdiction under this rule and process could be served under the "long-arm statute", Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Proper Forum Selection — F.E.L.A. Actions: With the plaintiff, the scene of the injury, and most of the witnesses in Idaho, a suit for personal injuries filed in Montana was improperly dismissed by the District Court under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. The Supreme Court reversed stating that the doctrine must be tempered by an open-door policy and that the doctrine should not presently be applied to Federal Employer's Liability Act (F.E.L.A.) actions. Bevacqua v. Burlington N., Inc., 183 M 237, 598 P2d 1124 (1979).

Custody — Personal Jurisdiction Unnecessary: Personal jurisdiction over a parent is not necessary to the termination of his parental rights to a minor child so long as the parent has actual notice of the termination or the District Court makes an effort reasonably calculated to provide notice to the parent. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Forum Non Conveniens Not Applicable in F.E.L.A. Suits: The doctrine of forum non conveniens is not applicable to a Federal Employer's Liability Act (F.E.L.A.) suit filed in a Montana District Court. There is a strong policy favoring plaintiff's forum selection in F.E.L.A. cases, and the Montana Constitution states that the courts of justice must be open to all persons. Labella v. Burlington N., Inc., 182 M 202, 595 P2d 1184 (1979).

Jurisdictional Defense Lost — Scope of Jurisdiction Over Nonresidents: Defendant could not inject plea of lack of jurisdiction over the person after filing motion asserting lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Jurisdiction is proper over nonresident buyer purchasing through nonresident agent when one payment was made directly to and one order was made directly with resident seller. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

Effect of Misnomer: For ramifications of complaint filed against nonexisting defendant due to misnomer being used, see Wentz v. Alberto Culver Co., 294 F. Supp. 1327 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Retroactivity of Rules of Procedure: Although legislative intent to give retrospective force to a statute must appear and all doubt will be resolved against retrospective application, the Rules of Civil Procedure apply retrospectively. State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966); Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 34 F.R.D. 515 (D.C. Mont. 1964); Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Defendants Named Not Served: Persons named as defendants, but who were not served with process and did not enter an appearance, were not parties to the action for the purpose of determining their entitlement to witness fees. Nelson v. Mont. Iron Min. Co., 140 M 331, 371 P2d 874 (1962).

Service of Summons Prior to Effective Date: The giving effect to the service of summons provisions of this rule, when the operative facts of the case to which the rule was applied had taken place prior to the effective date of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure as set out in Rule 86(a), was not a prohibited retroactive application of this rule within the meaning of 1-2-109. Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Motion to Quash and Order to File Answer — No Waiver of Objection: Under former law, a defendant who appears specially to test the jurisdiction of the court by motion to quash an alleged defective service of summons and reserves his exception to an adverse ruling upon his motion does not waive his objection to jurisdiction by obeying the order of the court directing him to file his answer within a stated time. State ex rel. NW. Eng'r Co. v. District Court, 114 M 179, 133 P2d 594 (1943).

PERSON FOUND WITHIN STATE

Jurisdiction of Montana Courts Over Wrongful Discharge Case Involving Montana Citizen When Montana Law Applies — Dismissal for Lack of Jurisdiction Reversed: Plaintiff was a Montana resident hired by a Florida corporation, which was operated out of Oklahoma, to lay fiber optic cable throughout the country. While working in Indiana, plaintiff had a dispute with a supervisor and was fired. Plaintiff brought an action in Montana, claiming a violation of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court held that under 39-2-912, the Montana courts lacked subject matter jurisdiction and dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Even though plaintiff never signed a written employment contract, the court held that a contract provision may be broad enough to indicate that an entire contract be governed by the laws of the state governing the particular provision. The fact that the defendant corporation paid income taxes, unemployment insurance premiums, and wages in Montana indicated an intent to be governed by Montana law. The court also concluded that under sections 187 and 188 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971), the local law of the state with the most significant relationship to the transaction applies to questions of contract interpretation absent an effective choice of law by the parties. Plaintiff was considered a Montana resident despite the fact that employment required travel to other states, and the court concluded that it was appropriate to apply the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act to the case even though the Act does not expressly provide for extraterritorial jurisdiction. Montana courts have subject matter jurisdiction in cases involving a Montana resident when Montana law applies, so plaintiff's case should not have been dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Burchett

v. MasTec N. America, Inc., 2004 MT 177, 322 M 93, 93 P3d 1247 (2004). See also Dailey v. Transitron Electronic Corp., 475 F2d 12 (5th Cir. 1973), and Harrington v. Energy West, Inc., 2015 MT 233, 380 Mont. 298, 356 P.3d 441.

Forum State — Contacts Considered in Determining State With More Specific Relationship in Personal Injury or Wrongful Death Product Liability Action: Montana residents were killed in Kansas in a car made in Michigan and sold in North Carolina. Sections 146 and 175 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971) that deal with personal injury and wrongful death actions provide that the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the injury occurred unless, with respect to a particular issue, another state has a more specific relationship. In order to determine whether a state other than the place of injury has a more significant relationship, the following contacts are taken into account, pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(2) (1971), applying the principles of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6 (1971): (1) needs of the interstate and international system; (2) policies of the interested states, including place of injury, place of conduct, and residence of the parties; (3) justified expectations; (4) basic policies underlying the particular field of law; and (5) the certainty, predictability, and uniformity of result as well as the ease in the determination and application of the law to be applied. However, the principles need not be given equal weight. In this case, the relevant policies of the interested states were of primary importance. The focus of Montana law is not only on the regulation of products sold in Montana, but also on providing the maximum protection and compensation to Montana residents, considering mainly the condition of the product and not the conduct of the manufacturer. Kansas, where the injury occurred, did not maintain a similar interest in the application of its product liability laws because the injured were Montana citizens. (See Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 282 M 168, 935 P2d 1139, 54 St. Rep. 299 (1997).) Michigan also lacked such an interest because Michigan's only contact with the dispute was the location of the manufacturer. (See Farrell v. Ford Motor Co., 501 NW 2d 567 (Mich. App. 1993). Under North Carolina's vested rights approach to conflict of laws, that state would apply the law of the jurisdiction where the injury occurred, whatever that law might be. After holding that the relevant residence of the plaintiff was the residence at the time of injury, the Supreme Court found that Montana, as the place of domicile, had a significant relationship to the issues and that because the purpose behind Montana product liability law was implicated by the facts, Montana law should apply. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Residence of Limited Partner in State Not Sufficient to Establish Residence of Limited Partnership for Jurisdictional Purposes: Lurie contended that because one of the partners of a limited partnership lived in Montana, the limited partnership itself was a resident for purposes of determining general jurisdiction, citing Carden v. Arkoma Associates, 494 US 185, 108 L Ed 2d 157, 110 S Ct 1015 (1990). The Supreme Court distinguished Carden because that case involved interpretation of a federal statute defining federal diversity of citizenship jurisdiction, while Montana courts apply state statutory law and the "minimum contacts" principles enunciated in Int'l Shoe Co. v. Wash., 326 US 310, 90 L Ed 95, 66 S Ct 154 (1945), and In re Estate of Ducey, 241 M 419, 787 P2d 749 (1990), to determine whether a defendant's activities are so substantial or systematic and continuous that it can be said that the defendant is "found" within the state. The mere fact that a limited partner resides in Montana does not mean that the limited partnership is therefore a person found in this state, nor does that fact establish the minimum contacts necessary to warrant a finding that the limited partnership can be found within the state for purposes of general jurisdiction. Lurie v. 8182 Md. Associates, 282 M 455, 938 P2d 676, 54 St. Rep. 429 (1997).

Claim for Overtime — Jurisdiction of Department of Labor and Industry: The Department of Labor and Industry had jurisdiction to hold a hearing and make a ruling on a heavy equipment operator's claim against his employer for overtime wages because: (1) it has a duty under 39-1-102 to enforce state wage laws affecting Montana citizens; (2) under 39-3-209, it must investigate alleged violations of such laws and institute actions for unpaid wages; (3) it may take assignments of wage claims in trust and maintain any proceeding to enforce the claims; (4) it may enforce the federal Fair Labor Standards Act and institute an action on behalf of an employee to recover overtime wages due and unpaid under that Act; and (5) traditional notions of jurisdiction gave the department jurisdiction, as employer and employee were Montana residents, employer's principal place of business was in Montana, the employment contract was entered into in Montana, and part of the work was performed here. To rule that since part of the work was performed in North Dakota there was no jurisdiction in the department would unduly burden the parties, would lead to an oppressive requirement that they litigate in each state a claim for wages allegedly due for work performed there, and would fractionalize employee's claim to the extent that its pursuit would not be worthwhile. Hoehne v. Sherrodd, Inc., 205 M 365, 668 P2d 232, 40 St. Rep. 1363 (1983), followed in America's Best Contractors, Inc. v. Singh, 2014 MT 70, 374 Mont. 254, 321 P.3d 95.

Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations: Jurisdiction over foreign corporation was proper and did not violate "fundamental fairness" or "minimum contacts" tests. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., 554 F. Supp. 1025 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (fraud, breach of warranties); Scanlan v. Norma Projektil Fabrik, 345 F. Supp. 292 (D.C. Mont. 1972) (tort, dynamite importation); Swanson Painting Co. v. Local 260, 391 F2d 523 (1968) (although majority of activity in federal enclave); Boyt v. Emmco Ins. Co., 271 F. Supp. 366 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (conversion); Bullard v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 263 F. Supp. 79 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972); Cont. Oil Co. v. Atwood & Morrill Co., 265 F. Supp. 692 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000); Yules v. G.M.C., 297 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1969); and Hartung v. Wash. Iron Works, 267 F. Supp. 408 (D.C. Mont. 1964) (tort, cableway).

Out-of-State Airline "Found Within Montana": An airline had no flights into or out of Montana, had no property or personnel in the state, and paid no taxes in the state. It solicited business in the state via advertising and provided a toll-free reservation service for its out-of-state flights. The airline's activities in the state were sufficient to declare it "found within Montana" for purposes of U.S. District Court in personam jurisdiction in the District of Missoula. Reed v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 197 M 34, 640 P2d 912, 39 St. Rep. 335 (1982), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

No Jurisdiction in Montana Courts Over Reservation Indian — URESA (Now UIFSA): The wife appealed the dismissal of her action seeking to enforce child support payments under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (now Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA)). The District Court ruled it had no jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court agreed there was neither subject matter jurisdiction nor personal jurisdiction. The husband was a Blackfeet Indian living on the reservation in Montana. Jurisdiction could not be found in federal enabling statutes because neither the tribe nor the state complied with them; there were no off-reservation acts in Montana sufficient to vest state courts with jurisdiction over the husband; and a reservation Indian's domicile on the reservation is not an in-state contact that grants jurisdiction to state courts. The father has not acquiesced in state jurisdiction and has challenged state court jurisdiction from the outset. The fact that there was no appeal from the tribal court, the only avenue open to the wife, to the federal court system was not an argument in favor of state court jurisdiction. There must be a legal basis supporting state jurisdiction. State ex rel. Flammond v. Flammond, 190 M 350, 621 P2d 471, 37 St. Rep. 1991 (1980).

Custody — Jurisdiction After Voluntary Appearance: When a father who could not be served in California appeared voluntarily in Montana for a custody hearing involving his daughter then living in Montana, the Montana court obtained personal jurisdiction over him. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Service of Process Within Exterior Boundaries of Indian Reservation: Service of process on Indian defendant in divorce action was effective where marriage took place off the reservation; service of process on Indian reservation was not violation of Indian tribe's sovereignty under United States law. Bad Horse v. Bad Horse, 163 M 445, 517 P2d 893 (1974), certiorari denied, 419 US 847 (1974), distinguished in Fisher v. District Court, 424 US 382, 96 S Ct 943 (1976).

Corporations — Mere Solicitation and Shipping — Inference of Jurisdiction: A corporation is not "found within the state" unless it has agents or officers upon whom process may be served or unless its business has been of such character and extent to warrant an inference that it has subjected itself to jurisdiction within the state. Mere solicitation and shipping into the state does not evoke that inference. McIntosh v. Heil Co., 350 F. Supp. 866 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Voluntary Appearance by Defendant: A voluntary appearance by a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and a copy of the complaint upon him. Strnod v. Abadie, 141 M 224, 376 P2d 730 (1962).

TRANSACTING BUSINESS IN STATE

Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Business — Exercise of Long-Arm Jurisdiction Proper: The nonresident defendant business conducted sufficient business in Montana to support the extension of long-arm jurisdiction over the defendant when the defendant knew that the plaintiff intended to use the defendant's product in its Montana business, the defendant had previously sold its product to the plaintiff, and the defendant had serviced its product through other Montana businesses. Further, because the defendant purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting business in Montana, resulting in the plaintiff's alleged injury in Montana, and because the defendant reasonably could have anticipated defending itself in Montana, Montana's exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant comported with due process. Grizzly Sec. Armored Express, Inc. v. The Armored Group, LLC, 2011 MT 128, 360 Mont. 517, 255 P.3d 143.

No Grounds for Exercising Personal Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation That Was Not Party to Livestock Sales Contract: Semenza sold cattle to Kniss, and the sale was paid through a wire transfer from Stockman's Livestock Order Buying, Inc. (Stockman's), an Oklahoma corporation. Semenza sold a second lot of cattle to Kniss and received another wire transfer from Stockman's, but the amount was $52,000 less than the price that was orally agreed on between Semenza and Kniss. Semenza brought a breach of contract action against Kniss and Stockman's, arguing that the District Court had personal jurisdiction over Stockman's via Kniss's ostensible agency. The Supreme Court held that no agency relationship existed as a matter of law. Absent an agency relationship and any evidence that Stockman's was a party to the contract for sale of the cattle or that Stockman's actually conducted business in Montana, there were no grounds for personal jurisdiction by the Montana Court over Stockman's, and the District Court properly granted summary judgment to Stockman's for lack of jurisdiction. Semenza v. Kniss, 2008 MT 238, 344 M 427, 189 P3d 1188 (2008).

Initial Contact by Nonresident to Do Business Not Required: An out-of-state company does not have to make the initial contact with a Montana resident to do business for jurisdiction to attach under this rule. B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co., 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004).

Jurisdiction Proper in Defendant's State — Effect on Montana Jurisdiction: Whether the state of a nonresident company's place of business might be a proper jurisdiction for action against the company by a Montana company has no bearing on whether jurisdiction may also be had in Montana. B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co., 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004).

Nonresident Company Negotiating and Filling Contracts for Eight Years: Defendant, a nonresident company, negotiated contracts for and sold the plaintiff resident company metal latches for 8 years and then solicited and did business with another resident company. This was sufficient contact with Montana for defendant to be subject to jurisdiction under this rule. The exercise of jurisdiction was fundamentally fair and did not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice as embodied in the due process clause. B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co., 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004).

No Accrual of Tort Action in Montana — Dismissal for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Proper: Plaintiff, a Montana corporation, filed a complaint against defendants' company, a Pennsylvania corporation, for breach of contract, claiming damages of $74,500. Defendants removed the case to federal District Court. However, because the minimum amount in controversy necessary to confer federal diversity jurisdiction is $75,000, the federal court remanded back to Montana state court. Defendants then moved to dismiss the case for lack of personal jurisdiction. Dismissal was granted, and plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court applied the test in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359 (2000), to determine whether the Montana court could exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. The court noted that a nonresident is not subject to Montana jurisdiction by merely entering into a contract with a Montana resident, but rather there must be a showing that the complaint arose from business that was transacted within Montana. Here, the actions that gave rise to the alleged torts occurred outside Montana and thus did not result in the accrual of a tort action in Montana. Therefore, the District Court did not err in holding that it lacked personal jurisdiction over defendants, and dismissal of the case was proper. Cimmaron Corp. v. Smith, 2003 MT 73, 315 M 1, 67 P3d 258 (2003). See also Bird v. Hiller, 270 M 467, 892 P2d 931 (1995), and Tackett v. Duncan, 2014 MT 253, 376 Mont. 348, 334 P.3d 920.

Defendant Not "Found Within" Montana — No Substantial, Systematic, Continuous Presence in State Through Advertising, Website, or Dealership — Jurisdiction Precluded: Any person found within Montana is subject to general jurisdiction of Montana courts. To be "found within" Montana, a defendant's activities must be substantial, systematic, and continuous. (See Int'l Shoe Co. v. Wash., 326 US 310, 90 L Ed 95, 66 S Ct 154 (1945).) Bedrejo contended that Triple E Canada, Ltd.'s (Triple E) advertising in national magazines, its Internet website, its travel club, and its out-of-state dealerships that served at least three Montanans established Triple E's presence within Montana. The Supreme Court found that these activities did not meet the Int'l Shoe standard. The court cited Bensusan Restaurant Corp. v. King, 937 F. Supp. 295 (S.D.C. N.Y. 1996), and Millennium Enterprises, Inc. v. Millennium Music LP, 33 F. Supp. 907 (D.C. Oreg. 1999), in rejecting the argument that the availability to a website from Montana could be construed as a basis for long-arm jurisdiction. Also, mere placement of advertisements in nationally distributed papers or journals does not rise to the level of purposeful contact with a forum in order to exercise personal jurisdiction over the advertiser, as determined in Federated Rural Elec. Ins. v. Kootenai Elec. Co-op, 17 F3d 1302 (10th Cir. 1994). Further, Triple E was not registered as a Montana business; had no employees, distributors, dealers, office, warehouse, or other real property in Montana; had no telephone listing in Montana; and did no direct advertising with Montana media. Any entry by Triple E into the state amounted to only an insignificant trickle in the stream of commerce; thus, jurisdiction by Montana courts would have been unreasonable. Bedrejo v. Triple E Canada, Ltd., 1999 MT 200, 295 M 430, 984 P2d 739, 56 St. Rep. 778 (1999), following Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983), and followed in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

No General or Long-Arm Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Subcontractor: At the request of plaintiff, a Montana contractor, a Utah tile company submitted a bid for tile work by telephone. After being awarded the contract, the Utah company discovered a mistake in its bid and informed defendant that it could not perform the job. Finding jurisdiction over the Utah company, the District Court ordered the company to pay damages. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that neither submitting a bid nor entering into a contract with the Montana contractor constitutes "substantial contracts" sufficient enough to invoke general jurisdiction or long-arm jurisdiction over the Utah company. Edsall Constr. Co., Inc. v. Robinson, 246 M 378, 804 P2d 1039, 48 St. Rep. 75 (1991), followed in Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998), and Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

State Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Trust Company: The deceased resided in Montana for several years before her death, and her will was placed in probate in Montana. She established a trust in Nevada when she was a resident of that state. The administrator of the will petitioned the Montana court for an order to have the proceeds of the Nevada trust transferred to Montana for distribution under Montana's probate proceedings. The Supreme Court held that, when evaluated by the "minimum contacts" due process standard, the activities of the trust company in its dealings with the deceased were not significant enough to give the state jurisdiction over the trust company. In re Estate of Ducey, 241 M 419, 787 P2d 749, 47 St. Rep. 232 (1990).

Proper Jurisdiction in Montana Court — Facts Constituting Transaction of Business in State: The facts that a contract to find a lender involved a loan for operation of a Montana business, that collateral for the loan was to be the business itself, that a nonresident representative made two trips to Montana with prospective lenders to assist in inspection of the business and attended business meetings while in Montana, and that the Montana business was the party contemplated to benefit from the financing arrangement constituted the transaction of business in Montana sufficient to place the nonresident within the jurisdiction of Montana courts. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co. v. Hindin/Owne/Engelke, Inc., 224 M 202, 728 P2d 1342, 43 St. Rep. 2132 (1986).

Foreign Corporation Jurisdiction — Ads, Mailings, Phone Calls, Sales, and Business Discussions: Federal District Court's exercise of jurisdiction over Illinois corporation with sole place of business in Illinois was consistent with this rule and not offensive to due process and notions of fair play. Corporation's activities in Montana were substantial. It advertised in a magazine that could reasonably be expected to reach an agriculture-oriented state like Montana, mailed a brochure into this state, facilitated a sale here through phone calls to and from corporation, invited Montana buyer to its Illinois plant in the hope of making a sale here, sold buyer three pieces of equipment at three different times, and discussed with buyer the possibility of becoming its dealer in Montana. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., Inc., 554 F. Supp. 1025, 40 St. Rep. 206 (D.C. Mont. 1983), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations: Jurisdiction over foreign corporation was proper and did not violate "fundamental fairness" or "minimum contacts" tests. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., 554 F. Supp. 1025 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (fraud, breach of warranties); Scanlan v. Norma Projektil Fabrik, 345 F. Supp. 292 (D.C. Mont. 1972) (tort, dynamite importation); Swanson Painting Co. v. Local 260, 391 F2d 523 (1968) (although majority of activity in federal enclave); Boyt v. Emmco Ins. Co., 271 F. Supp. 366 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (conversion); Bullard v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 263 F. Supp. 79 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972);

Cont. Oil Co. v. Atwood & Morrill Co., 265 F. Supp. 692 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Yules v. G.M.C., 297 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1969); Hartung v. Wash. Iron Works, 267 F. Supp. 408 (D.C. Mont. 1964) (tort, cableway).

Jurisdiction of State Court Over Nonresident Federally Chartered Bank — Sufficiency of Evidence — Denial of Due Process and Equal Protection: Officers of the plaintiff corporation traveled to Reno, Nevada, to deposit money in the defendant branch bank in anticipation of business in Nevada and later brought an action in a Montana District Court against the defendant for unlawful dishonor of a check and associated charges. The District Court did not err in dismissing the action for lack of jurisdiction. Under the provisions of 12 U.S.C. § 94, a federally chartered bank may be sued, among other places, where it is "located". The U.S. Supreme Court in Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Bougas, 434 US 35 (1977), construed the term "located" to mean wherever branch offices are found. Because there is no branch bank in Montana and there has been no business operation conducted by the defendant in Montana that would constitute a waiver of the protection of federal law, the District Court had no jurisdiction. There was, moreover, sufficient evidence before the District Court for it to make the determination that there was no voluntary waiver and the U.S. Supreme Court has held in Mercantile Nat'l Bank at Dallas v. Langdeau, 371 US 555 (1963), that Congress "unquestionably" has the authority to determine those situations in which national banks can be sued. Hamelly Int'l, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank of Nev., 199 M 221, 648 P2d 282, 39 St. Rep. 1304 (1982).

Minimum Contacts Found — Potato Buyer's Telephonic Order: Where defendant Idaho potato buyer telephoned Montana grower, purchased potatoes, and accepted several shipments but failed to pay for many of them and paid late on others, the lower court did not err in exercising jurisdiction over out-of-state defendant. Parker Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Burgess, 197 M 293, 642 P2d 1063, 39 St. Rep. 571 (1982).

Out-of-State Airline "Found Within Montana": An airline had no flights into or out of Montana, had no property or personnel in the state, and paid no taxes in the state. It solicited business in the state via advertising and provided a toll-free reservation service for its out-of-state flights. The airline's activities in the state were sufficient to declare it "found within Montana" for purposes of U.S. District Court in personam jurisdiction in the District of Missoula. Reed v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 197 M 34, 640 P2d 912, 39 St. Rep. 335 (1982).

Rock Concert Promotion as Transaction of Business: A rock concert promoter, a resident of California, was found to have been properly served in personam when a summons was issued in Missoula, although the promoter was never personally served. The promoter was found to have been covered by the "long-arm statute". He was doing business in Montana and pursuing activities which were "substantial" or "continuous and systematic". He had sufficient and substantial "minimum contacts" with Montana because he was found promoting a concert in Montana and had done so before, because he availed himself of privileges and benefits of the laws of Montana, and because he had in his possession movies allegedly belonging rightfully to the plaintiff. N. Dak. v. Newberger d.b.a. Amusement Conspiracy, 188 M 323, 613 P2d 1002 (1980), distinguished in Reed v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 197 M 34, 640 P2d 912, 39 St. Rep. 335 (1982).

Minimum Contacts Found — Physician's Telephone Diagnosis: Montana's long-arm statute provided plaintiff with jurisdiction to sue in Montana on a negligent telephone diagnosis which was part of postsurgery service, even though the surgery itself was performed in Utah where the physician practiced. The three rules applicable in such an instance were satisfied: an act within the forum, cause of action arising from that act, and reasonableness of subjecting defendant to jurisdiction within the forum. McGee v. Riekhof, 442 F. Supp. 1276, 35 St. Rep. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1978), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Jurisdiction Over Corporation Based on Jurisdiction Over Subsidiary: Montana federal District Court does not have personal jurisdiction over foreign parent corporation merely because it has personal jurisdiction over a domestic subsidiary. Court held it lacked personal jurisdiction over parent corporation by following the case of Cannon Mfg. Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 267 US 333 (1925), holding that a corporation of one state shall not be amenable to suit in federal court for another state in which plaintiff resides merely because it employs a subsidiary corporation as the instrumentality for doing business herein, because here formal separateness between the two corporations has been maintained and the parent does not control the internal affairs of the subsidiary. Crow Tribe of Indians v. Mohasco Indus., Inc., 406 F. Supp. 738 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Affidavit in Denial of Jurisdiction Found Insufficient: Affidavit of corporation stating that it had no "representative resident" in Montana, but also stating that "orders received from dealers in Montana are accepted in Indiana", did not satisfactorily answer plaintiff's allegation that defendant had an agent in Montana, nor did it answer the allegation that defendant had violated its warranties and committed torts against the plaintiff in Montana. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 165 M 32, 525 P2d 556 (1974).

Corporations — Mere Solicitation and Shipping — Inference of Jurisdiction: A corporation is not "found within the state" unless it has agents or officers upon whom process may be served or unless its business has been of such character and extent to warrant an inference that it has subjected itself to jurisdiction within the state. Mere solicitation and shipping into the state does not evoke that inference. McIntosh v. Heil Co., 350 F. Supp. 866 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Hospital — Service Upon Hospital Employee: Personal services of employee doctor of hospital in Minnesota, rendered to plaintiff in Montana at plaintiff's convenience and incidental to employee's personal journey to Montana, was not sufficient to bring hospital under jurisdiction of Montana for a tort occurring in Minnesota. Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

ACCRUAL OF TORT WITHIN STATE

Defendant Out of State But Subject to Montana Jurisdiction — Statute of Limitations Applicable: Plaintiff filed a malpractice action. Summary judgment was granted to defendant physician because the action was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that the statute of limitations should have been tolled because the physician was absent from Montana and thus prevented from being served with a summons and complaint. The Supreme Court held that the power to toll the statute of limitations in 27-2-402 arises only when a defendant remains out of state and cannot be served with process. In this case the alleged malpractice occurred in Montana, and although the physician was out of state, the physician remained at all times subject to the jurisdiction of Montana courts and was therefore amenable to service of process. Thus, the statute of limitations was not tolled and the action was properly dismissed for failure to file the action within 3 years of the alleged malpractice. Cobb v. Saltiel, 2009 MT 171, 350 M 501, 210 P3d 138 (2009).

Forum State — Contacts Considered in Determining State With More Specific Relationship in Personal Injury or Wrongful Death Product Liability Action: Montana residents were killed in Kansas in a car made in Michigan and sold in North Carolina. Sections 146 and 175 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971) that deal with personal injury and wrongful death actions provide that the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the injury occurred unless, with respect to a particular issue, another state has a more specific relationship. In order to determine whether a state other than the place of injury has a more significant relationship, the following contacts are taken into account, pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(2) (1971), applying the principles of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6 (1971): (1) needs of the interstate and international system; (2) policies of the interested states, including place of injury, place of conduct, and residence of the parties; (3) justified expectations; (4) basic policies underlying the particular field of law; and (5) the certainty, predictability, and uniformity of result as well as the ease in the determination and application of the law to be applied. However, the principles need not be given equal weight. In this case, the relevant policies of the interested states were of primary importance. The focus of Montana law is not only on the regulation of products sold in Montana, but also on providing the maximum protection and compensation to Montana residents, considering mainly the condition of the product and not the conduct of the manufacturer. Kansas, where the injury occurred, did not maintain a similar interest in the application of its product liability laws because the injured were Montana citizens. (See Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 282 M 168, 935 P2d 1139, 54 St. Rep. 299 (1997).) Michigan also lacked such an interest because Michigan's only contact with the dispute was the location of the manufacturer. (See Farrell v. Ford Motor Co., 501 NW 2d 567 (Mich. App. 1993). Under North Carolina's vested rights approach to conflict of laws, that state would apply the law of the jurisdiction where the injury occurred, whatever that law might be. After holding that the relevant residence of the plaintiff was the residence at the time of injury, the Supreme Court found that Montana, as the place of domicile, had a significant relationship to the issues and that because the purpose behind Montana product liability law was implicated by the facts, Montana law should apply. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Lex Loci Delicti Commissi Abandoned — "Most Significant Relationship" Approach Adopted as Choice of Law to Determine Applicable Substantive Law in Issues of Tort: In a personal injury/product liability/wrongful death action in which there is a potential conflict of laws, the traditional choice of law rule, known as lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where the wrong was committed), which provides that the infliction of injury is actionable under the law of the state in which it was received, was abandoned in favor of the approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(1) (1971), which seeks to apply the law of the state with the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. This choice of law was adopted previously in contract disputes in Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and the Supreme Court found no reason not to apply it to tort issues in favor of the traditional rule in the present case. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000).

Purpose of Choice of Law Rule — Public Policy Subsumed: Addressing the question of whether, in a personal injury and wrongful death action, Montana recognized a public policy exception that would require application of Montana law even when Montana's choice of law rules dictate application of the laws of another state, the Supreme Court noted that for choice of law purposes, the public policy of a state is simply the rules, as expressed in its legislative enactments and judicial decisions, that it uses to decide controversies. The purpose of choice of law rules is to resolve conflicts between competing policies. In this case, considerations of public policy were accounted for, being expressly subsumed within the "most significant relationship" approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6(2)(b) and (2)(c) (1971), which mandate consideration of the relevant policies of all the interested states, so a public policy exception to the most significant relationship test would have been redundant. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and Rothwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 1999 MT 50, 293 M 393, 976 P2d 512, 56 St. Rep. 203 (1999).

No Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Lawyer — Jurisdiction Not Acquired Through Interstate Communications: Plaintiffs sued an out-of-state attorney, alleging theft and conversion and fraud and deceit arising out of a dispute over settlement money. On defendant's motion, the District Court dismissed the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction. When defendant came into possession of and allegedly asserted unauthorized control over settlement checks in Idaho, defendant did not do any act that resulted in the accrual of the tort of conversion within Montana. When all representations regarding the claims took place in Idaho and the settlement was negotiated in Idaho, defendant's act of mailing the contingency fee agreement and other letters to plaintiffs in Montana did not create jurisdiction in Montana. Jurisdiction is not acquired through interstate communications pursuant to a contract to be performed in another state. Bird v. Hiller, 270 M 467, 892 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 288 (1995), followed in Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998), Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000), and Tackett v. Duncan, 2014 MT 253, 376 Mont. 348, 334 P.3d 920.

Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Defendant Based Upon Conduct and Not Subrogation Pursuant to Contract — Exercise of Long-Arm Jurisdiction Reasonable: St. Paul's insured, Lynn, and Allstate's insured, Glassing, were involved in a car accident. After judgment against Glassing, St. Paul paid Lynn pursuant to the underinsured motorist provision of its policy and then sought recovery against Glassing based on a right of subrogation. The Supreme Court held that jurisdiction of Glassing was not based upon a provision of the insurance contract but upon subrogation as a matter of law and upon the tortious conduct of Glassing in Montana. The Supreme Court held that under the facts of the case, it was reasonable for the District Court to exercise personal jurisdiction over Glassing even though he resided in Minnesota and reversed the District Court's dismissal for lack of jurisdiction. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 257 M 47, 847 P2d 705, 50 St. Rep. 154 (1993).

Tort Claim Against Production Credit Association — Subject Matter Jurisdiction: For the purpose of determining subject matter jurisdiction of a tort claim against a Production Credit Association (PCA), a PCA is not a federal instrumentality for the purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA), and therefore jurisdiction does not rest exclusively in federal court. The Montana Supreme Court determined that under tests set forth in recent federal District Court decisions, PCAs are essentially nongovernmental, independent entities that Congress did not intend FTCA to cover. The court, which was reluctant to deprive court access to plaintiffs for this type of claim, found subject matter jurisdiction outside FTCA. Tooke v. Miles City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 234 M 387, 763 P2d 1111, 45 St. Rep. 1993 (1988).

Legal Malpractice as Tort Action Sufficient to Establish Jurisdiction of Out-of-State Attorney: A claim for legal malpractice falls within the definition of tort action as set forth in subsection (1)(b) of this Rule and is sufficient to establish court jurisdiction over an out-of-state attorney who is not within the state for general jurisdictional purposes. Turner v. Tranakos, 229 M 51, 744 P2d 898, 44 St. Rep. 1772 (1987).

Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations: Jurisdiction over foreign corporation was proper and did not violate "fundamental fairness" or "minimum contacts" tests. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., 554 F. Supp. 1025 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (fraud, breach of warranties); Scanlan v. Norma Projektil Fabrik, 345 F. Supp. 292 (D.C. Mont. 1972) (tort, dynamite importation); Swanson Painting Co. v. Local 260, 391 F2d 523 (1968) (although majority of activity in federal enclave); Boyt v. Emmco Ins. Co., 271 F. Supp. 366 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (conversion); Bullard v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 263 F. Supp. 79 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972); Cont. Oil Co. v. Atwood & Morrill Co., 265 F. Supp. 692 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000); Yules v. G.M.C., 297 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1969); and Hartung v. Wash. Iron Works, 267 F. Supp. 408 (D.C. Mont. 1964) (tort, cableway).

Nonresident Laboratory Subjected to Suit Under Long-Arm Statute — Exercise of Jurisdiction Unreasonable — Violation of Due Process: Since 1977, the Montana Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the agency responsible under Title 50, ch. 19, part 2, for the testing of newborns for metabolic disorders, has contracted with an Oregon state laboratory for the testing. Plaintiff's minor son was born in June 1977. A sample of his blood was sent to the Oregon laboratory. No abnormality was reported. A few months later the son exhibited symptoms of a metabolic disorder, and treatment was begun in September 1977. After first filing an action in Oregon, which was later dismissed on procedural grounds, plaintiff filed a negligence action in Montana against the states of Montana and Oregon, alleging that the delay in treatment had caused his son permanent and irreparable brain and neuromuscular damage. The trial court dismissed the action against the state of Oregon on jurisdictional grounds. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although both subsections (b) and (e) of Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P., potentially confer jurisdiction over the state of Oregon in this case, it would be a denial of due process for the Montana state courts to exercise that jurisdiction. The court found that Oregon had not structured its activities in such a way as to purposely avail itself of the privilege of functioning in Montana. Further, the court ruled that an evaluation of the interests of sovereignty, efficiency of resolution, and provision of important interstate medical services compels the conclusion that it would be unreasonable in this case to exercise jurisdiction over the state of Oregon. Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983), followed in Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998). See also Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Known Out-of-State Address — No Tolling of Statute of Limitations: When persons involved in a tort who were residents of the state at its occurrence subsequently moved to another state, and plaintiff insurance company was aware of their address, the Statute of Limitations didn't toll due to absence from the state under 27-2-402 because Montana District Courts had jurisdiction under this rule and process could be served under the "long-arm statute", Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Minimum Contacts Found — Physician's Telephone Diagnosis: Montana's long-arm statute provided plaintiff with jurisdiction to sue in Montana on a negligent telephone diagnosis which was part of postsurgery service, even though the surgery itself was performed in Utah where the physician practiced. The three rules applicable in such an instance were satisfied: an act within the forum, cause of action arising from that act, and reasonableness of subjecting defendant to jurisdiction within the forum. McGee v. Riekhof, 442 F. Supp. 1276, 35 St. Rep. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1978), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

No Long-Arm Jurisdiction — Deviation From Route: The Supreme Court held that none of the out-of-state defendants' actions could be said to "result" in the accrual of a tort action within this state. The fatal accident occurred during a joyride by the pilot/flight instructor defendant. This joyride was not merely a deviation from his route to and from Montana; it was a completely separate and unauthorized trip. Haker v. SW. Ry., 176 M 364, 578 P2d 724 (1978).

Nonresident Leasing Corporation Amenable to Long-Arm Jurisdiction Based on Fraud: Court is not acting outside bounds of fair play and substantial justice in holding that a foreign corporation is answerable in a Montana forum for inducing a citizen of this state to act on that corporation's alleged fraudulent misrepresentation made where nonresident airplane leasing corporation made representations airplane was airworthy when in fact it was not. Montana's jurisdiction over tort actions is perhaps the broadest long-arm provision adopted by any state for substituted service as the tortious act does not have to happen in Montana, but only that the act results in the "accrual" within this state of a tort action. Johnson Flying Serv., Inc. v. Mackey Int'l, Inc., 32 St. Rep. 879 (D.C. Mont. 1975) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Affidavit in Denial of Jurisdiction Found Insufficient: Affidavit of corporation stating that it had no "representative resident" in Montana, but also stating that "orders received from dealers in Montana are accepted in Indiana", did not satisfactorily answer plaintiff's allegation that defendant had an agent in Montana, nor did it answer the allegation that defendant had violated its warranties and committed torts against the plaintiff in Montana. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 165 M 32, 525 P2d 556 (1974).

Jurisdiction Over Tort Accruing in Montana: Swedish corporation which sold ammunition throughout the United States through an American distributor subjected itself to Montana jurisdiction when defective ammunition sold in Idaho resulted in injury in Montana. Scanlan v. Norma Projektil Fabrik, 345 F. Supp. 292 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

John Doe Defendant — Removal to Federal Court: In action against foreign corporation and its resident employee, who was joined as John Doe but who was not served with process and did not appear, for injuries caused by employee's negligence, the test for removal of cause to federal court on diversity of citizenship was whether employee had any real connection with controversy. A resident citizen, properly joined, is not merely a nominal party who can be ignored because not served or he has not appeared. The corporation was not entitled to have action removed on ground of diversity of citizenship. Jensen v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 585 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

PROPERTY INTEREST WITHIN STATE

Jurisdictional Defense Lost — Scope of Jurisdiction Over Nonresidents: Defendant could not inject plea of lack of jurisdiction over the person after filing motion asserting lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Jurisdiction is proper over nonresident buyer purchasing through nonresident agent when one payment was made directly to and one order was made directly with resident seller. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

INSURING PERSON OR PROPERTY WITHIN STATE

No Montana Personal Jurisdiction Over Regional Out-of-State Insurer: Carter, a part-time "snow bird" resident of Montana, was injured in an automobile accident in Montana shortly after moving from Mississippi. Carter filed a declaratory judgment action against the defendant, a regional out-of-state insurer that did not do business in Montana, requesting interpretation of an insurance contract issued on Carter's vehicles in Mississippi. The insurer contested Montana's exercise of personal jurisdiction and moved for summary judgment. The District Court concluded that it did not have personal jurisdiction and granted summary judgment. Carter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court cited Bahn v. Chicago Motor Club, 634 A2d 63 (Md. 1993), for the holding that although an insurer's promise to provide nationwide coverage may establish that the insurer has agreed to submit to jurisdiction in any forum that has jurisdiction to adjudicate claims against its insured, this agreement does not imply a further agreement to allow the insured to bring suit against the insurer in any state. Even though the insurer could reasonably anticipate that the insured could suffer an injury within the insurer's 50-state coverage, that foreseeability, without more, was not sufficient to subject the insurer to personal jurisdiction in Montana courts. The underlying dispute related to coverage and had nothing to do with the fact that the accident occurred in Montana or that Carter was living in this state at the time. Thus, although Carter had every right to sue the insurer over its coverage issues, in this case, Montana courts did not have personal jurisdiction over the insurer that was required as a predicate to maintenance of an action in Montana. Summary dismissal was proper. Carter v. Miss. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2005 MT 74, 326 M 350, 109 P3d 735 (2005). See also Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154 (1998).

Out-of-State Insurer Contracting to Insure Property in Montana Subject to Personal Jurisdiction of Montana Courts: Seal sold saddles and tack to Hart for $53,315.86. Hart paid $13,315.86 down, with the balance due following sale of the items at a California auction. Hart was to procure insurance on the goods to protect against casualty loss and theft. The items were stolen en route to California, so Hart could not pay the balance, and the South Dakota insurer that issued the policies refused to pay on grounds that Hart was not a common carrier and, as owner of the property, was not hauling the property of another. Seal sued Hart and the insurance agent for breach of contract and failure to procure insurance. The District Court entered judgment against Hart but dismissed the claim against the insurance agent for lack of personal jurisdiction. Seal appealed, arguing both general and personal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court noted that even though a defendant maintains minimal contacts with the forum, Montana courts may exercise specific long-arm jurisdiction over the defendant if the cause of action arises from any of the activities enumerated in this rule and the exercise of jurisdiction does not offend due process. The District Court correctly concluded that general jurisdiction did not exist because the South Dakota insurer's nominal associations with Montana were not sufficient to rise to the level of substantial or continuous and systematic contacts. However, the Supreme Court held that personal jurisdiction did exist because the claim arose out of contracting to insure property or risk located within Montana at the time of contracting. Seal v. Hart, 2002 MT 149, 310 M 307, 50 P3d 522 (2002).

Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Law Firm — Denial of Liability as Sufficient Minimum Contacts: After purchasing property through a realtor, appellants discovered that the realtor had misrepresented the size of the property at time of purchase. The realtor, pursuant to the title insurance policy, notified the company by giving notice to the company's agent, the Kroll law firm in New York. Appellants filed a complaint against Kroll after the firm denied liability on the part of the realtor. The District Court granted Kroll's motion to dismiss, stating that the act of denying liability on an insurance claim produced insufficient minimum contacts by Kroll to satisfy due process under this rule. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that jurisdiction over the New York firm was reasonable because Montana has a great interest in regulating bad faith by insurance companies in the state. Jackson v. Kroll, 223 M 161, 724 P2d 717, 43 St. Rep. 1622 (1986).

Enforcement of Foreign Judgment — Lack of Personal Jurisdiction: A default judgment was obtained in Colorado against defendants, Montana residents, in a case which arose from defendants' participation in a reciprocal interinsurance agreement. Some of the subscribers to the agreement were Colorado residents. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to enforce the judgment in Montana, ruling that enforcement of the judgment would be a violation of the federal due process clause because the defendants had not had sufficient "minimum contacts" with the state of Colorado to warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The court stated that the provision of the Colorado long-arm statute that covered causes of action arising from "contracting to insure any person, property or risk residing or located within this state at the time of contracting" was not applicable because this was not the sort of "company" that was contemplated when the long-arm statutes were drafted. The court further stated that the defendants did not know the name of the insurance company which issued the policy and had not purposely availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities within the state of Colorado. Benham v. Woltermann, 201 M 149, 653 P2d 135, 39 St. Rep. 2017 (1982).

CONTRACT FOR SERVICES OR MATERIAL FURNISHED WITHIN STATE

Minimum Contacts Found — Defendant Subject to Long-Arm Statute: Defendant, a Colorado corporation, ordered a Swimlift from plaintiff. The Swimlift was manufactured in Montana and shipped back to Montana for repairs, and payment was to be made in Montana. Plaintiff sued in Montana for recovery of an amount remaining due on a contract. The District Court dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction over defendant. The Supreme Court held that defendant had established minimum contacts with the State of Montana and that the exercise of jurisdiction over defendant in this case comports with due process. Spectrum Pool Prod., Inc. v. MW Golden, Inc., 1998 MT 283, 291 M 439, 968 P2d 728, 55 St. Rep. 1157 (1998).

Nonresident Laboratory Subjected to Suit Under Long-Arm Statute — Exercise of Jurisdiction Unreasonable — Violation of Due Process: Since 1977, the Montana Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the agency responsible under Title 50, ch. 19, part 2, for the testing of newborns for metabolic disorders, has contracted with an Oregon state laboratory for the testing. Plaintiff's minor son was born in June 1977. A sample of his blood was sent to the Oregon laboratory. No abnormality was reported. A few months later the son exhibited symptoms of a metabolic disorder, and treatment was begun in September 1977. After first filing an action in Oregon, which was later dismissed on procedural grounds, plaintiff filed a negligence action in Montana against the states of Montana and Oregon, alleging that the delay in treatment had caused his son permanent and irreparable brain and neuromuscular damage. The trial court dismissed the action against the state of Oregon on jurisdictional grounds. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although both subsections (b) and (e) of Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P., potentially confer jurisdiction over the state of Oregon in this case, it would be a denial of due process for the Montana state courts to exercise that jurisdiction. The court found that Oregon had not structured its activities in such a way as to purposely avail itself of the privilege of functioning in Montana. Further, the court ruled that an evaluation of the interests of sovereignty, efficiency of resolution, and provision of important interstate medical services compels the conclusion that it would be unreasonable in this case to exercise jurisdiction over the state of Oregon. Simmons v. St., 206 M 264, 670 P2d 1372, 40 St. Rep. 1650 (1983). See also Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Foreign Corporation Jurisdiction — Ads, Mailings, Phone Calls, Sales, and Business Discussions: Federal District Court's exercise of jurisdiction over Illinois corporation with sole place of business in Illinois was consistent with this rule and not offensive to due process and notions of fair play. Corporation's activities in Montana were substantial. It advertised in a magazine that could reasonably be expected to reach an agriculture-oriented state like Montana, mailed a brochure into this state, facilitated a sale here through phone calls to and from corporation, invited Montana buyer to its Illinois plant in the hope of making a sale here, sold buyer three pieces of equipment at three different times, and discussed with buyer the possibility of becoming its dealer in Montana. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., Inc., 554 F. Supp. 1025, 40 St. Rep. 206 (D.C. Mont. 1983), distinguished in Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000).

Minimum Contacts Found — Potato Buyer's Telephonic Order: Where defendant Idaho potato buyer telephoned Montana grower, purchased potatoes, and accepted several shipments but failed to pay for many of them and paid late on others, the lower court did not err in exercising jurisdiction over out-of-state defendant. Parker Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Burgess, 197 M 293, 642 P2d 1063, 39 St. Rep. 571 (1982).

Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Hospital — Service Upon Hospital Employee: Personal services of employee doctor of hospital in Minnesota, rendered to plaintiff in Montana at plaintiff's convenience and incidental to employee's personal journey to Montana, was not sufficient to bring hospital under jurisdiction of Montana for a tort occurring in Minnesota. Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

Contracts — Negotiations by Mail and Telephone: Although primary negotiations for sale of membership in stock exchange were had in Utah, locus of contract was in Montana and jurisdiction was acquired under this section in view of fact that negotiations continued via telephone and mail in Montana, that delivery was contemplated and would be made in Montana, and that purchase money mortgage or equivalent lien would follow subject matter of contract to Montana. State ex rel. Goff v. District Court, 157 M 495, 487 P2d 292 (1971).

ACTING AS REPRESENTATIVE OF CORPORATION ORGANIZED OR LOCATED IN STATE

Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations: Jurisdiction over foreign corporation was proper and did not violate "fundamental fairness" or "minimum contacts" tests. Great Plains Crop Management, Inc. v. Tryco Mfg. Co., 554 F. Supp. 1025 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (fraud, breach of warranties); Scanlan v. Norma Projektil Fabrik, 345 F. Supp. 292 (D.C. Mont. 1972) (tort, dynamite importation); Swanson Painting Co. v. Local 260, 391 F2d 523 (1968) (although majority of activity in federal enclave); Boyt v. Emmco Ins. Co., 271 F. Supp. 366 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (conversion); Bullard v. Rhodes Pharmacal Co., 263 F. Supp. 79 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Aylstock v. Mayo Foundation, 341 F. Supp. 560 (D.C. Mont. 1972); Cont. Oil Co. v. Atwood & Morrill Co., 265 F. Supp. 692 (D.C. Mont. 1967) (products liability), distinguished in Yules v. G.M.C., 297 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1969); Hartung v. Wash. Iron Works, 267 F. Supp. 408 (D.C. Mont. 1964) (tort, cableway).

Jurisdiction Over Corporation Based on Jurisdiction Over Subsidiary: Montana federal District Court does not have personal jurisdiction over foreign parent corporation merely because it has personal jurisdiction over a domestic subsidiary. Court held it lacked personal jurisdiction over parent corporation by following the case of Cannon Mfg. Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 267 US 333 (1925), holding that a corporation of one state shall not be amenable to suit in federal court for another state in which plaintiff resides merely because it employs a subsidiary corporation as the instrumentality for doing business herein, because here formal separateness between the two corporations has been maintained and the parent does not control the internal affairs of the subsidiary. Crow Tribe of Indians v. Mohasco Indus., Inc., 406 F. Supp. 738 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Affidavit in Denial of Jurisdiction Found Insufficient: Affidavit of corporation stating that it had no "representative resident" in Montana, but also stating that "orders received from dealers in Montana are accepted in Indiana", did not satisfactorily answer plaintiff's allegation that defendant had an agent in Montana, nor did it answer the allegation that defendant had violated its warranties and committed torts against the plaintiff in Montana. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 165 M 32, 525 P2d 556 (1974).

Corporations — Mere Solicitation and Shipping — Inference of Jurisdiction: A corporation is not "found within the state" unless it has agents or officers upon whom process may be served or unless its business has been of such character and extent to warrant an inference that it has subjected itself to jurisdiction within the state. Mere solicitation and shipping into the state does not evoke that inference. McIntosh v. Heil Co., 350 F. Supp. 866 (D.C. Mont. 1972).

John Doe Defendant — Removal to Federal Court: In action against foreign corporation and its resident employee, who was joined as John Doe but who was not served with process and did not appear, for injuries caused by employee's negligence, the test for removal of cause to federal court on diversity of citizenship was whether employee had any real connection with controversy. A resident citizen, properly joined, is not merely a nominal party who can be ignored because not served or he has not appeared. The corporation was not entitled to have action removed on ground of diversity of citizenship. Jensen v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 585 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

ACQUISITION OF JURISDICTION

Contempt Appropriate for Failure of Party to Abide by Court-Ordered Stipulation — Penalty Reduced to Statutory Maximum: The District Court held defendant in contempt for failure to abide by a stipulation entered by the court ordering Boles to remove a metal roof from her barn because it violated a subdivision's restrictive covenants. The court further ordered that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court did not have jurisdiction because defendant was not a named party or served as an original party and because defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation under the guise of changing the covenants to accommodate the roof. The Supreme Court noted that defendant's motion would have been more appropriately framed as a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), motion seeking relief from judgment because the stipulation was a final order and agreed with the District Court's conclusion that there was no reason under Rule 60(b) to relieve defendant from the final judgment. Even though defendant was not a named party or served as an original party, the District Court did have jurisdiction because defendant had appeared in the case many times without raising the jurisdiction issue at the initial appearance or response, and once defendant recognized the court's jurisdiction, the defense of no personal jurisdiction was waived. Additionally, there was no credible evidence that defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation. Therefore, the contempt conviction was affirmed. However, the Supreme Court did vacate the portion of the order that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof because a sanction for contempt that seeks to compel the contemnor to perform an act may not exceed $500, so the sanction was remitted to a maximum of $500. El Dorado Heights Homeowners' Ass'n v. Dewitt, 2008 MT 199, 344 M 77, 186 P3d 1249 (2008).

Voluntary Appearance Constituting Waiver of Jurisdiction Defense: Defendant North Dakota insurance company voluntarily appeared in District Court and sought affirmative relief, but did not argue any jurisdictional issues until some 3 ½ months later. By voluntarily appearing and filing motions seeking relief on nonjurisdictional grounds, defendant admitted the authority and jurisdiction of the District Court and was precluded from later arguing lack of personal jurisdiction. Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008), followed in D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co, 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009). See also Spencer v. Ukra, 246 M 430, 804 P2d 380 (1991).

Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Based on Failure of Service Affirmed: The District Court granted Semenza a default judgment in February 2004 after Semenza stated that defendant was properly served but failed to plead or defend. In May 2004, defendant moved to set aside the default judgment on grounds that defendant was not properly served. Semenza argued that the motion must be denied pursuant to Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., because more than 60 days had elapsed since judgment. The District Court did not rule on Semenza's argument, but instead concluded that because defendant was not properly served, the court had no personal jurisdiction to enter the default judgment. Semenza appealed, contending that defendant knew about the case after having received a letter referencing the action. The Supreme Court noted that actual knowledge of a lawsuit is not a substitute for proper service. Addressing Semenza's argument regarding Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court held that if service of process is flawed, personal jurisdiction over a party is not acquired and that judgment entered without jurisdiction is void.

The District Court was affirmed. Semenza v. Kniss, 2005 MT 268, 329 M 115, 122 P3d 1203 (2005), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and followed in Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Glacier Kitchens, Inc., 2012 MT 132, 365 Mont. 276, 281 P.3d 600.

Analysis of District Court Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Defendant — Due Process Test: The Supreme Court applies a two-part analysis in determining whether a District Court may exercise specific personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. The analysis involves whether jurisdiction exists pursuant to subsection (1) of this rule, and whether the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction comports with due process. There is a three-part test for determining whether the exercise of jurisdiction comports with due process: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act by which the defendant purposefully avails the defendant of the privileges of conducting activities in the forum; (2) the claim must be one that arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable. A plaintiff is not required to demonstrate each of these elements, and once a plaintiff shows that the defendant has purposefully availed the defendant of the privileges of conducting activities in this state, a presumption of reasonableness arises that the defendant can overcome only by presenting a compelling case that jurisdiction would not be reasonable. A presumption also arises that the exercise of jurisdiction over third-party defendants is reasonable, which can be overcome only by demonstrating with compelling reasons that jurisdiction would be unreasonable. In the present case, after an employee's claims were settled, plaintiff and the employer stipulated to dismissal of plaintiff's claims, but the District Court also dismissed the third-party action after concluding that no Montana parties remained in the action. However, plaintiff's dismissal did not remove the last Montana party from the action because the third-party employer was an ongoing business entity engaged in commercial activity in this state and was thus considered a person for determining jurisdictional questions under Rule 4B and was entitled to consideration as a Montana resident for jurisdictional purposes. The District Court correctly held that the actions of the third-party defendants fell within the plain language of Rule 4B, subjecting them to Montana's specific jurisdiction and erred in declining to exercise jurisdiction over the third-party defendants. The third-party defendants purposefully availed themselves to Montana jurisdiction, and the exercise of jurisdiction over them was reasonable and comported with due process. The case was therefore remanded for further proceedings. Nasca v. Hull, 2004 MT 306, 323 M 484, 100 P3d 997 (2004). See also Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 244 M 75, 796 P2d 189 (1990), and Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 M 145, 153 P3d 627 (2007), following B.T. Metal Works v. United Die & Mfg. Co., 2004 MT 286, 323 M 308, 100 P3d 127 (2004).

Erroneous Denial of Motion to Quash Writ of Execution: A federal District Court allowed a default judgment against Clark in favor of plaintiffs. In order to execute the judgment on Clark's Montana assets, plaintiffs docketed the judgment in federal District Court in Montana, and about the same time, plaintiffs brought an action in Montana state court, asserting that Clark fraudulently transferred real property in order to avoid reimbursing plaintiffs. Following denial of the fraudulent transfer claim in Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001), plaintiffs docketed the federal judgment in Lake County District Court, requesting and receiving a writ of execution, and a levying officer than executed on Clark's accounts. Upon notice of the levy on the accounts, Clark moved to quash the writ of execution, asserting that the federal judgment was invalid, that the writ was void because the federal District Court never obtained proper personal jurisdiction, and that service by publication was inadequate because the federal order required personal service. The state District Court concluded that Clark cited no authority allowing a state court to invalidate a federal District Court's judgment when the federal transcription of judgment is filed for execution in state court, so Clark's motion to quash was denied, and Clark appealed. As set out in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), a party seeking to vacate a foreign judgment filed in Montana state courts may do so only upon defenses that make the underlying judgment invalid or unenforceable, which include a lack of personal or subject matter jurisdiction of the rendering court, fraud in the procurement of the judgment, lack of due process, or satisfaction. However, if a foreign judgment is valid, it should have the same credit, validity, and effect in every other court of the United States that it had in the court in which it was pronounced. Thus, the state District Court erred in concluding that it had no authority to review whether the federal court had personal jurisdiction over Clark. The Supreme Court then went on to consider whether Clark was properly subject to the federal court's jurisdiction in order to determine if the federal default judgment was valid. Service by publication did not provide the federal court with jurisdiction to enter the default judgment because that service was not properly completed and was thus ineffective. In its order granting service by publication, the federal court concluded that service could not be accomplished other than by publication, effectively determining, based on plaintiffs' representations, that personal service had not been accomplished. Therefore, the state District Court committed reversible error when it failed to hold that service by publication was not properly accomplished pursuant to the federal court order. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2003 MT 87, 315 M 121, 68 P3d 673 (2003).

Remedy for Criminal Prosecution of Public Nuisance: Panasuk, convicted in City Court of misdemeanor criminal public nuisance charges under 45-8-111, contended that because 3-10-301, 25-31-102, and this rule preclude a nonrecord court from hearing actions involving the title to or possession of real property, jurisdiction for prosecution of the public nuisance charge must lie with the District Court. He cited 45-8-112 as authority that any action to abate a nuisance must be brought in the name of the state and that because abatement is a form of injunctive relief, the District Court has exclusive jurisdiction. He also argued that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive civil and criminal remedies for public nuisance. His claims were dismissed for the following reasons: (1) charges filed under 45-8-111 were criminal rather than related to a civil action involving title to or possession of real property, which is regulated by the sections cited by Panasuk; (2) the remedy created by 27-30-202 has been supplemented by subsequent legislative action regarding a City Court's jurisdiction over misdemeanors and by the enactment of 46-17-101, which requires that all prosecutions brought in City Court be commenced by a sworn complaint; and (3) because Panasuk's interpretation would result in a direct contradiction between 27-30-202 and statutes subsequently enacted, the argument that 27-30-202 provides the exclusive remedies for public nuisance is erroneous. Billings v. Panasuk, 253 M 403, 833 P2d 1050, 49 St. Rep. 499 (1992).

Rock Concert Promotion as Transaction of Business: A rock concert promoter, a resident of California, was found to have been properly served in personam when a summons was issued in Missoula, although the promoter was never personally served. The promoter was found to have been covered by the "long-arm statute". He was doing business in Montana and pursuing activities which were "substantial" or "continuous and systematic". He had sufficient and substantial "minimum contacts" with Montana because he was found promoting a concert in Montana and had done so before, because he availed himself of privileges and benefits of the laws of Montana, and because he had in his possession movies allegedly belonging rightfully to the plaintiff. N. Dak. v. Newberger d.b.a. Amusement Conspiracy, 188 M 323, 613 P2d 1002 (1980), distinguished in Reed v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 197 M 34, 640 P2d 912, 39 St. Rep. 335 (1982).

Custody — Jurisdiction After Voluntary Appearance: When a father who could not be served in California appeared voluntarily in Montana for a custody hearing involving his daughter then living in Montana, the Montana court obtained personal jurisdiction over him. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Custody — Personal Jurisdiction Unnecessary: Personal jurisdiction over a parent is not necessary to the termination of his parental rights to a minor child so long as the parent has actual notice of the termination or the District Court makes an effort reasonably calculated to provide notice to the parent. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Service of Process Within Exterior Boundaries of Indian Reservation: Service of process on Indian defendant in divorce action was effective where marriage took place off the reservation; service of process on Indian reservation was not violation of Indian tribe's sovereignty under United States law. Bad Horse v. Bad Horse, 163 M 445, 517 P2d 893 (1974), certiorari denied, 419 US 847 (1974), distinguished in Fisher v. District Court, 424 US 382, 96 S Ct 943 (1976).

Jurisdiction Acquired Over State Agency — Petitions Filed in Two Counties: When adoption petition was filed in one county, but state agency later filed petition in another county to have child declared dependent and neglected in another county, the court in the latter county was required to dismiss petition before it as former county had jurisdiction. State ex rel. Habeck v. District Court, 157 M 231, 484 P2d 272 (1971).

Retroactive Application — Malpractice Action: This rule applied to act of alleged malpractice occurring in Montana prior to effective date of this rule, and doctor who had not resided in Montana since effective date of rule could be served properly with process in California under Rule 4D(3). State ex rel. Johnson v. District Court, 148 M 22, 417 P2d 109 (1966).

Voluntary Appearance by Defendant: A voluntary appearance by a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and a copy of the complaint upon him. Strnod v. Abadie, 141 M 224, 376 P2d 730 (1962).

Defendants Named Not Served: Persons named as defendants, but who were not served with process and did not enter an appearance, were not parties to the action for the purpose of determining their entitlement to witness fees. Nelson v. Mont. Iron Min. Co., 140 M 331, 371 P2d 874 (1962).

Service of Summons Prior to Effective Date: The giving effect to the service of summons provisions of this rule, when the operative facts of the case to which the rule was applied had taken place prior to the effective date of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure as set out in Rule 86(a), was not a prohibited retroactive application of this rule within the meaning of 1-2-109. Weber v. Hydroponics, Inc., 226 F. Supp. 117 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Motion to Quash and Order to File Answer — No Waiver of Objection: Under former law, a defendant who appears specially to test the jurisdiction of the court by motion to quash an alleged defective service of summons and reserves his exception to an adverse ruling upon his motion does not waive his objection to jurisdiction by obeying the order of the court directing him to file his answer within a stated time. State ex rel. NW. Eng'r Co. v. District Court, 114 M 179, 133 P2d 594 (1943).

Jurisdiction of Cause Presumed: Under this section a judgment entered after personal service of summons and regular on its face is prima facie presumed to have been entered within jurisdiction. State ex rel. Matt v. District Court, 86 M 193, 282 P 1042 (1929).

Appearance to Object to Jurisdiction — No Waiver of Objection: Under former law, a party, by appearing in a case in response to a summons served upon him, when in fact the service is void, does not make a voluntary appearance so as to effect a waiver of objection to the service. If he has first appeared specially to question the court's jurisdiction over him, and on his points being overruled has saved an exception, he does not by a subsequent general appearance waive his right to object to the jurisdiction. State ex rel. Lane v. District Court, 51 M 503, 154 P 200 (1915).

Special Appearance to Challenge Jurisdiction: Under former law, service of summons on a nonresident defendant will not warrant a judgment in personam against a defendant who appears specially to challenge the jurisdiction of the court. Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert, 31 M 488, 78 P 967 (1904). See Gassert v. Strong, 38 M 18, 98 P 497 (1908); Thrift v. Thrift, 54 M 463, 171 P 272 (1918), distinguished in Talbot v. Talbot, 120 M 167, 181 P2d 148 (1947), and Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Former Rule 4C. Process

No District Court Jurisdiction to Enter Marriage Dissolution in Favor of One Party Absent Service of Dissolution Petition and Summons on Other Party: On August 15, 2003, the parties entered a property settlement agreement dividing the marital estate, and the wife also signed a consent to entry of judgment agreeing to dissolution if the property settlement agreement was presented to the District Court for approval and made an integral part of the dissolution. The husband then filed a petition for dissolution and included the settlement agreement and the wife's consent to entry of judgment, but did not serve the wife with any of the filings. The District Court held a hearing without the wife being present, adopted the settlement agreement, and entered a decree of dissolution. The husband's counsel mailed a copy of the judgment to the wife, who then filed a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion to set aside the judgment, claiming that the decree was void because the husband failed to have a summons issued and to serve her with process. The motion was denied, but on appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment. Dissolution proceedings are not exempt from rules regarding service of process, and if one party commences a dissolution proceeding, the other party must be served as provided in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Further, a petition for dissolution must be signed under oath by both parties. The wife's execution of the documents prior to the filing of the case did not constitute a voluntary appearance in the action, nor does notice of a hearing substitute for service of summons. A District Court may obtain personal jurisdiction through strict compliance with the mandatory rules for service of process, and in this case, the wife's signing of documents prior to the filing of the dissolution petition did not confer jurisdiction on the court absent service of process. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion in failing to grant the wife's motion to set aside the judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and In re Marriage of Grounds/Coward, 271 M 350, 897 P2d 200 (1995).

Dismissal for Failure to Issue Summons Within Year After Action Commenced: Subsection (1) of this rule requires the clerk to forthwith issue a summons upon the filing of a complaint. It is mandatory and leaves no room for interpretation. It does not require claimant or claimant's attorney to request or direct issuance. The lower court's dismissal under Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P., which requires dismissal if the summons is not issued within a year after commencement of the action, was reversed, and the case was remanded. The failure to issue the summons resulted directly from the clerk's failure to perform a duty required by rule. However, the court stated that subsection (1) of this rule did not comport with the accepted usual practice, which was for the attorney filing the complaint to prepare the summons and direct the clerk to issue it. The court stated that it intended to amend the rule to conform it to the practice. (See 1997 amendment.) Busch v. Atkinson, 278 M 478, 925 P2d 874, 53 St. Rep. 1020 (1996).

Service by Mother of Party Defective: Mavanee Ulsher filed for divorce from her husband Mickey Fonk. The deputy sheriff left the summons with Fonk's mother and signed the return that he had personally served Fonk. A decree of dissolution was entered by default and contained an order that Fonk pay child support. The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) sought enforcement of its assigned child support rights by intercepting Fonk's tax returns and garnishing his income. Fonk filed an action alleging that he was not the children's natural father. Ulsher moved for dismissal, arguing that the paternity issue was res judicata and constituted a collateral attack on the default judgment entered in the dissolution action. Fonk alleged that he had never been properly served in the dissolution action, although his mother testified that she laid the papers on the table and told him they were there and the next morning the papers were gone. The lower court ruled that the service of process was valid on the basis that it had been served on Fonk not by the sheriff but by an "other person over the age of 18 not a party to the action" as permitted by Rule 4D(1)(a), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that the service was invalid on the basis of the language in subsection (1) of this rule, which states that "the clerk shall . . . deliver the summons either to the sheriff . . . or to the person who is to serve it", and since the summons was not delivered to Fonk's mother by the clerk, Fonk's mother was not authorized by law to make service of process. In re Marriage of Fonk/Ulsher, 260 M 379, 860 P2d 145, 50 St. Rep. 1112 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Shikany, 268 M 493, 887 P2d 153, 51 St. Rep. 1031 (1994). See also Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Failure to Comply With Service Requirements — Prejudice Shown: The Supreme Court will uphold the jurisdiction of a District Court despite a failure to comply with all mandatory service requirements only when the plaintiff affirmatively shows that there is absolutely no possibility of prejudice from the failure. Sink v. Squire, 236 M 269, 769 P2d 706, 46 St. Rep. 352 (1989).

Amended Complaint Served With Original Summons and Complaint — Personal Jurisdiction Acquired: Where the defendant implement company sought to set aside a default judgment obtained against it by arguing that service of an amended complaint with the original summons and complaint constituted defective service and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that since service of the original summons and complaint was properly made, the only issue was whether the amendment was properly made. Because Rule 4C does not require a summons to be served with an amended complaint and because the amended complaint may be served by delivering a copy to the party and may be filed within a reasonable time after service, the simultaneous service of the amended complaint did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction over the defendant. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

Clerk's Authority to Issue Exclusive: The power to issue a summons lies exclusively with the clerk. An attorney can only request that the summons be issued. (See 1997 amendment.) Larango v. Lovely, 196 M 43, 637 P2d 517, 38 St. Rep. 2107 (1981).

Requirement for Name of Plaintiff's Attorney Mandatory: The provision of section 93-3003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 4D and 12(a), M.R.Civ.P.), requiring that the name of plaintiff's attorney be endorsed on a summons was mandatory, unless it be affirmatively shown that the absence of his name could not possibly have worked prejudice to defendant; if it did not, it was void. Holt v. Sather, 81 M 442, 264 P 108 (1928).

Attorney's Name to Be Shown — Purpose: Under former law, the purpose of the requirement that the name of plaintiff's attorney be endorsed on the summons was to advise defendant who plaintiff's attorney is, so that he might know to whom notice must be given of any step he might desire to take in his defense. State ex rel. Jerry v. District Court, 57 M 328, 188 P 365 (1920).

County Shown in Title: A summons entitled in the wrong county is void and will not support an attachment. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Allen, 51 M 89, 149 P 494 (1915).

Signature of Clerk: The signature of the clerk is a matter of substance, and a fundamental part of the summons, without which there is no summons. In re Farrell, 36 M 254, 92 P 785 (1907); Sharman v. Huot, 20 M 555, 52 P 558 (1898), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

Seal of Court Required: Under former law, a District Court summons is void if issued without the seal of the court, where the statute provides that it "must be issued under the seal of the court", and no jurisdiction of the defendant is acquired by the service thereof. Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903). See Burke v. Inter-State S&L Ass'n, 25 M 315, 64 P 879 (1901); In re Farrell, 36 M 254, 92 P 785 (1907).

GENERAL

Service of Process by Publication Proper When Diligent Inquiry Made for Heirs: Following service of process by publication, default judgment was entered against any potential heirs who failed to appear. The doctrine of laches precluded claimants from obtaining redistribution of an estate following distribution to heirs who timely appeared and litigated the distribution. In re Estate of Bovey, 2010 MT 217, 358 Mont. 14, 244 P.3d 716.

Lack of Circumstances to Grant Relief From Default Judgment on Issue of Service of Process: Defendant sought to vacate a default judgment on grounds that process was not properly served. The District Court did not rule on the motion and the motion was considered to be denied. On appeal, defendant contended that the court erred by not granting the motion to vacate. Whether defendant was properly served before default was entered was the only circumstance that warranted relief from the default judgment, and the District Court answered that question of fact by denying the motion to set aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court found no extraordinary circumstances to justify setting aside the default judgment, and the District Court was affirmed. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Wellnitz, 2008 MT 314, 346 M 61, 194 P3d 630 (2008), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Required Service in Quiet Title Action — Decree Without Service on Affected Party Not Binding: Defendants instituted an action to quiet title to property that bordered plaintiff's land along a river, but plaintiff was not served in the action. Title was adjudicated in favor of defendants, but plaintiff was not aware of the adjudication until after commencing the present action to determine ownership of the same property. Plaintiff claimed that the prior adjudication was not binding, and the District Court agreed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendants did not inspect the property or notify plaintiff of the action, even though plaintiff's deed was a matter of public record. Because defendants failed to conduct a diligent search and inquiry regarding parties that would be affected by the quiet title action and failed to notify plaintiff as an affected party, plaintiff was not bound by the quiet title adjudication in the case at bar. Andersen v. Monforton, 2005 MT 310, 329 M 460, 125 P3d 614 (2005).

Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Based on Failure of Service Affirmed: The District Court granted Semenza a default judgment in February 2004 after Semenza stated that defendant was properly served but failed to plead or defend. In May 2004, defendant moved to set aside the default judgment on grounds that defendant was not properly served. Semenza argued that the motion must be denied pursuant to Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., because more than 60 days had elapsed since judgment. The District Court did not rule on Semenza's argument, but instead concluded that because defendant was not properly served, the court had no personal jurisdiction to enter the default judgment. Semenza appealed, contending that defendant knew about the case after having received a letter referencing the action. The Supreme Court noted that actual knowledge of a lawsuit is not a substitute for proper service. Addressing Semenza's argument regarding Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court held that if service of process is flawed, personal jurisdiction over a party is not acquired and that judgment entered without jurisdiction is void. The District Court was affirmed. Semenza v. Kniss, 2005 MT 268, 329 M 115, 122 P3d 1203 (2005), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and followed in Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Glacier Kitchens, Inc., 2012 MT 132, 365 Mont. 276, 281 P.3d 600.

No District Court Jurisdiction to Enter Marriage Dissolution in Favor of One Party Absent Service of Dissolution Petition and Summons on Other Party: On August 15, 2003, the parties entered a property settlement agreement dividing the marital estate, and the wife also signed a consent to entry of judgment agreeing to dissolution if the property settlement agreement was presented to the District Court for approval and made an integral part of the dissolution. The husband then filed a petition for dissolution and included the settlement agreement and the wife's consent to entry of judgment, but did not serve the wife with any of the filings. The District Court held a hearing without the wife being present, adopted the settlement agreement, and entered a decree of dissolution. The husband's counsel mailed a copy of the judgment to the wife, who then filed a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion to set aside the judgment, claiming that the decree was void because the husband failed to have a summons issued and to serve her with process. The motion was denied, but on appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment. Dissolution proceedings are not exempt from rules regarding service of process, and if one party commences a dissolution proceeding, the other party must be served as provided in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Further, a petition for dissolution must be signed under oath by both parties. The wife's execution of the documents prior to the filing of the case did not constitute a voluntary appearance in the action, nor does notice of a hearing substitute for service of summons. A District Court may obtain personal jurisdiction through strict compliance with the mandatory rules for service of process, and in this case, the wife's signing of documents prior to the filing of the dissolution petition did not confer jurisdiction on the court absent service of process. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion in failing to grant the wife's motion to set aside the judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), following Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581 (1991), and In re Marriage of Grounds/Coward, 271 M 350, 897 P2d 200 (1995).

Failure to Personally Serve Notice of Child Custody Proceedings to Parent Incarcerated Out-of-State Not Reversible Error: The father was incarcerated in Washington state and was notified by mail of proceedings prior to the filing of a petition for permanent legal custody and termination of parental rights regarding his children, rather than by personal service. He contended that failure to serve notice personally was reversible error. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although the preferred practice is to personally serve parents and legal guardians whose whereabouts are known with copies of all petitions in accordance with 41-3-422, the issue of personal service was not dispositive in this case. Because the father was incarcerated at all times during the proceedings, it would have been impossible for him to exercise his legal rights to parent the children during that time. He was unable to show how personal service would have significantly impacted the proceedings or how invalidation of the proceedings would have a significant impact on his parental rights. Therefore, failure to personally serve the father with notice of the proceedings prior to filing the petition for permanent legal custody was not reversible error. In re L.M.A.T. & B.L.F.T., 2002 MT 163, 310 M 422, 51 P3d 504 (2002).

Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Reference Statutory Judicial Review Provisions in Administrative Order Addressing Child Support Enforcement — Due Process Violation Constituting Reversible Error: The mother filed a petition with the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) for assistance in obtaining child support from the father. CSED initiated an administrative action to determine the amount of support owing, and an administrative law judge conducted a contested case hearing on the issue and entered an order establishing the father's current and past-due child support obligation. The order included a paragraph notifying the parents of their statutory right to petition for judicial review of the administrative decision under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7 (MAPA), but did not reference 40-5-253, which contains more specific procedural requirements for appealing from an administrative decision in a child support enforcement case than the provisions in MAPA. The father filed a petition for judicial review and mailed copies to the mother and CSED but failed to properly serve the parties as required in 40-5-253. The District Court concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the father failed to comply with 40-5-253. The court dismissed the petition. The father moved the court to amend or reconsider the petition, contending that the application of 40-5-253 violated his due process rights because he did not receive sufficient notice of the procedures by which to obtain judicial review of the administrative decision. The motion was denied, but the court nevertheless subsequently entered another order correcting the clerical error by adding a reference to 40-5-253 to the notice provision of the earlier order and then granted CSED's motion to dismiss. The father appealed. The Supreme Court noted that proper service of a petition for judicial review was a threshold requirement for the District Court to obtain jurisdiction in this case and that under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7, a petition for judicial review may be properly served by mailing copies to the agency and other parties, but there is no requirement that a summons be issued and served in conjunction with the petition. By filing the petition for judicial review and mailing copies to the mother and CSED, the father fulfilled the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469 (1996). However, specific statutory requirements prevail over general provisions such as those in MAPA, and the Supreme Court agreed that the portion of the notice informing the father that MAPA would govern the proceedings was misleading, absent any reference to the different, specific procedural requirements for CSED actions under 40-5-253. The Supreme Court adopted federal interpretations of the due process notice requirements in this regard, which provide that the opportunity to be heard is not meaningful if the notice provided does not accurately inform the person to whom it is given of how to take advantage of that opportunity. The notice provisions in the administrative order did not provide father with adequate notice to meet due process requirements, so application of 40-5-253 would violate the father's due process rights. Under these unique circumstances, it was required that the father's petition for judicial review must be governed by the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands. Those requirements were met, so the District Court did acquire subject matter jurisdiction and abused its discretion in dismissing the father's petition for judicial review based on his failure to comply with 40-5-253. The case was reversed for further proceedings under MAPA. Pickens v. Shelton-Thompson, 2000 MT 131, 300 M 16, 3 P3d 603, 57 St. Rep. 543 (2000), followed in In re Support Obligation of McGurran v. Failure to Provide Sufficient Notice to Hold Defendant Liable for Prior Default Judgment — Amendment of Complaint to Include Alleged Business Alter Ego Denied — Summons Untimely: Hadford obtained a default judgment against Big Sky Billing Service, Inc. (Big Sky), in a wrongful discharge action but named neither Big Sky director in the complaint. After learning that Big Sky had no assets, Hadford filed a complaint against Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc. (Credit Bureau), and John Does I through IV, alleging that Big Sky was the alter ego of Credit Bureau and that Credit Bureau was thus liable for the default judgment obtained against Big Sky. A summons was issued and served on Credit Bureau but not on the John Does. Credit Bureau sought summary dismissal, contending that it had not received sufficient notice of the wrongful discharge action to be held personally liable for the default amount, and submitted a supporting affidavit that Credit Bureau was not the alter ego of Big Sky. Hadford moved to amend the complaint to substitute the Credit Bureau director for a John Doe. The trial court granted Credit Bureau's request for summary dismissal and denied Hadford's motion to amend the complaint. Distinguishing numerous cases regarding service of a parent corporation as constituting notice to subsidiaries or affiliates, the Supreme Court held that the lack of service of summons barred Hadford from holding Credit Bureau liable for the default judgment and that notice to Big Sky did not constitute notice to Credit Bureau. Further, because no summons was issued on any of the John Doe defendants within 1 year of commencement of the action, as required by Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motion to amend the complaint to substitute a party was untimely and properly denied, and the action was dismissed. Hadford v. Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc., 1998 MT 179, 289 M 529, 962 P2d 1198, 55 St. Rep. 727 (1998), followed in Reisdorff v. Yellowstone County, 1999 MT 280, 296 M 525, 989 P2d 850, 56 St. Rep. 1128 (1999).

Knowledge by Husband Not Substitute for Service on His Corporation: Grounds sued Coward for past-due maintenance and also asked for an order allowing her to join her husband's professional corporation as a party. The lower court ruled that Coward owed his ex-wife over $80,000 and that his professional corporation was jointly and severally liable for his obligations. The Supreme Court held that despite the fact that the husband was the sole officer, director, and shareholder of the corporation, personal service on him did not constitute service on the corporation and therefore the lower court had not obtained jurisdiction over the corporation and could not hold it liable for the husband's debts. In re Marriage of Grounds/Coward, 271 M 350, 897 P2d 200, 52 St. Rep. 482 (1995).

Specific Methods of Service as Governing Over General Methods: Where specific statutes such as 27-18-701 provide for the method of service, those specifics govern over the general rules set out in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988).

Amended Complaint Served With Original Summons and Complaint — Personal Jurisdiction Acquired: Where the defendant implement company sought to set aside a default judgment obtained against it by arguing that service of an amended complaint with the original summons and complaint constituted defective service and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that since service of the original summons and complaint was properly made, the only issue was whether the amendment was properly made. Because Rule 4C does not require a summons to be served with an amended complaint and because the amended complaint may be served by delivering a copy to the party and may be filed within a reasonable time after service, the simultaneous service of the amended complaint did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction over the defendant. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

Collateral Attack on Judgments — Reasonable Diligence — Invalid Service — Failure of Jurisdiction: While it is a general rule that a judgment cannot be attacked in a collateral action, such attack is permissible if the first judgment is void for lack of jurisdiction. If service of process is improperly made, the court acquires no jurisdiction over that party and it may collaterally attack the judgment. "Reasonable diligence" was not used by appellants in the prior action to locate individuals to be served under Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., because they had dealt with such individuals before and should have been able to contact them, and the Secretary of State had the name and address of the corporate agent and director on file. Therefore, service upon the Secretary of State did not confer jurisdiction, and collateral attack was proper. Russell Realty v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980), followed in Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 256 M 114, 845 P2d 106, 49 St. Rep. 1162 (1992).

Clerk's Affidavit Not Acceptable as to Variant Date of Service: A District Court Clerk's affidavit should not be accepted to prove that service was made on a date other than the date shown on the certificate of mailing on the notice of entry of judgment because the affidavit is not part of the record on appeal. Flathead Hay Cubing, Inc. v. Moore, 35 St. Rep. 1260 (1978) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports or Pacific Reporter).

Decree of Dissolution: A decree of dissolution affects the status of the parties and so is an action in rem. Therefore, the court did not err in entering a decree even in the absence of the respondent. Blair v. Blair, 178 M 220, 583 P2d 403, 35 St. Rep. 1256 (1978).

SUBSECTION (1) — BY WHOM SERVED

Service by Mother of Party Defective: Mavanee Ulsher filed for divorce from her husband Mickey Fonk. The deputy sheriff left the summons with Fonk's mother and signed the return that he had personally served Fonk. A decree of dissolution was entered by default and contained an order that Fonk pay child support. The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) sought enforcement of its assigned child support rights by intercepting Fonk's tax returns and garnishing his income. Fonk filed an action alleging that he was not the children's natural father. Ulsher moved for dismissal, arguing that the paternity issue was res judicata and constituted a collateral attack on the default judgment entered in the dissolution action. Fonk alleged that he had never been properly served in the dissolution action, although his mother testified that she laid the papers on the table and told him they were there and the next morning the papers were gone. The lower court ruled that the service of process was valid on the basis that it had been served on Fonk not by the sheriff but by an "other person over the age of 18 not a party to the action" as permitted by subsection (1)(a) of this rule. The Supreme Court held that the service was invalid on the basis of the language in Rule 4C(1), M.R.Civ.P., which states that "the clerk shall . . . deliver the summons either to the sheriff . . . or to the person who is to serve it", and since the summons was not delivered to Fonk's mother by the clerk, Fonk's mother was not authorized by law to make service of process. In re Marriage of Fonk/Ulsher, 260 M 379, 860 P2d 145, 50 St. Rep. 1112 (1993), followed in In re Marriage of Shikany, 268 M 493, 887 P2d 153, 51 St. Rep. 1031 (1994). See also Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Dissolution — Actual Knowledge Without Proper Service Insufficient to Confer Jurisdiction: Husband attempted to have wife served by a Sheriff out of state but mistakenly gave the Sheriff an incorrect address. Later, by mail, husband sent wife papers that she refused to sign but that she acknowledged receiving by a letter stating that she would not sign. A summons was not included with the complaint. The District Court found that the wife's reply letter constituted proof of constructive or substituted service and entered a default judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not acquire personal jurisdiction over the wife and that the default decree of dissolution was void. Marriage of Blaskovich, 249 M 248, 815 P2d 581, 48 St. Rep. 675 (1991).

Coal Shipped F.O.B. Montana Mine — Delivery Accepted — Long-Arm Jurisdiction: The Ninth Circuit Court upheld the District Court finding of jurisdiction. Under the terms of a contract, coal is shipped F.O.B. to the Montana Decker mine. Commonwealth Edison accepted delivery for 5 years prior to Edison's invocation of force majeure provisions of the purchase agreement. The finding that Edison transacted business within the state and the assertion of jurisdiction under Rule 4B(1)(a), M.R.Civ.P., comports with the Montana Supreme Court's reading of long-arm statute. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F2d 834 (9th Cir. 1986), 43 St. Rep. 337 (1985).

Known Out-of-State Address — No Tolling of Statute of Limitations: When persons involved in a tort who were residents of the state at its occurrence subsequently moved to another state, and plaintiff insurance company was aware of their address, the Statute of Limitations didn't toll due to absence from the state under 27-2-402 because Montana District Courts had jurisdiction under Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P., and process could be served under this rule. Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Jurisdiction — Attaches When: Jurisdiction of court attaches at time of personal service of complaint and summons; personal service of summons and complaint in divorce action precluded and made a nullity a subsequent divorce entered founded upon service by publication. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Service by Court Officer Not Required: It is not necessary that a summons be served by an officer of the court. Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

Service by Minor: Service of summons by one who was not of the age required by statute, though defective, would not make void or subject to collateral attack a judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties, and keeping within the limits of its power. Burke v. Inter-State S&L Ass'n, 25 M 315, 64 P 879 (1901).

SUBSECTION (2) — AGENT RECEIVING SERVICE

Service of Process on Person in Charge of Office Shared With Defendant Considered Proper: Plaintiff attempted to serve process on defendant at defendant's registered address in Louisiana. The office was shared by two businesses, both owned by the owner of the defendant corporation. The receptionist in the office told the process server that the owner was not present, but held herself out to be the office manager and indicated that she would give the papers to the owner. However, the receptionist was in fact not employed by the defendant corporation. The owner subsequently argued that process was not properly served. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that service was proper under these circumstances. The process server had no reason to doubt that process had been served on a proper person, and service on the receptionist, who then gave the papers to the owner the same day, afforded the defendant corporation adequate notice of the lawsuit and the opportunity to defend itself and satisfied the requirements of proper service of process. Mont. Professional Sports, LLC v. Nat'l Indoor Football League, LLC, 2008 MT 98, 342 M 292, 180 P3d 1142 (2008), followed in Bryden v. Lakeside Ventures, LLC, 2009 MT 320, 352 M 452, 218 P3d 61 (2009).

Service Upon Limited Liability Company Not Constituting Service Upon Individual Company Members — No Joinder of Member Solely for Executing on Judgment Against Company: Plaintiff obtained a judgment against a limited liability company, but when plaintiff discovered that the company had no assets to levy against, plaintiff moved to levy judgment against defendant personally. The motion was dismissed without prejudice, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although defendant knew of the lawsuit involving the company, defendant was not separately served, and service upon the company did not constitute service upon the individual members of the company. Further, the District Court did not err in refusing to join defendant after judgment was rendered solely for the purpose of executing judgment because doing so would have deprived defendant of the due process right to notice and the opportunity to be heard. Ioerger v. Reiner, 2005 MT 155, 327 M 424, 114 P3d 1028 (2005), following S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977), Hadford v. Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc., 1998 MT 179, 289 M 529, 962 P2d 1198 (1998), Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), and Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Lack of Small Claims Court Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation Whose Managing Agent Could Not Be Served: Under 25-35-502, the Small Claims Court has jurisdiction of certain claims if the defendant can be served in the county where the action commenced. Here, Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), a Washington corporation with no office or registered agent in Montana, could not be served in Lincoln County, Montana, so the Small Claims Court lacked jurisdiction. Petersen's argument that process could have been served in Lincoln County on Aladdin's warranty service representative or sales representative failed for lack of evidence that either of those representatives was a managing agent or general agent for purposes of service of process. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999), following State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940).

Petition for Judicial Review of Contested Case — Service on Parties Under Rule 5(b) Held Sufficient: Ashmore brought a claim before the Human Rights Commission, alleging that she had been discriminated against by Hilands Golf Club because of her gender, in violation of 49-2-304. The Commission found in favor of Ashmore and awarded her relief. Hilands filed a petition for judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 and served copies of the petition by mail upon counsel for the Commission and Hilands. No summons was served with the petition, and no service was made upon the Attorney General. Ashmore filed a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., alleging that no jurisdiction had been obtained over the Commission by service of a summons upon the Attorney General, contrary to the holding in Fife v. Martin, 261 M 471, 863 P2d 403 (1993). The District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Fife and holding that because judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 is in the nature of an appeal, in which jurisdiction over the parties has already been established, service of a summons with the petition is unnecessary and holding that the petition may be served upon the parties by mail under Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court noted that it was sufficient to mail a copy of the petition upon the parties and the agency, whether or not the agency had been a party to the administrative proceeding. Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469, 53 St. Rep. 664 (1996), followed in Forsythe v. Great Falls Holdings, LLC, 2008 MT 384, 347 M 67, 196 P3d 1233 (2008).

Judicial Review of Agency Paternity Action — Failure to Serve Attorney General and Agency as Real Party in Interest — Service Void — Lack of Jurisdiction: The Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) sought to compel Fife to submit to paternity testing for purposes of determining child support obligations. Fife sought judicial review of the administrative action by serving process by mail upon the mother and CSED but failed to properly name CSED as respondent or to serve the Attorney General or CSED in the manner required under the provisions of this rule. The District Court correctly held that it was without jurisdiction and properly dismissed the petition for judicial review for failure to effectuate valid service of process. Fife v. Martin, 261 M 471, 863 P2d 403, 50 St. Rep. 1414 (1993), overruled in Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469, 53 St. Rep. 664 (1996).

No Service on Corporate Agent: Registered agent for a small corporation moved to California where he was personally served with process. Agent contended that he had been personally served but that neither the corporation or the registered agent had been served. The Supreme Court held that service of process was adequate to confer jurisdiction over the corporation even though only one copy of the documents was served on the defendant corporate officer as both an individual and an officer. There were no allegations that the corporate officer was being misled by the service. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

Service Upon Corporation — Proper Agent: The doctrine of ostensible agency appears to have no application when it becomes involved with the question whether service of process has been legally made upon a "managing or general agent". Further, service upon a former employee of a company was not service upon the company itself and default judgment was vacated and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

"Managing Agent" Defined: A representative of a foreign corporation who in his territory in the state attended to all the company's business, making sales, keeping accounts of customers, making collections, and adjusting complaints for damaged goods under direction of the company, and who was paid a regular salary, was its managing agent upon whom, under section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), service of summons could properly be made in an action against the corporation. State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940), followed in Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999), and distinguished in Minnehoma Fin. Co. v. Van Oosten, 198 F. Supp. 200 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Artifice to Obtain Service: Procuring service on business agent by representation over phone by attorney that he was a laundryman from Anaconda, asking if agent was in position to serve him, thereby inducing agent into jurisdiction of court, did not constitute an abuse of legal process or invalidate the service since the agent was already in the state and the misrepresentation did not induce agent to come to the state. State ex rel. Taylor Laundry Co. v. District Court, 102 M 274, 57 P2d 772 (1936).

"Business Agent" Defined: Under former law, the "business agent" of a foreign corporation must be one who stands in the shoes of the corporation in relation to the particular business managed, conducted, or controlled by him for it, must have in fact a representative capacity and derivative authority, and if such be the character of his agency the law will impute authority to him notwithstanding denial thereof. He need not be resident, but must be attending to business in state when served. State ex rel. Taylor Laundry Co. v. District Court, 102 M 274, 57 P2d 772 (1936).

"Business Agent" Defined — Continuous Course of Business: Under former law, a representative of a foreign corporation contacting customers, supervising installation, adjusting and repairing machinery sold, and accepting old machinery as part payment on purchase price on new sales in a continuous course of business is a "business agent" under this section. Isolated transactions do not constitute a doing of business. State ex rel. Taylor Laundry Co. v. District Court, 102 M 274, 57 P2d 772 (1936).

Sheriff's Averments as to Service Upon Trustee: A return upon a summons that the officer served the same upon one C, "a trustee being the defendant named in said summons", is fatally defective in failing to show a service upon the corporation. Mathias v. White Sulphur Springs Ass'n, 17 M 542, 43 P 921 (1896).

Sheriff's Averments as to Agency: Where the record on appeal failed to show any service of summons on the defendant, and there was simply a return of the Sheriff, reciting that he had personally served the summons on B, he being the agent of the defendant, there was no compliance with the statute in regard to the manner of service. Davidson v. Clark, 7 M 100, 14 P 663 (1887).

SUBSECTION (2) — SERVICE UPON FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

Improper Use of Secretary of State to Serve Nonresident Defendant — Default Judgment Void: Plaintiffs' business was destroyed by a fire allegedly caused by a defective light ballast manufactured by defendant corporation located in Illinois. Although plaintiffs had contact with defendant's counsel, experts, and insurer in demanding payment for the loss, plaintiffs never attempted to use Rule 4D(2)(e) or Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to personally serve defendant with notice that a suit had been filed in Montana, but instead relied on Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State. Not having been notified of the suit, defendant failed to answer the complaint and prepared no defense, and default judgment was entered for plaintiffs. When notified of the default judgment, defendant immediately retained counsel and moved to set aside the judgment on grounds that service was inadequate because no one in authority at defendant's corporation ever received the summons and complaint. The District Court failed to act on the motion, so the motion was considered to be denied, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. In order to use Rule 4D(2)(f) to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State, plaintiff was first required to exercise reasonable diligence to serve notice on a representative of defendant in Montana or, if a representative was not available, to exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain defendant's address (of which plaintiff's counsel in this case was aware) and serve notice at that address. Because plaintiff's counsel did not exercise reasonable diligence and attempt to directly serve defendant before affecting service through the Montana Secretary of State, service was improper and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction over defendant, rendering the default judgment void as a matter of law. Nikolaisen v. Advance Transformer Co., 2007 MT 352, 340 M 332, 174 P3d 940 (2007), distinguished in Ptarmigan Owner's Ass'n, Inc. v. Alton, 2013 MT 69, 369 Mont. 274, 298 P.3d 1140.

"Doing Business" Defined: "Doing business" in the state by a foreign corporation within the meaning of section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), prescribing the manner in which such corporations should be served with summons, meant conducting business in such a way and to such an extent as to warrant the inference that it has subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the state, the section contemplating a more or less continuous course of business. An isolated transaction (a sale of machinery) did not bring the corporation within the section. State ex rel. Am. Laundry Mach. Co. v. District Court, 98 M 278, 41 P2d 26 (1934).

Service Upon Agent Ineffective as to Corporation: Where a foreign corporation was not doing business within the state, did not maintain a local office or have a resident agent, and therefore could not be served with summons in the manner prescribed in this section (now subsection (2)(e) of Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), service upon its alleged managing or business agent (a nonresident and temporarily in the state) was ineffectual as to the corporation. State ex rel. Am. Laundry Mach. Co. v. District Court, 98 M 278, 41 P2d 26 (1934).

SUBSECTION (2) — MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE

Statements Tending to Show Corporate Status: A recital in motion to quash service that "defendant was and is not a joint stock company or association" is a negative pregnant which, standing alone, indicates that defendant was a corporation. Reference to defendant throughout the complaint, as well as in the Sheriff's return, as Northwestern Engineering "Company" was sufficient prima facie to show that it was a corporation, in absence of showing to the contrary, the burden of showing which was upon movant. State ex rel. NW. Eng'r Co. v. District Court, 114 M 179, 133 P2d 594 (1943).

Statements as Showing a Defense to Action: Statements made in an affidavit in support of a motion to quash service of process upon a representative of a foreign corporation in an action against him and the corporation for his negligence raising the question of the scope of his employment at the time of the alleged negligence, tended to show a defense, and had nothing to do with service of summons, and the further statement that he had been discharged "on or about" the day of service was insufficient to show that his discharge came prior to service. State ex rel. Schmidt v. District Court, 111 M 16, 105 P2d 677 (1940).

SUBSECTION (2) — MISCELLANEOUS CASES

Service of Process as Exercise of Discretion in Charge of Threat in Official Matters: Deputies attempted to serve civil process on Keating at his home. Keating threatened the officers and was convicted of threats in official matters under 45-7-102. On appeal, Keating contended that service of process was not a discretionary function that could serve as the basis of a charge of threats in official matters. The Supreme Court noted that the statutory definition of threats in official matters speaks to a threat made for the purpose of influencing an exercise of discretion by a public servant but does not speak to a discretionary function. The fact that service of process is a statutory duty under 7-32-2121, rather than a discretionary function, does not relate to the issue of whether service of process involves an exercise of discretion under 45-7-102. Under this rule, personal service of process can be accomplished wherever and whenever the person to be served can be found. The Sheriff's Department uses a variety of discretionary methods of serving process. Thus, service of process clearly involves the power of choice among several courses of action, constituting a sufficient exercise of discretion to form a basis for charges of threats in official matters. St. v. Keating, 285 M 463, 949 P2d 251, 54 St. Rep. 1250 (1997).

Default Judgment Void for Failure of Substitute Service: The District Court was correct in setting aside the default judgment against Western Supply, Inc., as void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., for failure of service of process when the fatal flaw in the service was not merely in a lack of due diligence, but also in the failure to submit a proper and sufficient affidavit in compliance with Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., in support of substituted service on the Secretary of State. Jurisdiction cannot be acquired without strict compliance with the statute. Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), followed in Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000).

Service of Process: Due to the attorney's representation of defendant in a closely related action, which necessarily implied a duty to protect his client's interests against this type of action, service of process on her attorney was valid as service on defendant within the meaning of Rule 4D(2)(a), M.R.Civ.P. Doble v. Talbott, 180 M 166, 589 P2d 994 (1979).

Service Possible — Statute of Limitations Not Tolled: Absence of alleged tortfeasor from state did not toll Statute of Limitations where it was possible to obtain service during the entire 3-year period, under Rule 4D(2)(a) initially and under Rule 4D(3) after he left the state. State ex rel. McGhee v. District Court, 162 M 31, 508 P2d 130 (1973).

"Association" Defined: Contention that the word "association" as used in section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), must be considered modified by the word "joint-stock" was without merit. State ex rel. Cook v. District Court, 102 M 424, 58 P2d 273 (1936).

Service Upon Chairman of Trustees as Sufficient; Service of notice upon the chairman of a board of school trustees, directed to the board, is sufficient as against the contention that it should have been served upon each member thereof. State ex rel. Stephens v. Keaster, 82 M 126, 266 P 387 (1928).

Two or More Defendants in Same County: Where all the defendants in an action to quiet title, residing in the same county, were served with summons, and one defendant was served with a copy of the complaint as required by section 93-3006, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D,

M.R.Civ.P.), the fact that such defendant filed a disclaimer of any interest in the land did not affect the service on the other defendants, there being nothing to show that he was not made a defendant in good faith. Mantle v. Casey, 31 M 408, 78 P 591 (1904).

SUBSECTION (3) — MISCELLANEOUS CASES

Defendant Out of State But Subject to Montana Jurisdiction — Statute of Limitations Applicable: Plaintiff filed a malpractice action. Summary judgment was granted to defendant physician because the action was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that the statute of limitations should have been tolled because the physician was absent from Montana and thus prevented from being served with a summons and complaint. The Supreme Court held that the power to toll the statute of limitations in 27-2-402 arises only when a defendant remains out of state and cannot be served with process. In this case the alleged malpractice occurred in Montana, and although the physician was out of state, the physician remained at all times subject to the jurisdiction of Montana courts and was therefore amenable to service of process. Thus, the statute of limitations was not tolled and the action was properly dismissed for failure to file the action within 3 years of the alleged malpractice. Cobb v. Saltiel, 2009 MT 171, 350 M 501, 210 P3d 138 (2009).

Failure to Comply With Service Requirements — Prejudice Shown: The Supreme Court will uphold the jurisdiction of a District Court despite a failure to comply with all mandatory service requirements only when the plaintiff affirmatively shows that there is absolutely no possibility of prejudice from the failure. Sink v. Squire, 236 M 269, 769 P2d 706, 46 St. Rep. 352 (1989).

Service Possible — Statute of Limitations Not Tolled: Absence of alleged tortfeasor from state did not toll Statute of Limitations where it was possible to obtain service during the entire 3-year period, under Rule 4D(2)(a) initially and under Rule 4D(3) after he left the state. State ex rel. McGhee v. District Court, 162 M 31, 508 P2d 130 (1973).

Day of Service — Personal Service Subsequent to Order for Publication: Where, after the making of an order for publication of summons upon a nonresident defendant, the summons is personally served, the service does not become complete until the day on which the fourth publication would have been made if plaintiff had proceeded under the order of publication, and the date of personal service is considered the date of the first publication for the purpose of computing the time of service. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926).

SUBSECTION (5) — AFFIDAVIT

Insufficient Service — Judgment Void — Error in Dismissal of Action to Set Aside Default Judgment: In March of 1995, John conveyed a farm and residence to his brother Richard by quitclaim deed. One year later, after arranging for another person to farm the property and live in the residence, Richard left for the Philippines to be married. One month later, John filed an action seeking to cancel the quitclaim deed, serving the summons and complaint upon Richard by publication because John stated that he was unable to determine Richard's address. Default judgment was entered for John 2 months later. In 1999, Richard moved to set aside the default judgment, alleging that service by publication and the resulting judgment were void because of extrinsic fraud by John and because John did not comply with the service requirements of subsection (5)(e) of this rule. The District Court dismissed Richard's action, and he appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing Richard's claim. The District Court did not provide any findings of fact, conclusions of law, memorandum, or legal authority for its decision. Insufficient service of process is an ample ground to vacate a default judgment. Because of the absence of any hearing or oral argument in the matter, an unsupported cursory order, and an overall undeveloped record, the Supreme Court remanded for a hearing to address whether Richard's claim for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was filed within a reasonable time. Ihnot v. Ihnot, 2000 MT 77, 299 M 137, 999 P2d 303, 57 St. Rep. 338 (2000). See also Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, Inc., 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and In re Marriage of Fonk/Ulsher, 260 M 379, 860 P2d 145, 50 St. Rep. 1112 (1993).

Marriage Dissolution — Insufficient Service of Process Based on Insufficient Affidavit: An affidavit of the husband's lawyer stating that the husband had not heard from his wife was insufficient in that it did not state that the wife was out of state or was concealing herself or that a diligent inquiry had been made as to her whereabouts. Because the affidavit did not allege diligent inquiry, it was not sufficient evidence of diligent inquiry, and service by publication based on the affidavit was insufficient service of process. The District Court abused its discretion in refusing to vacate the default judgment and an order to convey real property. In re Marriage of Shikany, 268 M 493, 887 P2d 153, 51 St. Rep. 1031 (1994).

Failure to Set Forth Facts Showing Nonresidence — Defective Affidavit for Publication — Quiet Title Actions Void: Plaintiffs brought an action against Rosebud County, claiming that they were entitled to a royalty interest in certain property. The Supreme Court held two previous quiet title actions void because complete service was not achieved under the law (now repealed) that provided for service by publication since in each action, an affidavit was required to show that the defendant resided out of state. Citing Aronow v. Anderson, 110 M 484, 104 P2d 104 (1940), the Supreme Court held that the affidavit in this case was insufficient because it failed to recite the facts supporting the conclusion that the defendant resided out of state and failed to allege the facts describing the search for the defendant. The quiet title actions were thus void for lack of jurisdiction. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

Failure of Affidavit for Service by Publication to State "Residence of the Defendant Is Unknown": In an action to procure a tax deed, an affidavit for publication stating that defendant could not be found in the State of Montana did not satisfy the requirement of Rule 4D(5)(e), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The key fact required in an affidavit for publication is that the affidavit state that the residence of defendant is unknown. The affidavit was thus insufficient, and service was insufficient to obtain jurisdiction over defendant. Therefore, she could collaterally attack the judgment against her in the action for procurement of a tax deed by bringing a separate action. It was reversible error for the lower court to grant summary judgment against her in her separate action on the ground that her case was barred by res judicata as a result of the judgment against her. Kahle v. Smithers, 225 M 452, 733 P2d 844, 44 St. Rep. 394 (1987).

Absence From State — Facts to Be Alleged: In order that absence from the state be sufficient ground for publishing summons, there must be a prolonged or protracted absence amounting to a departure, as distinguished from a mere temporary absence, i.e., facts must be stated from which the conclusion can be reached that there was no intention of immediate return, as well as facts supporting the conclusion that defendant is absent from the state, particularly where the affidavit states that his residence is in the state. Aronow v. Bishop, 112 M 611, 120 P2d 423 (1941).

Affidavit by Attorney Upon Information and Belief Sufficient: If an affidavit for publication of service of notice of a proceeding to determine heirship set forth the ultimate facts which form the bases for such service, it is sufficient, and where it is made by the attorney for foreign heirs it may be made on information and belief. In re Baxter's Estate, 98 M 291, 39 P2d 186 (1934), distinguished in Aronow v. Anderson, 110 M 484, 104 P2d 2 (1940).

Affidavit Upon Information Sufficient: An affidavit for the publication of summons, where the defendant resides out of the state, is sufficient, although the statements that the defendant is a nonresident, that the plaintiff has a cause of action against him, and that he is a necessary or proper party to the action, are made upon information and belief. Smith v. Collis, 42 M 350, 112 P 1070 (1910).

Publication of Summons — Sufficiency of Affidavit: The Clerk of the District Court being a ministerial officer, and having no power to pass judicially upon the sufficiency of an affidavit filed as a basis for the publication of a summons, it is not necessary that the affidavit should set forth the probative facts, as before a judicial officer, but it is sufficient if it sets forth substantially in the language of the statute enough of the ultimate facts recited in the statute as reasons for the publication of the summons. Ervin v. Milne, 17 M 494, 43 P 706 (1896), distinguishing Alderson v. Marshall, 7 M 288, 16 P 576 (1888), and Palmer v. McMaster, 8 M 186, 19 P 585 (1888), distinguished in Aronow v. Anderson, 110 M 484, 104 P2d 2 (1940).

SUBSECTION (5) — JURISDICTION IN PERSONAM

Promissory Note — Action to Compel Surrender as in Personam: An action by the purchaser of personal property to compel the seller, a nonresident, to surrender promissory notes was an action in personam, and the fact that the notes were in the possession of a local attorney did not change the character of the action where the attorney was not made a party to the action and the notes were not impounded by court process. The court did not obtain jurisdiction by substituted service of summons and its judgment rendered on default of defendant was void. Winnett Times Publishing Co. v. Berg, 82 M 141, 265 P 710 (1928).

In Personam Actions — Service by Publication Not Warranted: Service by publication does not warrant a judgment in a proceeding strictly in personam. Gassert v. Strong, 38 M 18, 98 P 497 (1908).

Publication Under Statute — Common-Law Service Not Abrogated: A general statute providing for the publication of summons in civil actions does not abrogate the common-law rule which required personal service of summons in actions in personam. Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert, 31 M 488, 78 P 967 (1904).

SUBSECTION (5) — MISCELLANEOUS CASES

Jurisdiction at Time of Service — Voidable Judgment: Jurisdiction of the court attaches at the time of personal service of the complaint and summons, so that a prematurely entered default judgment is voidable and not void. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Original Summons — No Requirement for Filing: There is no provision which requires that the original summons with the return thereon must first be filed with the clerk of the court before an order of publication may be obtained. Clinton v. Miller, 124 M 463, 226 P2d 487 (1951), distinguished in Bentley v. Rosebud County, 230 F2d 1 (1956).

Specific Performance as Action in Personam: A suit for specific performance of a contract to convey real property is a suit in personam and service cannot be had by publication. State ex rel. Miller v. District Court, 120 M 423, 186 P2d 506 (1947).

Proof of Issuance of Summons: Where the record did not directly show the issuance of a summons for publication, but did show that a summons was published in the paper reciting the general purpose of the action as required by section 93-3015, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), judgment was not subject to attack on the ground that the record did not affirmatively show issuance of such summons. Smith v. Hamill, 111 M 585, 112 P2d 195 (1941).

Sunday Publication Approved: Publication of summons "at least once a week for four successive weeks" could, under section 93-3014, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D(5)(c), M.R.Civ.P.), be accomplished by publication on four successive Sundays. State ex rel. Fisher v. District Court, 110 M 61, 99 P2d 211 (1940).

Constructive Service — Statute to Be Observed: A more accurate observance of statutory provisions relative to service of summons is required in the case of constructive service than in personal service, and the presumption in favor of jurisdiction upon rendition of judgment is not as strong when the judgment is based upon constructive service as when based upon personal service. Holt v. Sather, 81 M 442, 264 P 108 (1928).

Action on Corporate Stock as Quasi in Rem: An action against a nonresident holding the legal title to corporate stock, in the possession of a third person in the state, to establish and enforce a trust therein, is one quasi in rem, and service by publication was sufficient to enable the District Court to determine the relative rights of the parties to the stock. Gassert v. Strong, 38 M 18, 98 P 497 (1908).

SUBSECTION (7) — AMENDMENT

Failure to Serve Original Summons Cured by Service of Amended Summons — Failure to Obtain Leave of Court to Amend Summons and Remove Party From Summons Not Fatal to Service of Process: Schmitz filed a pro se action for medical malpractice against Vasquez and Sanz on April 5, 1994. On April 1, 1997, after determining that her claim against Sanz had not gone through the Montana Medical Legal Panel procedure, Schmitz amended her complaint without permission of the District Court and, through counsel, filed the amended complaint. A new summons was issued by the Clerk of District Court on April 1, 1997, and was served on Vasquez the same day. The amended complaint and the new summons were identical to those previously filed and issued except that they did not include any claim against or notice to Sanz. The District Court dismissed the suit because the original summons had not been served within 3 years of its issuance, as required by Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. Relying upon Yarborough v. Glacier County, 285 M 494, 948 P2d 1181 (1997), and distinguishing Ass'n of Unit Owners v. Big Sky, 224 M 142, 729 P2d 469 (1986), and Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the Supreme Court held that since the amended complaint and new summons had only the effect of deleting Sanz as a defendant, Vasquez received the same notice from the amended complaint and second summons that he would have received from the first complaint and summons and therefore was not prejudiced by Schmitz's failure to serve the first complaint within 3 years and failure to obtain leave of court to amend the summons by removing Sanz as a defendant. For these reasons and because the purpose of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure is to obtain a just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action, the Supreme Court held that Schmitz complied with the substance and purpose of Rule 41(e) and that the District Court erred in dismissing the suit. Schmitz v. Vasquez, 1998 MT 314, 292 M 164, 970 M 1039, 55 St. Rep. 1288 (1998).

Defective Notice of Property Forfeiture — Relation Back of Curative Amendment — Due Process Violated: Notice of seizure of automobile and intent to institute forfeiture proceedings under Title 44, ch. 12, was in violation of due process and deprived the court of jurisdiction to enter a default judgment against the owner, who did not answer the allegations, when the notice did not inform the owner that he must answer within 20 days or face default judgment. After the 45 days for filing the notice had passed, the notice could not be amended to cure the defect. The amendment could not relate back to the original timely filing so as to make the amendment timely, because: (1) the forfeiture statute is an exception to the rule that property may not be seized without a prior factfinding hearing and the statute's safeguards should thus be rigidly adhered to and strictly construed; and (2) allowing an amendment as requested by the state under Rule 4D(7), M.R.Civ.P., which provides for amendment of process in the court's discretion unless it clearly appears that the person served would suffer material prejudice to his substantial rights, would (assuming the Rule is applicable to this forfeiture proceeding) significantly prejudice the owner's rights. St. v. 1978 LTD II, 216 M 401, 701 P2d 1365, 42 St. Rep. 901 (1985).

Altering Summons Not Material Prejudice: Without leave of the court an attorney was without authority to alter a summons by substituting his name for that of the former attorney's, deleting a plaintiff's name, adding a plaintiff's name, and adding a middle initial to a plaintiff's name. However, once leave of the court was requested, the court abused its discretion by not allowing the amendment, as material prejudice would not have resulted. The function of the summons is to give notice, and the amendment sought would have given the defendant a more accurate picture of the action being brought against him. Larango v. Lovely, 196 M 43, 637 P2d 517, 38 St. Rep. 2107 (1981), distinguished in Ass'n of Unit Owners of the Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 224 M 142, 729 P2d 469, 43 St. Rep. 2084 (1986), and Schmitz v. Vasquez, 1998 MT 314, 292 M 164, 970 P2d 1039, 55 St. Rep. 1288 (1998).

Jurisdiction Dependent Upon Actual Service: The question of jurisdiction over a defendant is dependent upon the fact of service of summons, not upon the proof thereof. A defective return of proof of service may be amended to conform to the truth, not for the purpose of validating a void judgment but to show that the judgment was never void. State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court, 107 M 97, 80 P2d 367 (1938).

Proof of Service — Supplementation by Affidavit: Where at the time a divorce case against defendant wife who resided in Canada was heard, regularity of proof of service of summons upon her was attacked as defective, but return of service was later supplemented by an affidavit of service in due form, filed with Clerk of District Court and certified to the Supreme Court, the trial court was clothed with jurisdiction. State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court, 107 M 97, 80 P2d 367 (1938).

SUBSECTION (8) — PROOF OF SERVICE

Sufficiency of Notice of Default: A contract for deed did not require that notice be dated in any certain way, except to specify that service was complete on deposit in a post office. Appellant asserted that the notice of default was invalid because the copy he received was undated. However, he acknowledged receiving the notice by certified mail, and there was nothing to indicate prejudice to him by a failure to date it. LeClair v. Reiter, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740, 45 St. Rep. 1531 (1988).

Admission of Service by Foreign Corporation: Appearance and waiver executed by a foreign corporation, not qualified to do business in Montana, acknowledging receipt of amended complaint filed by plaintiff sufficiently complied with the requirements of section 93-3018, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 4D, M.R.Civ.P.), concerning proof of admission of service. Greene Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Morris, 144 M 234, 395 P2d 252 (1964).

Finding of Court — Case of Insufficient Service: Where the names of two defendants had been filled in on a printed return form on the back of a summons, before the words "a copy of said summons", making it appear that joint service was made with one copy of summons, but sufficient charge for two services appeared in the costs blank, the ambiguity and alleged lack of service were negatived by the court's findings of fact that summons was "duly and regularly served upon the defendants and each of them" and the presumption that official duty has been properly performed. E. J. Lander & Co. v. Brown, 110 M 128, 99 P2d 217 (1940).

Proof of Service by Person Appointed by the Court: When service of summons in an action pending in a Justice's Court is made by a person appointed by the Justice, proof of service must be made by affidavit. One so appointed is not a constable and cannot prove service of process by a certificate. Layton v. Trapp, 20 M 453, 52 P 208 (1898).

SUBSECTION (9)
CONTENTS OF AFFIDAVIT OF PERSONAL SERVICE

Irregularity of Service — Voidable Judgment: The failure of the affidavit of service to show the competency of the person making the service constitutes only an irregularity, rendering the judgment voidable and not void, and is not subject to collateral attack. State ex rel. Smith v. District Court, 55 M 602, 179 P 831 (1919).

Service by Minor — Judgment Irregular Only: Where an affidavit of service of summons omitted the statement that the person serving the same was over 18 years of age, a judgment rendered thereon was not void on its face, so as to be subject to collateral attack, the judgment roll showing no want of jurisdiction, but merely irregularity in obtaining it. Burke v. Inter-State S&L Ass'n, 25 M 315, 64 P 879 (1901), distinguished in Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910).

Former Rule 4E. Time limit for issuance and service of process

Service of Suit Against City on County Attorney Improper — Past Actions of Accepting Service Through County Attorney Irrelevant — Motion to Dismiss Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed suit against the city of Bozeman related to a subdivision. Nearly 3 years after the filing of the complaint, a process server attempted to serve it and a summons on the city by hand-delivering them to a deputy city attorney. The city filed a motion to quash for improper service and to dismiss the complaint because the process server had not served the city in accordance with Rule 4(k), M.R.Civ.P. (formerly Rule 4E(1)). Under this rule, in order to serve a local government entity, one must serve a commissioner, trustee, board member, mayor, or head of its legislative department. The District Court granted the city's motion and the plaintiff appealed, arguing that the county attorney had apparent authority to accept service and that by serving her, the plaintiff clearly provided the city with notice of the lawsuit. The Supreme Court disagreed and ruled that serving a deputy county attorney did not substitute for valid service under Rule 4(k), nor did the attorney have apparent authority to accept it as an agent for the city. The plaintiff also argued that under the theory of equitable estoppel, because the city had previously accepted service through the county attorney's office it should not be allowed to challenge service here. The Supreme Court concluded that the past practices of the city did not alter the plaintiff's obligation to serve the city according to the Rules of Civil Procedure and affirmed the District Court. Cascade Dev., Inc. v. Bozeman, 2012 MT 79, 364 Mont. 442, 276 P.3d 862.

Denial of Motion for Enlargement of Time Not Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiff in medical malpractice action failed to show specific excusable neglect factors from Montana case law as to why a summons and complaint were not served within 3 years of filing. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for an extension of time. Pesarik v. Perjessy, 2008 MT 337, 346 M 236, 194 P3d 665, (2008).

Former Rule 5. Service and filing of pleadings and other papers Complaint in Possession of Clerk of Court Within Thirty Days of Approval of Preliminary Subdivision Plat Considered Timely Despite Filing After Thirty Days: An aggrieved party may appeal the approval of a preliminary subdivision plat to the District Court within 30 days of the date when a governing body conditionally approves the plat. Sanders County Commissioners approved a preliminary plat on March 30, so a timely appeal was required on or before April 29, 2004. Plaintiffs' attorney delivered a complaint to UPS in Missoula on April 28 for overnight delivery. UPS tracking information showed that the complaint was delivered to the Sanders County Clerk of the District Court on April 29, but the clerk did not stamp the complaint as filed until May 3. Defendant asserted that the complaint was filed after the 30-day appeal period, and the District Court agreed but addressed the merits nevertheless. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the undisputed evidence showed that the clerk received the complaint on April 29, the appeal was timely regardless of the date that the complaint was stamped as filed. Fielder v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2007 MT 118, 337 M 256, 162 P3d 67 (2007). See also Cintron v. Union Pac. RR Co., 813 F2d 917 (9th Cir. 1987), and Sheviakov v. I.N.S., 237 F3d 1144 (9th Cir. 2001).

Equating Motion for Reconsideration to Motion to Alter or Amend: Miller filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Miller's motion for reconsideration was denied, and he appealed the summary judgment order, not within 30 days of entry of the summary judgment but within 30 days of the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal on the grounds that it had not been timely filed. Miller argued that the motion for reconsideration stopped the running of the 30-day requirement and that the 30-day requirement started to run again from the time that the motion to reconsider was denied. Miller based his argument on the holding in Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988), which stated that although a motion for reconsideration is not specifically referred to in Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., it can be equated to a motion to alter or amend a judgment. The Supreme Court held that it would allow Miller's appeal because of his reliance on Easley but that any future motion to reconsider would not be treated as equivalent to a motion to alter or amend unless the motion contains statements or allegations demonstrating that the motion is equivalent to a motion to alter or amend. Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995), overruling in part Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988).

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., and, with respect to service, are found in this rule and Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P. The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Former Rule 5(a). Service — when required

Personal Service on Defendant or Defendant's Counsel Not Required for Execution Sales: Mikelson argued that Rule 81(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, when read together, required that notice of a Sheriff's sale of Mikelson's property be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. However, those rules deal with notice within District Court proceedings and do not relate to notice in execution sales, which are governed by 25-13-701. Nothing in 25-13-701 requires that notice of an execution sale be served personally on Mikelson or his counsel. Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Guardianship Proceeding — Failure of District Court to Make Record Held Violation of Statute — Ex Parte Hearing Held Violation of Due Process: A District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation of the hearing or order except a minute entry made by the Clerk of Court. In the second proceeding, counsel representing the guardians had actual notice, in the form of two letters, that Klos was represented by an attorney for the Montana Advocacy Program but failed to serve that attorney with notice of the hearing. The Supreme Court held that: (1) in failing to make a record of the proceedings and to enter a written order with findings of fact, the District Court violated the plain language of 72-5-317; (2) although 72-5-317 does authorize an ex parte hearing, that authorization applies only in emergency circumstances that were not present in this case and the failure to provide notice therefore also violates 72-5-317; and (3) the failure of the guardians' counsel to serve notice on Klos's attorney violated Klos's right to due process of law provided by Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const. In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Filed — Time for Appeal Not to Run: Under this rule, when the appellant is a political subdivision of the state, the notice of appeal must be filed within 60 days from the entry of judgment or from the service of notice of entry of judgment. The time for filing an appeal does not begin to run until the prevailing party serves a notice of entry of judgment. If the prevailing party does not serve a notice of entry of judgment, the time for appeal never begins to run. Buckley v. Wordal, 262 M 306, 865 P2d 240, 50 St. Rep. 1570 (1993), following In re Marriage of Robertson, 237 M 406, 773 P2d 1213 (1989).

Notice and Hearing Required: Plaintiff changed attorneys during a proceeding. The order substituting counsel provided for attorney fees to the original counsel. It was error for the District Court to award fees without notice to the plaintiff and without providing an opportunity for a hearing. Bink v. First Bank West, Great Falls, Inc., 246 M 414, 804 P2d 384, 48 St. Rep. 17 (1991).

Custody Proceedings — Court-Appointed Attorney for Child — Service Required: While the appointment of an attorney to represent children in custody matters is discretionary with the court under 40-4-205, once an attorney has been appointed, it is required that he or she be served with all orders, pleadings, motions, notices, and other papers pertinent to the action. Further, the attorney must actively represent the children and be given an opportunity to present all evidence concerning the best interests of the children. In re Marriage of Hammill, 225 M 263, 732 P2d 403, 44 St. Rep. 220 (1987).

Notice of Denial of Motion Not Required — Appeal Period: Appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial was considered denied upon failure of the District Court to rule on it for 45 days, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. No notice of such denial is required under Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P. The 30-day period for appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), begins to run upon expiration of the 45-day period of Rule 59(d). Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Notice of Subsequent Proceedings: If a party "appears" by filing a motion he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Notice of Order Requesting Attorney Fees: When a party requested attorney fees pursuant to Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P., and failed to apply by motion with notice to opposing party, but incorporated it within proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, there was insufficient notice. Luppold v. Lewis, 172 M 280, 563 P2d 538 (1977).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Omitted — Effect: The date of service of notice of entry of judgment is the arbitrary point in time from which the time limits for appeal begin to run. If no notice of entry of judgment has been served upon the losing party, the right to appeal has not expired. Haywood v. Sedillo, 167 M 101, 535 P2d 1014 (1975).

Premature Notice — Effect: Under former law, notice of motion for a new trial given 10 days before entry of judgment is premature and therefore ineffective as a basis for the motion. Power & Bros. v. Turner, 37 M 521, 97 P 950 (1908), distinguished in Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co. v. School District, 40 M 123, 105 P 551 (1909).

Response to Document as Waiver of Objections to Service: The objection that a bill of exceptions (abolished, see Rules 7(c), 46, M.R.Civ.P., and section 25-31-503, now repealed) was not served in the manner provided by law is waived by presenting amendments to the proposed bill. The purpose of the statute is to insure that the person upon whom service is sought shall actually receive, if possible, the document to be served. When a party appears and presents and has allowed his amendments to a proposed bill of exceptions, he is not in a position to say that he has never actually received a copy of the same. Fordham v. N. Pac. Ry., 30 M 421, 76 P 1040 (1904).

Former Rule 5(b). Service — how made

Mailing to Attorney of Record and Party's Last-Known Address Considered Adequate Notice — Personal Service Not Required: After 11 years passed from the time that a dissolution decree was entered, the wife moved to obtain her share of the husband's retirement benefits as ordered in the decree. Notice of the action was sent to the husband's last attorney of record, who filed a motion to dismiss, and by mail to the husband's last-known address in Hawaii. The husband contended that personal service was required because so much time had passed since the decree and because the attorney-client relationship was stale. However, the husband cited no authorities for the argument that personal service was required because the passage of time concluded the attorney-client relationship or that service requirements were modified based upon the last date of activity in a case. The attorney was clearly acting as the husband's attorney, and the decree was intended to extend to the issue of retirement, which had only recently occurred. Thus, under this rule, service was perfected and complete upon mailing a copy to the husband's last attorney of record and to the husband's last-known address. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Reference Statutory Judicial Review Provisions in Administrative Order Addressing Child Support Enforcement — Due Process Violation Constituting Reversible Error: The mother filed a petition with the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) for assistance in obtaining child support from the father. CSED initiated an administrative action to determine the amount of support owing, and an administrative law judge conducted a contested case hearing on the issue and entered an order establishing the father's current and past-due child support obligation. The order included a paragraph notifying the parents of their statutory right to petition for judicial review of the administrative decision under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7 (MAPA), but did not reference 40-5-253, which contains more specific procedural requirements for appealing from an administrative decision in a child support enforcement case than the provisions in MAPA. The father filed a petition for judicial review and mailed copies to the mother and CSED but failed to properly serve the parties as required in 40-5-253. The District Court concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the father failed to comply with 40-5-253. The court dismissed the petition. The father moved the court to amend or reconsider the petition, contending that the application of 40-5-253 violated his due process rights because he did not receive sufficient notice of the procedures by which to obtain judicial review of the administrative decision. The motion was denied, but the court nevertheless subsequently entered another order correcting the clerical error by adding a reference to 40-5-253 to the notice provision of the earlier order and then granted CSED's motion to dismiss. The father appealed. The Supreme Court noted that proper service of a petition for judicial review was a threshold requirement for the District Court to obtain jurisdiction in this case and that under Title 2, ch. 4, part 7, a petition for judicial review may be properly served by mailing copies to the agency and other parties, but there is no requirement that a summons be issued and served in conjunction with the petition. By filing the petition for judicial review and mailing copies to the mother and CSED, the father fulfilled the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469 (1996). However, specific statutory requirements prevail over general provisions such as those in MAPA, and the Supreme Court agreed that the portion of the notice informing the father that MAPA would govern the proceedings was misleading, absent any reference to the different, specific procedural requirements for CSED actions under 40-5-253. The Supreme Court adopted federal interpretations of the due process notice requirements in this regard, which provide that the opportunity to be heard is not meaningful if the notice provided does not accurately inform the person to whom it is given of how to take advantage of that opportunity. The notice provisions in the administrative order did not provide father with adequate notice to meet due process requirements, so application of 40-5-253 would violate the father's due process rights. Under these unique circumstances, it was required that the father's petition for judicial review must be governed by the service requirements of MAPA and Hilands. Those requirements were met, so the District Court did acquire subject matter jurisdiction and abused its discretion in dismissing the father's petition for judicial review based on his failure to comply with 40-5-253. The case was reversed for further proceedings under MAPA. Pickens v. Shelton-Thompson, 2000 MT 131, 300 M 16, 3 P3d 603, 57 St. Rep. 543 (2000), followed in In re Support Obligation of McGurran v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2003 MT 145, 316 M 188, 70 P3d 734 (2003). See also Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 US 306, 94 L Ed 2d 865, 70 S Ct 652 (1950), Gonzales v. Guardianship Proceeding — Failure of District Court to Make Record Held Violation of Statute — Ex Parte Hearing Held Violation of Due Process: A District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation of the hearing or order except a minute entry made by the Clerk of Court. In the second proceeding, counsel representing the guardians had actual notice, in the form of two letters, that Klos was represented by an attorney for the Montana Advocacy Program but failed to serve that attorney with notice of the hearing. The Supreme Court held that: (1) in failing to make a record of the proceedings and to enter a written order with findings of fact, the District Court violated the plain language of 72-5-317; (2) although 72-5-317 does authorize an ex parte hearing, that authorization applies only in emergency circumstances that were not present in this case and the failure to provide notice therefore also violates 72-5-317; and (3) the failure of the guardians' counsel to serve notice on Klos's attorney violated Klos's right to due process of law provided by Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const. In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Petition for Judicial Review of Contested Case — Service on Parties Under This Rule Held Sufficient: Ashmore brought a claim before the Human Rights Commission, alleging that she had been discriminated against by Hilands Golf Club because of her gender, in violation of 49-2-304. The Commission found in favor of Ashmore and awarded her relief. Hilands filed a petition for judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 and served copies of the petition by mail upon counsel for the Commission and Hilands. No summons was served with the petition, and no service was made upon the Attorney General. Ashmore filed a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., alleging that no jurisdiction had been obtained over the Commission by service of a summons upon the Attorney General, contrary to the holding in Fife v. Martin, 261 M 471, 863 P2d 403 (1993). The District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Fife and holding that because judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 is in the nature of an appeal, in which jurisdiction over the parties has already been established, service of a summons with the petition is unnecessary and holding that the petition may be served upon the parties by mail under this rule. The Supreme Court noted that it was sufficient to mail a copy of the petition upon the parties and the agency, whether or not the agency had been a party to the administrative proceeding. Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469, 53 St. Rep. 664 (1996), followed in Forsythe v. Great Falls Holdings, LLC, 2008 MT 384, 347 M 67, 196 P3d 1233 (2008).

Amended Complaint Served With Original Summons and Complaint — Personal Jurisdiction Acquired: Where the defendant implement company sought to set aside a default judgment obtained against it by arguing that service of an amended complaint with the original summons and complaint constituted defective service and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that since service of the original summons and complaint was properly made, the only issue was whether the amendment was properly made. Because Rule 4C does not require a summons to be served with an amended complaint and because the amended complaint may be served by delivering a copy to the party and may be filed within a reasonable time after service, the simultaneous service of the amended complaint did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction over the defendant. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

Failure to Serve Attorney — Not Reversible Error: The defendant failed to serve the plaintiff's attorney in violation of Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. Whether this is reversible error depends on the facts. The defendant's motion was set for hearing the same day as one of the plaintiff's motion. The two motions did not pertain to identical issues, but both motions pertained to the same divorce decree and property settlement agreement. No attempt was made to get a continuance. The plaintiff was allowed to testify fully as to his financial affairs, and he has pointed to no evidence on appeal which was not before the trial court. The plaintiff was not prejudiced by the lack of service on his attorney. Phennicie v. Phennicie, 185 M 120, 604 P2d 787 (1979).

Service of Amended Complaint — Consent of Counsel Unnecessary: Whether or not counsel agreed to accept service for his clients was immaterial. Service of an amended complaint is required to be made on the attorney. A reasonable time must be given for responsive pleadings before default, however. State ex rel. Leavitt v. District Court, 172 M 12, 560 P2d 517 (1977).

Service by Mail Complete Upon Mailing: Service of a memorandum of costs was complete when it was deposited in the post office addressed to the opponent's counsel. Herdegen v. Oxarart, 141 M 464, 378 P2d 655 (1963).

Waiver of Defective Service by Mail: Where defendants, seeking a change of place of trial, served the moving papers upon plaintiff by mail but the postage thereon was insufficient, the plaintiff by paying what was due thereon and retaining the enclosures instead of returning them promptly, waived all objection to the defect of service, and the court properly denied his motion to strike the papers from the files. Helena Adjustment Co. v. Predivich, 98 M 162, 37 P2d 651 (1934).

Clerk or Person in Charge of Office: Constructive service of a statement on motion for a new trial, by delivery thereof to a person who, although at one time a stenographer in the office of the attorney upon whom service was attempted to be made, was not then in his office or in charge of it, but employed elsewhere, was insufficient. Nord v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 464, 84 P 1116 (1906).

Former Rule 5(d). Filing; certificate of service

Amended Complaint Served With Original Summons and Complaint — Personal Jurisdiction Acquired: Where the defendant implement company sought to set aside a default judgment obtained against it by arguing that service of an amended complaint with the original summons and complaint constituted defective service and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court held that since service of the original summons and complaint was properly made, the only issue was whether the amendment was properly made. Because Rule 4C does not require a summons to be served with an amended complaint and because the amended complaint may be served by delivering a copy to the party and may be filed within a reasonable time after service, the simultaneous service of the amended complaint did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction over the defendant. Elk Run Ranch v. Green Line Implement Co., 205 M 413, 668 P2d 258, 40 St. Rep. 1397 (1983).

Former Rule 5(e). Filing with the court defined

Petition for Postconviction Relief Timely Filed — Date of Grant of In Forma Pauperis Petition of No Consequence: Nava filed a postconviction relief (PCR) petition and the clerk of court correctly date-stamped the petition as received on July 21, 2009. At the same time, Nava filed a petition to proceed in forma pauperis, which was granted 2 days later. The Supreme Court held that the PCR petition was timely filed on July 21 and that the date the District Court granted the petition to proceed in forma pauperis had no effect on the timely filing of the PCR petition. Nava v. St., 2011 MT 77, 360 Mont. 96, 255 P.3d 53.

Faxed Return of Service of Summons Received on Evening of Final Day of Filing Considered Timely — Courts Always Open: White filed a complaint September 8, 1995, and summons was served on Klosterman September 8, 1998. The Sheriff's dispatcher faxed the return of service to the Clerk of Court at 8:23 p.m. the same day. The District Court held that the return of service was late because it was not filed with the Clerk of Court by 5 p.m. on the last day that filing was permitted. However, the Supreme Court found nothing in the plain language of the judicial rules of procedure or any Montana authority that provides those requirements. Rather, Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P., requires that return of service be filed within 3 years; this rule allows filing by facsimile or other electronic means; 25-3-501 gives faxed documents the same force and effect as an original; Rule 77(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires that District Courts always be open for filing; and 1-1-301 provides that each day ends at midnight. The District Court's decision was reversed on grounds that filing was timely. White v. Klosterman, 1999 MT 316, 297 M 259, 990 P2d 1249, 56 St. Rep. 1265 (1999).

Motion to Disqualify Other Party's Attorney Does Not Stay Sixty-Day Requirement for Judge to Rule on Motion to Vacate Default Judgment: Johnson's attorney obtained a default judgment on behalf of his client, and when an attorney appeared for the defendant and moved to have the default judgment set aside, Johnson's attorney moved to have the attorney disqualified because the trial court judge was related to a member of the defense attorney's law firm. The judge recused himself, and the new judge entered an order setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court held that the 60-day period for the lower court to rule on the motion to vacate ran from the time that the motion was filed, not from the time that the second judge assumed jurisdiction, and because the time had expired, the motion to vacate was considered denied. The lower court did not have jurisdiction over the issue and could not thereafter set aside the default judgment. Johnson v. Eagles Lodge Aerie 3913, 284 M 474, 945 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 984 (1997), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Complaint Mailed Early but Filed Late Barred: Plaintiffs mailed their complaint from Anaconda to Deer Lodge on February 23. The statute of limitations expired on February 28, but the complaint was not filed with the Clerk of Court until March 1. Plaintiffs contended that timely mailing substantially met the statutory deadline. Under Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P., filing is not complete until a complaint is placed in the custody of the Clerk of Court. The burden of vigilance was on plaintiffs to monitor timely delivery and filing, and the complaint was properly dismissed. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Former Rule 5(f). Proof of service

Due Process Violations — Default Set Aside: On the basis of the total circumstances surrounding the proceedings defendant tribe was denied a meaningful opportunity to appear and be heard. Late return of proof of service of summons could have contributed to the tribe's failure to appear and, coupled with other circumstances, was "good cause" to set aside a default. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Duty of Process Servers: Henceforth it shall be the duty of all process servers, be it the Sheriff or private persons, to strictly comply with Rule 5(f), M.R.Civ.P. It is the duty of the process server to return the summons to the clerk of the court within 10 days after service, and this duty shall only be excused under circumstances which constitute "good cause". "Good cause" shall relate only to the difficulty which the process server has in filing the papers with the appropriate clerk of court. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Former Rule 6. Time

Oral Pronouncement of Guilt and Delayed Sentencing — Appeal Improper Pending Final Judgment: Following a nonjury trial on February 5, the Justice of the Peace orally pronounced defendant guilty of DUI and driving while the privilege to do so was suspended or revoked and ordered defendant to obtain an alcohol evaluation and return for sentencing February 26. On February 7, the Justice's Court issued a written order and mailed it to the prospective parties. On February 11, defendant filed a notice of appeal with the District Court, and the case was transferred on March 11. On March 28, the state filed a motion to dismiss on the basis that the appeal was premature because defendant had not been sentenced. On April 1, the District Court dismissed and remanded the case back to Justice's Court for sentencing before defendant had an opportunity to respond with a brief. An appeal cannot be utilized until judgment has been fully rendered. Dismissal was proper because the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction absent final judgment by the Justice's Court. St. v. Wilson, 252 M 264, 827 P2d 1286, 49 St. Rep. 243 (1992).

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., and, with respect to service, are found in Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Former Rule 6(a). Computation

Statute of Limitations Calculated as Ending One Day Prior to Start Day in Next Calendar Year: Plaintiff was injured on December 24, 1999, and plaintiff filed a complaint on December 26, 2002, contending that because December 25, 2002, was a holiday, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 extended to December 26, 2002, so the complaint was timely filed. The District Court held that the complaint was time-barred and granted defendant summary judgment on the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, a statute of limitations begins to run when a claim or cause of action accrues. Plaintiff's cause of action accrued on December 24, 1999, the date of injury. Under this rule, the day of the event is not included in computing any period of time, so the statute of limitations was counted from December 25, 1999. A year is defined as a calendar year, which is a 365-day period starting on a given day and ending on the date 1 day prior to the start day in the next calendar year. Thus, plaintiff's cause of action began on December 25, 1999, and ended on December 24, 2002, which was neither a weekend day nor a legal holiday. The statute of limitations was properly calculated, and summary judgment was proper because plaintiff's complaint was not timely filed. Bosch v. Town Pump, Inc., 2004 MT 330, 324 M 138, 102 P3d 32 (2004).

Calculating Time for Service of Motion — Days Before Saturday Christmas and New Year's Day Not Holidays: Burlington Northern alleged that it had timely served its motion for a new trial, thereby tolling the 30-day period for appealing the jury verdict in favor of Dunkelberger. The railroad argued that Christmas and New Year's Day had fallen on Saturday and, since the courts were closed on the preceding Fridays, those Fridays were holidays and were not to be counted in determining whether the motion for new trial had been served within the required 10 days. The Supreme Court held that the fact that those Fridays were holidays for state workers did not make them statutory holidays and that those Fridays counted as part of the 10-day period. Dunkelberger v. Burlington N. RR Co., 265 M 243, 876 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 499 (1994).

Relationship Between Rules 6(a) and 6(e) Clarified — Motion to Amend Judgment: Park Plaza prevailed in the underlying legal action and served its notice of entry of judgment on April 6. Service was made by mail. Montana Rail Link (MRL) filed its motion for a new trial and motion to amend the findings, conclusions, and judgment on April 20. The District Court denied the motion within the applicable 45-day period, and MRL filed its notice of appeal within 30 days after denial. Park Plaza moved to dismiss the appeal as untimely because the motion to amend was untimely. The Supreme Court upheld the timeliness of the motion to amend and the notice of appeal. Citing In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496 (1992), the Supreme Court held that when service of notice is made by mail, first the 3 days allowed under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., are counted, then the number of days within which action is to be taken are counted (in this case, 10 days for filing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.), and then, because the period is less than 11 days, Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays are excluded. DeTienne Assoc. Ltd. Partnership v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 261 M 238, 862 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1138 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under this rule, the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in this rule, intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., provides that a Rule 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., motion for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under this rule. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. The combined total of days allowed under Rules 59(b) and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Computation of Notice Period for Default Judgment — General Rule Regarding Procedural Defects: Defendant claimed that insufficient notice had been given under Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., for judgment by default when the notice period was computed under this rule. Service was made upon defendant's counsel by mail. The question arose as to whether the rules intend that the noncourt days excluded under this rule apply to additional days granted by virtue of mailing under Rule 6(e). The Supreme Court declined to rule on the question, instead affirming the default judgment on the grounds that: (1) defendant had ample notice of hearing; (2) the case was on the docket for more than 16 months after service of complaint and summons, but defendant took no other action except for a motion to dismiss; (3) defendant never answered the complaint; and (4) defendant did not allege or tender any proof that he had a meritorious defense to the suit for mortgage foreclosure. The court cited the general rule that a procedural defect with respect to notice of a default judgment must be considered with other factors before the judgment may be set aside. Therefore, even if notice was considered insufficient, in this case the other factors so outweighed the procedural defect as to require sustaining entry of the default judgment. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Uniform Rules for District Courts — Time Limit for Filing Brief in Support of Rule 12 Motion: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Date of Notice Not Included: The defendant failed to make a payment on a contract for deed, and on January 14 the plaintiff sent notice of default. On March 14, a second notice of default and intent to accelerate payment was given to the defendant. The contract required payment within 60 days of the first notice. Defendant argued that the second notice was mailed before the 60-day cure period expired, making the notice defective. The time began to run on January 15. Defendant therefore had 17 days in January, 29 days in February, and 14 days in March for a total of 60 days. Since the March 14 notice was not effective until the next day, the defendant had his full 60 days. SAS Partnership v. Schafer, 200 M 478, 653 P2d 834, 39 St. Rep. 1883 (1982).

Timeliness of Motion for Necessary Litigation Costs: Defendant/respondent filed a motion for determination of necessary expenses of litigation under 70-30-306. He filed the motion 11 calendar days after a jury verdict was rendered in his favor. Plaintiff filed a motion to retax costs on the ground that respondent's motion was untimely filed under the "5 days after the verdict" clause of 25-10-501. Held, Rule 6(a) and (e), M.R.Civ.P., eliminating Saturdays and Sundays and granting 3 business days, must be given effect since defendant was required to take some "action by virtue of papers served upon him by mail" and since defendant was served by mail. Defendant's motion was timely filed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Eminent Domain — Time for Appeal of Commissioners' Report When Last Day of Period Falls on a Sunday: In computing the time period for the purpose of appealing the report of the commissioners in an eminent domain proceeding as provided for in 70-30-304, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure provide for an extension if the last day of the period falls on a Sunday. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11, the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20, the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Timely Filing of Petition — Exclusion of Weekends: The filing of a petition for temporary investigative authority and protective services as to children who may be abused and neglected was timely and proper because of the exclusion of intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays from the computation time. In re T.Y.K., 183 M 91, 598 P2d 593 (1979).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Served by Mail — Expiration of Deadline on Sunday — Effect on Time for Appeal: Where, following a condemnation award by the commissioners, notice of the award was mailed to the plaintiff Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) on June 15 and notice of appeal from that award was mailed to the Clerk of District Court on July 16, the District Court erred in dismissing the appeal for failure to file a timely notice of appeal. Under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the notice of the commissioners' award did not become effective until June 18. Thus, the 30-day appeal period would normally expire on July 18, but as that was a Sunday, time for appeal expired on July 19, under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. St. v. Helehan, 171 M 473, 559 P2d 817 (1977).

Application to Statute of Limitations: Complaint filed 3 years and 1 day after act in suit governed by 3-year Statute of Limitations was timely where last day of 3-year period was Sunday. Grey v. Silver Bow County, 149 M 213, 425 P2d 819 (1967).

Notice Requirement — Violation Not Prejudicial: Although the 3-day notice requirement for a default judgment was violated because weekends are excluded from the computation of time, the court was not in error for refusing to set aside a default judgment due to a violation of the notice requirement when the violation was not prejudicial. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Time for Filing Bill of Costs: Where judgment of nonsuit was entered by defendant on May 31, 1960, memorandum of costs, served by mail postmarked June 5, 1960, met the requirements of 25-10-501 since June 5 was the fifth day. In the computation of the time the first day is excluded. Davis v. Trobough, 139 M 322, 363 P2d 727 (1961).

Former Rule 6(b). Enlargement

Denial of Motion for Enlargement of Time Not Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiff in medical malpractice action failed to show specific excusable neglect factors from Montana case law as to why a summons and complaint were not served within 3 years of filing. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for an extension of time. Pesarik v. Perjessy, 2008 MT 337, 346 M 236, 194 P3d 665, (2008).

Discretion of District Court to Grant Enlargement of Time to Respond to Motion: The wife filed a motion to enforce the pension provisions of a dissolution decree, and the husband moved for an enlargement of time nearly a month later. The District Court declined to grant the enlargement because there was nothing to indicate that the husband's failure to respond within the required 10 days was the result of excusable neglect. On appeal, the husband contended that under Rules 6 and 11, M.R.Civ.P., he was entitled to an enlargement of time in order to reply to the motion to enforce. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Parties are not entitled to an enlargement of time; rather, the granting of an enlargement of time is within the discretion of the District Court, which in this case found the husband's arguments unpersuasive. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Extension of Time Deadline by Rule Inapplicable to Administrative Law Judge's Decision — Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper: The mother petitioned for judicial review of an order by an administrative law judge regarding her child support action. The Child Support Enforcement Division moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that it was not timely filed pursuant to 2-4-702 and that, as a result, the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The mother filed a motion under this rule, seeking an enlargement of time in which to file the petition, asserting that her failure to file the petition within the 30-day deadline was the result of excusable neglect. The motion was denied. The mother then filed for relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and that motion was also denied. The mother appealed from the denial of both motions. The Supreme Court held that this rule, by its terms, applies only to acts required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure or by court order, but does not apply to acts required within a statutory framework, such as that established in 2-4-702. Thus, this rule does not apply, either by its terms or by analogy, to petitions for judicial review of administrative proceedings because applying the rule in that manner would extend the jurisdiction of District Courts beyond that allowed by the statute. Further, Rule 60(b) does not provide a basis for relief in this case because the District Court was automatically deprived of jurisdiction once the 30-day period expired, and Rule 60(b) cannot be applied to revest jurisdiction where none existed in the first place. Dismissal of the mother's petition was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court order was affirmed. In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., for additional briefing time and must rule on a Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Continuance of Water Use Case Properly Denied: On October 7, 4 days before a scheduled hearing on charges of contempt of the order of a Water Commissioner, counsel for relator sent a letter notifying the court that his schedule would prevent him from appearing and requesting that the hearing be continued until November 4 or 18, approximately 1 month later. However, the court properly denied the request in light of the fact that the continuance would have left relator in sole possession and use of all waters of the creek for over a month at a time when very little remained of the irrigation season. Marks v. District Court, 239 M 428, 781 P2d 249, 46 St. Rep. 1804 (1989).

No Error to Grant Extension for Filing of Findings and Conclusions — No Prejudice Shown: The trial court did not commit error when it granted an ex parte request of the mother to have additional time to file her proposed findings and conclusions in a child custody dispute because the father failed to show how his substantial rights were prejudiced. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made. The court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Special Statute Controls General — Bill of Exceptions: Since section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 6(b), M.R.Civ.P.), was a general one while 25-1-301 is specific and, prior to the 1981 amendment, pertained to bills of exceptions (exceptions abolished, see Rules 7(c), 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), the latter section controls under the rule of construction that the provisions of a special statute control those of a general statute relating to the same subject matter. Hutchinson v. Burton, 126 M 279, 247 P2d 987 (1952).

Former Rule 6(d). For motions — affidavits

Refusal to Consider Untimely Filed Affidavits — No Error Found: A seller of real property sought summary judgment in an action based on the contract of purchase, and the buyer's attorney failed to file an affidavit and brief opposing the seller's motion for summary judgment until the day of the hearing. The seller's counsel pointed out the untimeliness of the filing, and the trial court refused to consider the affidavit. On appeal no abuse of discretion was found. The Supreme Court noted, too, the unwarranted delays caused by the buyer previously in the case and the lack of any compelling excuse for the untimely filing. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Deficient Motion: A motion to set aside default and dismiss a libel complaint was deficient for failure to comply with notice requirements for service made by mail. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Appearance as Waiver of Lack of Notice: One who appears generally to resist a motion to amend a complaint after judgment rendered, and does not resist such motion on the merits, is presumed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court for all purposes of the motion, and is estopped to claim that he did not have sufficient notice. Eadie v. Eadie, 44 M 391, 120 P 239 (1911).

Former Rule 6(e). Additional time after service by mail

No Shortage in Postnotice Payment: The plaintiff filed an action in District Court to quiet title in real property on the basis that a tax deed was void because the defendant paid the back taxes 2 hours and 45 minutes short of the 2-week period provided in the assignment notice. The District Court concluded the 2-week notice requirement under the 2007 version of 15-17-212 was satisfied. The Supreme Court affirmed. The 3-day mailing rule in former Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), does not apply to the mailing of a notice of intent under 15-17-212(3). In addition, the District Court properly disregarded the deficiency of 2 hours and 45 minutes in this case because, pursuant to 1-1-305, the law regards the day as an indivisible unit and discards fractional days in most time computations. Tacke v. Mont. Lakeshore Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 197, 361 Mont. 390, 260 P.3d 128.

Time Period to Request Mediation on Uninsured Employer Claim Not Extended by Procedural Rule Granting Additional Time Following Service: Flynn filed a request for mediation 93 days after an uninsured employer workers' compensation claim was denied. Flynn contended that the provisions of this rule, should apply to add an additional 3 days to the prescribed period because service was by mail. The Supreme Court disagreed. The time limit in 39-71-520 begins to run at the time that a decision on a claim is finalized, not when notice of the decision is served. Thus, this rule does not apply to final decisions made pursuant to 39-71-520. Flynn v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2005 MT 269, 329 M 122, 122 P3d 1216 (2005), distinguishing MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 175, 858 P2d 364 (1993).

Relationship Between Rules 6(a) and 6(e) Clarified — Motion to Amend Judgment: Park Plaza prevailed in the underlying legal action and served its notice of entry of judgment on April 6. Service was made by mail. Montana Rail Link (MRL) filed its motion for a new trial and motion to amend the findings, conclusions, and judgment on April 20. The District Court denied the motion within the applicable 45-day period, and MRL filed its notice of appeal within 30 days after denial. Park Plaza moved to dismiss the appeal as untimely because the motion to amend was untimely. The Supreme Court upheld the timeliness of the motion to amend and the notice of appeal. Citing In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496 (1992), the Supreme Court held that when service of notice is made by mail, first the 3 days allowed under this rule are counted, then the number of days within which action is to be taken are counted (in this case, 10 days for filing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.), and then, because the period is less than 11 days, Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays are excluded. DeTienne Assoc. Ltd. Partnership v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 261 M 238, 862 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1138 (1993).

Time for Filing of Petition for Judicial Review — Time of "Service" of Final Agency Decision Defined: Following proceedings in an administrative action before the Public Service Commission, the Commission mailed a copy of its decision to MCI on May 19, 1992, but MCI did not receive the decision until May 21, 1992. On June 19, 1992, MCI filed its petition for judicial review under 2-4-702. The District Court dismissed the petition as being untimely filed. The Supreme Court held that 2-4-702 did not define the time of "service" at which the 30-day period for filing a petition for review began to run. Section 2-4-106 requires that this rule be applied to define when service by mail is complete for administrative decisions. This rule requires that when service is made by mail, an additional 3 days must be added to the time for taking action. Thus, the time for judicial review began to run on May 23, and MCI's petition was filed within the 30-day time period provided by 2-4-702. MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 260 M 175, 858 P2d 364, 50 St. Rep. 989 (1993), distinguished in In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999), and followed in Molnar v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2008 MT 49, 341 M 420, 177 P3d 1048 (2008).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., provides that a Rule 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., motion for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under this rule. The combined total of days allowed under Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Rendition of Judgment as Commencement of Time for Appeal From Justice's to District Court: Sections 25-33-101 and 25-33-102, rather than this rule or a former rule of the Justice's Court, exclusively govern the time for filing a notice of appeal from Justice's Court to District Court. The time for appeal commences with rendition of the judgment of the Justice's Court and runs for 30 days, as provided in 25-33-102. Grimes Motors, Inc. v. Nascimento, 244 M 147, 796 P2d 576, 47 St. Rep. 1536 (1990).

Computation of Notice Period for Default Judgment — General Rule Regarding Procedural Defects: Defendant claimed that insufficient notice had been given under Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., for judgment by default when the notice period was computed under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Service was made upon defendant's counsel by mail. The question arose as to whether the rules intend that the noncourt days excluded under Rule 6(a) apply to additional days granted by virtue of mailing under this rule. The Supreme Court declined to rule on the question, instead affirming the default judgment on the grounds that: (1) defendant had ample notice of hearing; (2) the case was on the docket for more than 16 months after service of complaint and summons, but defendant took no other action except for a motion to dismiss; (3) defendant never answered the complaint; and (4) defendant did not allege or tender any proof that he had a meritorious defense to the suit for mortgage foreclosure. The court cited the general rule that a procedural defect with respect to notice of a default judgment must be considered with other factors before the judgment may be set aside. Therefore, even if notice was considered insufficient, in this case the other factors so outweighed the procedural defect as to require sustaining entry of the default judgment. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Motion for New Trial — Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing, the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, establishing child custody and support and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including the 3 days allowed under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend, which order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Timeliness of Motion for Necessary Litigation Costs: Defendant/respondent filed a motion for determination of necessary expenses of litigation under 70-30-306. He filed the motion 11 calendar days after a jury verdict was rendered in his favor. Plaintiff filed a motion to retax costs on the ground that respondent's motion was untimely filed under the "5 days after the verdict" clause of 25-10-501. Held, Rule 6(a) and (e), M.R.Civ.P., eliminating Saturdays and Sundays and granting 3 business days, must be given effect since defendant was required to take some "action by virtue of papers served upon him by mail" and since defendant was served by mail. Defendant's motion was timely filed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Eminent Domain — Time for Appeal When Notice of Commissioners' Report Received by Mail: In computing the time period for the purpose of appealing the report of the commissioners in an eminent domain proceeding as provided for in 70-30-304, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure provide for a 3-day extension if the notice is mailed. St. v. Rogers, 184 M 181, 602 P2d 560 (1979).

Deficient Motion: A motion to set aside default and dismiss a libel complaint was deficient for failure to comply with notice requirements for service made by mail. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Served by Mail — Expiration of Deadline on Sunday — Effect on Time for Appeal: Where, following a condemnation award by the commissioners, notice of the award was mailed to the plaintiff Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) on June 15 and notice of appeal from that award was mailed to the Clerk of District Court on July 16, the District Court erred in dismissing the appeal for failure to file a timely notice of appeal. Under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the notice of the commissioners' award did not become effective until June 18. Thus, the 30-day appeal period would normally expire on July 18, but as that was a Sunday, time for appeal expired on July 19, under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. St. v. Helehan, 171 M 473, 559 P2d 817 (1977).

Notice of Entry of Judgment Served by Mail — Effect on Time for Appeal: Where, following a judgment for the defendants, one of whom was the City of Lewistown, the defendants served notice of entry of the judgment upon the plaintiffs by mail on June 13, that notice, for purposes of calculating the 60-day time for appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), became effective on June 16, by operation of Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. A notice of appeal filed on August 13 was therefore timely filed 2 days before the 60-day time limit had expired. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Util. Builders, Inc., 170 M 292, 552 P2d 1100 (1976).

Former Rule 7(a). Pleadings

GENERAL

Agreement for Payment of Costs of Subdivision Telephone Facilities Containing Contingent Service Refund Not Considered Loan Requiring Payment of Interest — Judgment on Pleadings Affirmed: In 2001, defendant telephone cooperative entered an aid to construction contract whereby plaintiff agreed to pay $85,497.88 to aid defendant in costs incurred in installing, operating, and maintaining telephone facilities for services to plaintiff's subdivision. The contract required defendant to refund all or part of the money following construction if the actual cost per unit was less than estimated and the unit maintained continuous service for 5 years. In 2004, plaintiff demanded that defendant pay interest on the money, asserting that the money was a loan. The District Court held that the money was not a loan, so plaintiff was not entitled to interest. The District Court granted judgment on the pleadings for defendant pursuant to Rule 12(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court properly considered all materials and exhibits referred to in the pleading, and the court did not have to accept the allegation that the money was a loan for purposes of granting judgment because the question was not a factual allegation, but rather a question of law. Defendant's obligation to return money was based on a contingency, and there was no absolute promise to repay, so the transaction did not meet the definition of a loan. Thus, judgment on the pleadings was proper. Firelight Meadows, LLC v. 3 Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2008 MT 202, 344 M 117, 186 P3d 869 (2008), following Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), and distinguished in Conway v. Benefis Health Sys., Inc., 2013 MT 73, 369 Mont. 309, 297 P.3d 1200. See also Nyquist v. Nyquist, 255 M 149, 841 P2d 515 (1992).

Controverting Admissions Not Allowed in Pleadings: It is well settled that parties are bound by and estopped from controverting admissions in their pleadings. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992). See also Grimsley v. Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85 (1983), Fey v. A.A. Oil Corp., 129 M 300, 285 P2d 578 (1955), and In re Baker, 2010 MT 124, 356 Mont. 363, 234 P.3d 70.

Supersedeas Bond in Excess of Judgment Amount — Discharge of Obligation: Real property that was the subject of the contract was in control of the District Court. Judgment amount was $28,398.67, but a supersedeas bond was set at $34,408.83, approximately $6,000 in excess of the judgment. The Supreme Court used the power vested in it under this rule to exonerate and discharge the obligation on the bond for the amount in excess of $6,000. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987).

Preliminary Pleadings — Public's Right to Know: In a defamation case, an affirmative defense based on the privilege under 27-1-804(4) extends to newspaper accounts of preliminary pleadings. The Supreme Court acknowledged that the public has a right to know what happens in the judicial system, including the filing of civil suits. Cox v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 222 M 527, 723 P2d 238, 43 St. Rep. 1476 (1986), followed, with respect to Commission on Practice investigation, in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993).

Initial Pleadings — Dissolution of Marriage: In an action for dissolution of marriage the first two pleadings, the petition and response, are governed not by this rule but by the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act at 40-4-103(3). Any further pleadings involved in a dissolution are specifically governed by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

Satisfied Judgment Obviates Appeal: When a judgment is paid, it is beyond review. Otherwise, the requirement of a supersedeas bond and stay order is meaningless. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Foster, 154 M 185, 461 P2d 452 (1969).

Reply — When Mandatory: Plaintiff had no duty to reply to an affirmative defense. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

No Cross Bill Allowed: In this state there is no such pleading as a cross bill. Alywin v. Morley, 41 M 191, 108 P 778 (1910).

Pleading by Defendant — Answer Only Allowed: The only pleading of facts on the part of the defendant is the answer, irrespective of whether the action is one at law or in equity, since there is now but one form of civil action known to our law, as provided in 25-1-101. Gilchrist v. Hore, 34 M 443, 87 P 443 (1906).

Statute of Limitations to Be Pleaded in Answer: The defense of the Statute of Limitations can be made available only by answer or reply. Wastl v. Mont. Union Ry., 24 M 159, 61 P 9 (1900).

Estoppel to Assert Counterclaim — No Reply Required: A defendant, to entitle himself to a motion for judgment for want of a reply to a counterclaim, must plead it as such, and is estopped from asserting that matter which in his answer he denominates "an equitable defense" is in fact a counterclaim. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898).

REPLY TO COUNTERCLAIM

Applicability of Rule 13(a) to Pleading Replying to Counterclaim: Plaintiff filed a breach of contract action related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store. While that case was pending, plaintiff filed another action alleging that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment. The parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, and defendant moved for summary judgment for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted and contended that the second case was barred by Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., because it was a compulsory counterclaim that should have been raised in the first action. Plaintiff moved to consolidate the cases. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and held that the consolidation motion was mooted by dismissal of the action. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., a reply to a counterclaim is a pleading, triggering the need for the replying party to assert all counterclaims that arise out of the same transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the initial counterclaim. By not raising the claim, a party risks that Rule 13, M.R.Civ.P., will bar the claim in a subsequent action. Plaintiff failed to raise any counterclaims in its response to defendant's counterclaims and the second action was barred. The District Court did not err in considering the motion to consolidate without converting the motion to one for summary judgment prior to granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 287, 339 M 452, 171 P3d 690 (2007), distinguishing Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Failure to File Timely Reply to Counterclaim — Default Judgment Proper: The District Court directed plaintiff to respond to a counterclaim within 10 days. Plaintiff failed to comply within the designated time, so default judgment was entered against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed on grounds that the default judgment should be set aside under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed. As an attorney, plaintiff was sufficiently literate and intelligent to understand the document presented by opposing counsel and to respond accordingly. Any mistake complained of by plaintiff did not rise to a level warranting setting aside of the default judgment. Plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof under Rule 60(b) to set aside the judgment and did not establish any abuse of discretion by the trial court, so the default judgment was affirmed. Tschida v. Rowe, 2003 MT 192, 316 M 503, 74 P3d 1043 (2003).

Reply to Answer Not Required: A plaintiff is not required to reply to an answer where not specifically ordered to do so by the court, nor is it mandatory to reply to an affirmative defense of a release, since under Rule 8(d), where no responsive pleading is required, the averment is considered denied. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965), followed in Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Reply Not Basis for Recovery: In action for specific performance of contract for assignment of leases, in which defense was impossibility of performance because leases had been terminated when defendant entered into contract with owner of land for purchase, a reply admitting such termination of the leases and praying for the assignment of such contracts of purchase was an abandonment of the original cause of action and sought to enforce a different contract and therefore could not be the basis for any recovery. Rachou v. McQuitty, 125 M 1, 229 P2d 965 (1951).

Reply Not Amended Complaint: The reply, being merely responsive to matters alleged affirmatively in the answer, cannot perform the office of amending the complaint, nor itself become the basis of recovery. Crenshaw v. Crenshaw, 120 M 190, 182 P2d 477 (1947); Buhler v. Loftus, 53 M 546, 165 P 601 (1917); Doornbos v. Thomas, 50 M 370, 147 P 277 (1915); Waite v. Shoemaker & Co., 50 M 264, 146 P 736 (1915); Manuel v. Turner, 36 M 512, 93 P 808 (1908); Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 M 181, 88 P 796 (1907).

Reply Not to Aid Complaint: A reply may aid the answer but it cannot aid the complaint by supplying an omission therein or broadening its scope by adding to it a new ground of relief. State ex rel. Barron v. District Court, 119 M 344, 174 P2d 809 (1946).

Reply to Join Issue With Answer: The office of a reply is to meet the allegations of new matter in the answer, that is, to join issue upon the counterclaim or new matter of defense alleged in the answer or to avoid it. State ex rel. Barron v. District Court, 119 M 344, 174 P2d 809 (1946).

Function of Reply: The function of a reply was, under section 93-3601, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 7(a), M.R.Civ.P.), to join issue on a counterclaim or new matter by way of defense appearing in the answer, and therein the plaintiff could set up "any new matter, not inconsistent with the complaint, constituting a defense to such counterclaim or new matter in the answer", or to avoid the effect of new matter alleged as a defense. Ahlquist v. Mulvaney Realty Co., 116 M 6, 152 P2d 137 (1944); Buhler v. Loftus, 53 M 546, 165 P 601 (1917).

Conditions Precedent and Subsequent — No Conflict in Complaint and Reply: Plaintiff in an action to recover on an insurance policy covering an automobile against loss by fire alleged in his complaint that he had complied with all the conditions of the policy to be kept and performed by him. The answer set up the special defense that the policy had become void because the insured had mortgaged the car without the assent of the insurer contrary to the provisions of the policy. By reply plaintiff pleaded waiver and estoppel. The averments in the complaint as to performance by plaintiff referred only to conditions precedent, while the reply dealt with a condition subsequent which defendant could waive if it saw fit, and the reply did not conflict with the complaint. McCarthy v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 97 M 540, 37 P2d 579 (1934).

Reply Not to Supplement or Contradict Complaint: The reply cannot aid the complaint by supplying omissions therein or broadening its scope by adding new grounds of relief, nor is plaintiff permitted to take a position inconsistent with that taken in the complaint. If such allegations are made in the reply they constitute a departure from the cause of action stated in the complaint. McCarthy v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 97 M 540, 37 P2d 579 (1934).

New Allegations Not Counterclaim: Where the complaint in an action for waste demands a money judgment only, and the defendant asks that his title be quieted as against the plaintiff, nothing in his answer partaking of the nature of an affirmative cause of action or counterclaim, and the reply demanding, among other things, that the plaintiff have her title quieted as against the defendant, it is error to render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the possession of the land and quieting her title, the pleadings not justifying such a decree. Erbes v. Smith, 35 M 38, 88 P 568 (1907).

Reply — General Principles: The only pleading of facts by plaintiff to an answer is a reply, which may allege new matter, not inconsistent with the complaint, constituting a defense to the counterclaim or new matter in the answer. Every allegation of new matter in a reply is considered denied. Gilchrist v. Hore, 34 M 443, 87 P 443 (1906).

Judgment Obtainable Without Reply: A plaintiff may have judgment without a replication if the new matter in the answer states no defense, or only such as might have been raised under a general denial in the answer. Babcock v. Maxwell, 29 M 31, 74 P 64 (1903).

Former Rule 7(b). Motions and other papers

Modification of Child Support Not Properly Before Trial Court Following Withdrawal of Motion — No Error in Not Considering Modification: As part of an action for contempt of court, the wife moved for a modification of child support but subsequently withdrew the motion before the husband filed a response. The husband did not object to the withdrawal and did not file an independent motion to modify support. When the contempt action came up for hearing, the husband argued that he had experienced a substantial change of circumstances and requested permission to present evidence regarding child support, despite the fact that the wife's motion to consider the issue had been withdrawn. The husband later asserted that the District Court erred in not considering modification of support. The Supreme Court disagreed. A plaintiff may, with proper notice, withdraw a child support modification motion, and absent another specific independent motion for modification, no error is ascribed to the trial court for failing to consider an issue not properly before it. In re Marriage of Crone, 2003 MT 238, 317 M 256, 77 P3d 167 (2003).

No Error in City Court's Denial of Motion for Continuance After Similar Motions Granted: Over 2 years after charges were filed and after numerous motions of continuance were granted, a trial date was set pursuant to Robertson's motion for continuance to permit him to make travel arrangements after moving to California. Three weeks before trial, Robertson again moved for a continuance on the same grounds, but the City Court declined to grant it, and Robertson was tried in absentia. However, it was Robertson, not the court, who caused the trial to go forward without him. Not only did he have ample time to arrange for an appearance in Montana, but rescheduling trial dates upon motion is within the trial court's discretion and will be affirmed absent a showing that the court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeding the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268 (1998).

No Pretrial Determination Regarding Whether Statement Admissible for Impeachment Purposes — Waiver of Right to Object to Admissibility: At the time of arrest, Harris admitted an act of sexual intercourse with his adopted daughter. Prior to trial, Harris moved to suppress the statement on grounds that it was involuntary and obtained in violation of his fifth amendment rights under the United States Constitution. The District Court agreed that the statement could not be used, but expressly stated that its limited suppression order did not address whether it could be used by the state for impeachment purposes in the event that Harris testified, essentially reserving its ruling for a later time, as authorized in 46-13-104. Harris's testimony about the statement during direct examination brought the statement into evidence by his own volition, constituting waiver of the right to appeal the admissibility of the statement for use as impeachment. St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881, 56 St. Rep. 481 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996), and St. v. Ingraham, 284 M 77, 945 P2d 16, 54 St. Rep. 614 (1997).

Motion In Limine Sufficient to Preserve Objection for Appeal: Defendant's motion in limine to exclude testimony regarding certain chemicals in his blood and bottles of prescription medication found in his car was sufficient to preserve the objection for appeal. The propriety of the admission of the evidence is a proper issue for the Supreme Court on appeal. St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998).

Motion for New Trial Not Denied When Opposing Party's Argument Based on Semantics: Riverview Lounge argued that Peck's motion for a new trial should have been denied because Peck's attorney listed the alleged particular grounds for a new trial under a section of his motion designated "Brief" rather than under the section designated "Motion". The Supreme Court held that such a technical flaw was not fatal to Peck's motion and that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion. Peck v. Riverview Lounge, Inc., 272 M 152, 900 P2d 270, 52 St. Rep. 678 (1995).

DNA Evidence — General Objection in Motion In Limine Insufficient to Preserve Objection for Purposes of Appeal: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon DNA evidence that was combined with standard serological evidence to provide a combined statistical estimate of the probability that Weeks was the father of a child of his stepdaughter. Weeks objected to the combined evidence but not on a foundation basis. The state argued that Weeks waived any objection that he had to the combined evidence, but Weeks contended that his motion in limine preserved an objection to the evidence. The Supreme Court held that Weeks's motion in limine, which did not specify any reasons or authorities why the evidence should be excluded, did not contain an objection to the combined statistical evidence but simply concluded that the DNA evidence was prejudicial. The Supreme Court held that this objection was insufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995), followed in St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

Lack of Supporting Brief and Notice of Motion — Ruling Not Invalidated: Coward made a motion to alter or amend judgment but failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days and failed to give notice to Grounds that the motion would be heard along with the hearing on her motion for contempt. These omissions notwithstanding, the District Court partially granted Coward's motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Citing Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285 (1989), the Supreme Court said that even though failure to file a brief is an admission that the motion is not well taken, the District Court still has discretion whether to grant the motion. The parties were also invited to propose a briefing schedule and/or evidentiary hearing date to present supplemental arguments, but failed to do so. Under these circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Amicus Curiae Brief — Discretion of Court: The right to be heard as amicus curiae is within the discretion of the District Court. Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536, 47 St. Rep. 1780 (1990).

No Ruling on Motion In Limine Prior to Trial — Waiver of Objection: Plaintiff presented District Court with a motion in limine during pretrial conference, seeking to preclude defendant's mention at trial of a collateral source of insurance. The court reserved ruling on the matter. Plaintiff did not request a ruling prior to trial, object during trial, or present the court with any motions for mistrial or to strike the alleged testimony when insurance was first mentioned by defendant at trial. Failure to object or request corrective action after the subject was mentioned constituted a waiver of objection on the issue. Stewart v. Fisher, 235 M 432, 767 P2d 1321, 46 St. Rep. 116 (1989).

Separate Trials as Abuse of Discretion — No Written Order or Minute Entry on Motion to Bifurcate: The District Court declined to bifurcate a trial so as to determine separately whether the insured intentionally caused a fire and whether the insurer committed a breach of good faith, based on the mistaken impression that a District Court Judge earlier in jurisdiction had denied bifurcation. Although all the parties assumed such an order was made, the record disclosed no order, and the insurer neither procured a written order granting or denying the motion nor caused a minute entry to be made of the disposition of the motion. The Supreme Court found that under the insured's tort claim, the issues of fact regarding the insurer's violations of the Unfair Claims Settlement Act were so inextricably woven with the insurer's claim of arson that their separation would be an abuse of discretion resulting in extended and needless litigation. A trial court cannot be put in error on matters not brought to its attention by notice or otherwise. Section 33-18-241 was held not to apply, both because of the statutory effective date and because this case involved a first-party rather than a third-party claim. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Motion Mistitled — Time for Filing Appeal: When the state filed a motion for rehearing of the District Court's order reinstating respondent's driver's license pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., on the basis that the Division of Motor Vehicles should be relieved from the order, even though the motion was mistitled, the state obviously was making a Rule 60(b) motion for relief from a District Court order. The request for a rehearing was tangential to the real purpose of the motion. The full time for appeal commences to run upon the granting or denying of the motion, rather than from the date of the order from which the state appeals. Despite defects in the motion, the state identified with particularity the grounds for its motion and the relief sought; therefore, the flaws are not grounds for dismissal of the appeal. In re Petition of Burnham, 217 M 513, 705 P2d 603, 42 St. Rep. 1342 (1985).

Motion Granted Without Notice Held Not Prejudicial — Doctrine of "Compensatory Error": In an action from which nonresident defendants were dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court's granting of plaintiffs' motions to add parties to the suits without prior notice to the defendants was held not prejudicial to the defendants. The issue was first raised on appeal, and the Supreme Court refused to consider it under the doctrine of "compensatory error". Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980).

No Responsive Pleading Required: Section 40-4-106 (renumbered 40-4-121) does not require a response but merely limits the time within which a response may be filed. This construction is required both by the permissive terms of the provision and by reference to 40-4-103 and Rule 7(b), M.R.Civ.P., regarding the form of motions. A motion is not a pleading and does not require responsive pleadings, hence the husband's failure to file a response under 40-4-106 (renumbered 40-4-121) did not render the motion an order. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Notice of Subsequent Proceedings: If a party "appears" by filing a motion he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Motion for New Trial Inadequate — Failure to State Facts and Circumstances Relied Upon: Defendants' motion for new trial was inadequate and defective in its essential elements because it merely recited the statutory language of 25-11-102 without stating with particularity the precise facts or circumstances being relied upon in support of their motion. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

Order Granting Attorney Fees — Failure of Notice: When a party requested attorney fees pursuant to Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P., and failed to apply by motion with notice to opposing party, but incorporated it within proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, there was insufficient notice. Luppold v. Lewis, 172 M 280, 563 P2d 538 (1977).

Specificity of Motion for New Trial: When a motion for a new trial merely stated the conclusory language of the statute providing for new trials, the motion was defective in its essential respects in that it failed to meet recognized statutory requirements. Halsey v. Uithof, 166 M 319, 532 P2d 686 (1975).

Court Required to Rule on Motion Before It: When a timely and proper motion for a change of place of trial is pending, the court has no jurisdiction except first to rule on the motion for change of place of trial. Johnson v. Clark, 131 M 454, 311 P2d 772 (1957), modified in Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979), in which it was determined that a court may properly consider facts set forth in affidavits that are filed subsequent to the original complaint when ruling on a motion to change venue, and in I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993), in which it was held that in fairness to the party moving for change of venue, the lower court may not consider an amended complaint for purposes of determining whether to grant or deny a venue motion but may look to affidavits submitted subsequent to the original complaint.

Countermotions as Bad Practice: Since ordinarily no question not open on the hearing of the original or main motion is presented for decision by a motion to quash, dismiss, deny, or strike from the files or records the original motion or by a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to such original motion, such motion or demurrer is regarded as superfluous, frivolous, confusing, and bad practice. State ex rel. McVay v. District Court, 126 M 382, 251 P2d 840 (1953).

Motion Not an Action: As a motion is not an action but simply an application for an order, it is not subject to the general rules of pleading. State ex rel. McVay v. District Court, 126 M 382, 251 P2d 840 (1953).

Sufficiency of Motion — Motion Not a Pleading: A motion is but an application for an order, is not a pleading, does not require an answer, and is not subject to the general rules which regulate pleadings. If it fairly apprises the court of the grounds upon which relief is sought it is sufficient. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933); Hall v. Hall, 70 M 460, 226 P 469 (1924).

When Notice of Motion Required: Though the Codes do not prescribe all the instances in which notice of a motion must be given, the general rule, in the absence of a more particular rule, is that a party interested in resisting the relief sought by motion is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard. Vande Veegaete v. Vande Veegaete, 79 M 68, 255 P 348 (1927).

Lack of Specificity of Motion for Change of Venue — Motion Properly Denied: The burden is upon the party moving for a change of venue to disclose the facts which entitle him to the change. Where defendant instead of setting forth the facts entitling him to a change on the ground that the contract was to be performed in his county, simply alleged a conclusion to that effect, that his place of business was in that county and that he had been served with summons there, the motion was properly denied. Courtney v. Gordon, 74 M 408, 241 P 233 (1925).

Former Rule 7(c). Demurrers, pleas, etc., abolished

Motion to Dismiss — Equivalent of Demurrer: A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) is equivalent to the use of a demurrer which was abolished by Rule 7(c). Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

Former Rule 8. General rules of pleading

Fraudulently Obtained Independent Contractor Exemption First Raised in Opposition to Affirmative Defense and Motion for Summary Judgment: A worker fell from a carport roof that she was painting and sued the contractor who hired her and the people who hired the contractor to paint the house, claiming failure to provide a safe workplace and workers' compensation insurance. The defendants who hired the contractor pleaded the affirmative defense that the worker was an independent contractor, and the worker responded that the approved application for an independent contractor exemption was fraudulently obtained. Although Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires a claim of fraud to be pleaded with particularity, in this case, evidence of fraud raised by the worker in her brief in opposition to summary judgment was properly before the court and should have been considered in the summary judgment proceeding. Gonzales v. Walchuk, 2002 MT 262, 312 M 240, 59 P3d 377 (2002).

District Court Jurisdiction to Decide Constructive Fraud Based on Pleadings and Final Pretrial Order: Plaintiffs filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose concerning the sale of an irrigation system. Defendants contended that plaintiffs did not notify them by pleadings or evidence at trial that plaintiffs were claiming that a false impression was created regarding the condition of the field at pivot three, arguing that the complaint concerned defects and misrepresentations related to the irrigation system, not to the land, and that the District Court thus lacked jurisdiction to enter judgment on the issue of the land rather than the irrigation system. A District Court does not have jurisdiction to grant relief outside of the issues presented by the pleadings unless the parties stipulate that other questions be considered or the pleadings are amended to conform to the proof. However, in this case, the pleadings and the final pretrial order, which cited misrepresentation of or failure to disclose problems with both the deficient irrigation system and the erosion of the river bank near pivot three, gave defendants sufficient notice of the disputed issues to vest the District Court with issue jurisdiction. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment on Basis That Prior Default Judgment Barred Further Claim Under Insurance Policy: Generally, under Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., a default judgment based on one party's failure to answer under this rule permits the nondefaulting party to assert that all factual allegations in the pleadings are considered admitted in ascertaining liability. This general rule is an exception to an overriding principle that cases are to be tried on the merits and that judgments by default are not favored. Construing the interplay between the two procedural rules, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule in 6 Moore's Fed. Prac. 55.10 (2nd Ed. 1966) that although at "the time of entry of default, the facts alleged by the plaintiff in the complaint are deemed admitted", plaintiff's conclusions of law are not considered established. Further, although not factually identical to the present case, under Aldrich & Co. v. Donovan, 238 M 431, 778 P2d 397, 46 St. Rep. 1393 (1989), the deemed admissions resulting from one party's failure to respond to an amended counterclaim, because of a technicality, cannot sustain a claim for fraud in a subsequent motion for summary judgment. Here, plaintiff's husband's arson, fraud, concealment, misrepresentation, and false swearing were considered by the District Court to have been admitted through an otherwise valid default judgment based on the husband's failure to answer or appear, barring the wife's subsequent claim for insurance coverage and warranting summary judgment for the insurance company. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the determination whether the husband committed each of these acts is a conclusion of law that can be reached only after applying particular rules of law to specific findings of fact and cannot be "deemed admitted" through a default judgment absent any legitimate evidence in the record. Lane v. Farmers Union Ins., 1999 MT 252, 296 M 267, 989 P2d 309, 56 St. Rep. 990 (1999). See also Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965), and Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), which was overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Form of Pleadings When Information in Exclusive Control of Culpable Party: Plaintiff was injured on the job but did not know whether there was a meritorious cause of action or whether there were any culpable parties. He argued that he could not file a complaint and conduct discovery under the Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., requirement of certification that the complaint be grounded in fact because the information needed to certify the facts was in the exclusive control of the potentially culpable parties. However, Rule 11 only requires that a party make reasonable inquiry and then certify based on knowledge, information, and belief. Rule 11 does not require a guarantee or certification that every detailed fact has been thoroughly investigated and found to be correct. The Supreme Court cited the practices of joinder of parties and the filing of a fictitious "Doe" pleading as alternative ways to commence an action under such circumstances. Temple v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992).

Legal Malpractice Complaint — Upheld Under Liberal Rules of Pleading: A construction company filed a complaint against an attorney alleging legal malpractice in the attorney's representation of the company in two civil suits. The complaint alleged: (1) the company had hired the attorney to act as its legal counsel; (2) the attorney, while so acting, had failed to file answers to two complaints filed against the company; (3) those failures resulted in default judgments against the company; and (4) the company suffered damages of $50,000 and demanded relief in that amount. The attorney moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the complaint failed to state a cause of action because the complaint did not specifically allege that had it not been for the negligence of the attorney, the company would have won the lawsuits. The District Court dismissed the suit and was reversed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court ruled that under Montana's liberal rules of pleading, the complaint was sufficient. R.H. Schwartz Constr. Specialties, Inc. v. Hanrahan, 207 M 105, 672 P2d 1116, 40 St. Rep. 1926 (1983).

No Jurisdiction Over Issues Not Presented in Pleadings: Where the plaintiff church was granted a tax exemption by the Department of Revenue for some but not all of the plaintiff's real property and brought a quiet title action to determine its ownership and the tax-exempt status of that portion of the property for which it had not been granted an exemption, the District Court erred in removing the exemption originally granted by the Department of Revenue. Under the rationale of Heller v. Osburnsen, 162 M 182, 510 P2d 13 (1973), and Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Kruse, 121 M 202, 192 P2d 317 (1948), the District Court had jurisdiction only over those issues raised in the pleadings, and the exempt status of lots 10 through 16 was not at issue in the case. Consequently, the District Court had no jurisdiction to remove the tax-exempt status for those lots belonging to the plaintiff. Old Fashion Baptist Church v. Dept. of Revenue, 206 M 451, 671 P2d 625, 40 St. Rep. 1774 (1983).

Insurance Coverage — Material Misrepresentation — Burden of Proof: Plaintiff sued for damages in a diversity case for defendant's failure to pay for removal of a cancerous kidney under the terms of an insurance policy. Defendant conceded that the condition was covered by the policy but defended its refusal to pay on the ground that there had been a material misrepresentation in the application for insurance. The court held that the policy cannot be voided unless the applicant knew that his representation was untrue and that the burden of proving a misrepresentation that will void an insurance policy is on the defendant. Conflicting testimony and evidence were presented. The court was unable to find that the evidence preponderated against plaintiff and ordered payment of the claim. Warner v. First Farwest Life Ins. Corp., 37 St. Rep. 2110 (D.C. Mont. 1980) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Liberal Construction of Complaint: Although the language used in a complaint may be unclear, the presumption is that no absurd or unreasonable result was intended and the claim will be looked at as a whole in order to sustain it. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Collins, 146 M 321, 406 P2d 365 (1965).

Former Rule 8(a). Claims for relief

General 571
Actions for Libel and Slander 577

GENERAL

Failure to State Claims for Fraudulent and Negligent Misrepresentation — Intent to Injure and Requirements of Former Rules 8(a) and 9(b) — Confusion of Law by District Court: In a case in which two banks brought an action against an accounting firm for damages caused by an unqualified audit statement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the accounting firm's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Citing Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 Mont. 7, 594 P.2d 324 (1979), the Supreme Court held that the requirements to particularly plead fraud must be balanced with the provisions of former Rule 8(a) M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly applied a heavier burden of pleading an "intent to injure" than was justified under 27-1-221 because the language in that section could be interpreted to apply to a claim for punitive damages. The Supreme Court also found that the District Court's dismissal of the negligent misrepresentation claim occurred because the District Court confused it with a claim for professional negligence and that that confusion resulted from an incorrect jury instruction confusing "near privity" under Thayer v. Hicks, 243 Mont. 138, 793 P.2d 784 (1990), with the standard for duty of care in third-party negligent misrepresentation cases under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case for a new trial with the correct jury instructions. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Contents of the Complaint and Issues Raised in Discovery Provided Adequate Notice: The District Court found no textual reference in the complaint regarding negligence with respect to the standard of care for presurgical treatment and granted the defendant summary judgment. The summary judgment was improperly granted because even though the complaint did not specifically allege that the defendant's negligence encompassed presurgical treatment, expert testimony in the depositions clearly put the defendant on notice that the plaintiff maintained that the defendant was negligent with respect to presurgical treatment. Griffin v. Moseley, 2010 MT 132, 356 Mont. 393, 234 P.3d 869.

Grantor-Support Agreement Implied in Pleadings — Trial Properly Allowed: Defendant children contended that plaintiff parents should not have been allowed to proceed to trial on a grantor-support theory when the parents failed to explicitly raise the theory in the pretrial order. The Supreme Court disagreed. A grantor-support agreement is implied when parents transfer assets to their children in consideration for support. The pretrial order stated that the parents transferred corporate stock to the children as long as the children included the father in corporate decisionmaking and continued to meet the parents' physical and financial needs and asserted that the children breached the agreement. Although the parents did not include the theory in the pretrial order, the elements of the theory were set forth, and the District Court did not err in allowing the parents to proceed to trial Hjartarson v. Hjartarson, 2006 MT 273, 334 M 212, 147 P3d 164 (2006).

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. This rule requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Error in Summary Dismissal of Improperly Pleaded Claims: Green Tree Financial Corporation (Green Tree) as "lender" and Larson, doing business as Majestic Homes, Inc. (Majestic), as "approved dealer" had an arrangement for purposes of making federal housing loans pursuant to federal Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regulations. Majestic sued for breach of contract and for noncontract tort damages. The District Court held that no contractual relationship existed and dismissed the noncontract claims as improperly pleaded. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a contract was in force, and reinstated the underlying noncontract tort damage claims without commenting on their merit, noting that although the complaint was not a model of notice pleading, the allegations were sufficiently precise and well supported to provide Green Tree with the factual basis for the tort claims against it. The claims should not have been dismissed by summary judgment based simply on the manner in which they were pleaded. Larson v. Green Tree Financial Corp., 1999 MT 157, 295 M 110, 983 P2d 357, 56 St. Rep. 618 (1999), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998). See also Linn v. City County Health Dept., 1999 MT 235, 296 M 145, 988 P2d 302, 56 St. Rep. 922 (1999).

Damages for Carbon Monoxide Poisoning — Applicability of Landlord and Tenant Act to Third Parties — Act Sufficiently Pleaded — Fees Payable Though Not Specifically Requested: Kunst, a guest at the apartment leased by Erpenbach, and Erpenbach were granted a directed verdict as to liability in their suit against Pass, the landlord, that both were poisoned by carbon monoxide in the apartment building. The jury returned an award of $5,000 to each plaintiff. The District Court Judge, who had taken over the case from a judge who had retired after hearing the case, denied attorney fees on the basis that the previous judge concluded that Pass was liable only under a "general theory of negligence". The Supreme Court reviewed the record and determined that the former judge had in fact left open the issue of whether The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 applied. The Supreme Court pointed out that the complaint either made reference in every count to the Act or incorporated the Act by reference and that a review of the record showed that the plaintiffs had also moved for a directed verdict pursuant to the Act. Although the District Court didn't expressly hold that Pass had violated the Act, the Supreme Court held that as a matter of law, Pass had violated certain provisions of the Act. The Supreme Court also held that a third party, such as Kunst, was covered by the Act because: (1) a third party is an "aggrieved party", as used in 70-24-401, as demonstrated by the official comments to the corresponding section of the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act; (2) Oregon, with a similar statute, includes third parties as aggrieved parties; and (3) the official comments to the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act also demonstrate that the standards contained in the Act apply more broadly than only to persons who have a contract with the landlord. Because the Act applies, the Supreme Court held that the attorney fee provisions contained in 70-24-442 also apply. In response to the defendants' argument that the complaint did not specifically request payment of attorney fees, the Supreme Court responded that: (1) the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure require only notice pleading and that because the action was brought pursuant to the Act and the Act contains a provision for attorney fees, it should have been apparent to the defendants that they could be ordered to pay fees; (2) the defendants' argument that they had no opportunity to defend against the claim for fees was without merit; and (3) the plaintiffs were a "prevailing party", the motion for fees was timely filed because it was done immediately after the District Court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a directed verdict, and there is no statutory time limit in Montana in which to file a motion for fees, as there is a time limit in 25-10-501 to file a motion for costs. Because fees were denied by the District Court for a legal reason and the District Court misconstrued the law, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court in order for the District Court to exercise its discretion in awarding fees. Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998).

Constructive Fraud Pleading — "Inartful" Pleading Held Sufficient — Relationship Between Rule 9(b) and This Rule: Berg was sued by the State Fund in a complaint that pleaded constructive fraud in three paragraphs that incorporated previous counts of the complaint by reference. Berg alleged that the constructive fraud count did not comply with the requirements of Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P., that all of the elements of the constructive fraud claim be pleaded with "particularity" because all of the elements of constructive fraud were not pleaded. The Supreme Court held that the "particularity" requirements of Rule 9(b) do not negate, and must be read in conjunction with, the provisions of this rule requiring a short and plain statement. The Supreme Court noted that Berg was able to sufficiently understand the state's pleading, that he made a responsive pleading denying the allegation of constructive fraud, that the State Fund pleading must be understood in its context of the facts of the case, and that there were no contradictory statements or statements made "on information and belief" in any of the State Fund's statements in its complaint. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Failure to Replead in Accordance With Rules — Dismissal With Prejudice Warranted — Exhaustion of All Sanctions Not Required: After a contract action against Nystroms was dismissed, Nystroms brought an action against the plaintiffs and their counsel, consisting of 76 paragraphs in 26 pages, alleging malicious fraudulent prosecution, intentional abuse of process, and unlawful intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court determined that the complaint was vindictive, argumentative, and repetitive and directed Nystroms to replead in accordance to Rules 8 and 12, M.R.Civ.P. Nystroms then filed an amended complaint of 130 paragraphs in 43 pages including previous allegations and adding allegations of interference with business relations and conspiracy. The District Court dismissed with prejudice under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to comply with the court's order. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that even though there may have been other less severe remedies available to the District Court, that court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. The Nystroms' counsel had warning that failure to replead in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure could result in dismissal. The District Court could have reasonably concluded that there was no other adequate remedy available to the District Court and the defendant under the circumstances. Nystrom v. Melcher, 262 M 151, 864 P2d 754, 50 St. Rep. 1488 (1993).

Failure to Amend Complaint — Dismissal Proper: Kudloff brought an action against the city of Billings, alleging that the city had wrongfully annexed his property. Two years later, the city moved to have the wrongful annexation claim dismissed because Kudloff no longer owned the property and was without standing to pursue the claim. Kudloff argued that he had sold the property in order to mitigate damages and was still entitled to recover for losses he alleged were due to the forced sale of his property. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had properly dismissed the claim because Kudloff had not amended his complaint and the purpose of a complaint and subsequent amendments is to provide adequate notice to the defendant of the nature of the action that must be defended against. Kudloff v. Billings, 260 M 371, 860 P2d 140, 50 St. Rep. 1108 (1993).

Pleading Three Separate Causes Under One Set of Facts: An employee set forth all factual allegations, followed by separate statements of three causes of action: wrongful discharge, breach of express and implied contract, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. All of the factual allegations were essentially incorporated into each cause. An employee sufficiently indicated the intent to plead the causes as separate and independent. Mere joinder of alternative or inconsistent claims does not require dismissal of an otherwise legitimate claim, nor does the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act limit a claimant's right to plead an independent cause of action in conjunction with a claim under the Act. Beasley v. Semitool, Inc., 258 M 258, 853 P2d 84, 50 St. Rep. 522 (1993).

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Liability of Coemployee: Section 27-1-703 provides that to the extent a coemployee has immunity from liability under the Workers' Compensation Act, a trier of fact cannot consider or determine negligence by the coemployee. The existence of immunity must be determined by the District Court. No statute or rule requires pleading the inapplicability of the Workers' Compensation Act because the jurisdiction of the District Court over common-law personal injury claims is indisputable. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992), distinguishing Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929), and Massey v. Selensky, 212 M 68, 685 P2d 938 (1984).

Plaintiff Allowed to File Amended Complaint for Personal Injuries: The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's original complaint but granted her 10 days to file an amended complaint. In the amended complaint, the plaintiff alleged the same basic fact pattern but attributed her injuries to the active negligence rather than passive negligence of an employee of the defendant. The lower court again dismissed the action, this time on the basis that the plaintiff had based her claim on newly alleged facts and that the statute of limitations had run. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the same basic fact pattern had been set out in both complaints and that the original complaint and the amended complaint stated an adequate claim, meeting the requirement that pleadings be simple, concise, and direct. Thomas v. St., 239 M 38, 778 P2d 900, 46 St. Rep. 1494 (1989).

Failure to State Plaintiff's County of Residence in Body of Complaint — Venue Determination: It was not fatal to plaintiff's complaint to fail to state in its body the place of plaintiff's residence when the residence was set out in the signature. The District Court properly determined residence for venue purposes based on the signature and plaintiff's affidavit. Kendall v. St., 231 M 316, 752 P2d 1091, 45 St. Rep. 646 (1988).

Conversion of Investment by Investment Advisor — Claim: Amended complaint was sufficient to constitute a claim for relief based on conversion where it alleged plaintiff invested approximately $32,000 through defendant investment firm in the Franklin Money Fund, that the firm wrongfully and without authority removed the money from the fund and placed it in the Kemper Cash Equivalent Fund, and that plaintiff was damaged by the firm's actions in the amount of $1,500, as he had to secure the services of an attorney and expend time, effort, and funds in pursuit of his property. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983).

Sale of Interest in Land Subject to Purchase Option — Sufficiency of Claim Attaching: A sufficient claim for relief was stated in an action for specific performance by lessors of a purchase option where lessee alleged that he notified lessors of his intention to exercise the option the next month and that lessors purported to convey the minerals under the land to their children without consideration and in clear violation of the terms of the option, under which, upon sale to lessee, the lessee was to receive one-half of any oil and mineral rights. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Sufficiency of Complaint for Breach of Purchase Option: In lessee's suit for specific performance of sale under lease with option to purchase, the complaint sufficiently stated a claim where it alleged that plaintiff notified lessors of his exercise of the option, that the downpayment required by the lease had been tendered, and that lessors had alienated part of the land, placed additional encumbrances on it, endeavored to frustrate the purchase, and intended to refuse to perform. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Complaint Construed in Favor of Plaintiff: For purposes of the motion to dismiss, the complaint is to be construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff and its allegations taken as true. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Failure to Plead Proper Theory — Bar to Evidence: When sellers of land argued that the buyers misled them as to the effect of an escrow agreement and warranty deed, estoppel had no application since the court found that sellers possessed a copy of the instruments for a considerable length of time and had ample opportunity to examine them. Furthermore, since sellers failed to plead fraud by amending their pleadings, they were not entitled to present parol evidence to show that these instruments constituted an acceptance of the land under the doctrine of estoppel. Tschache v. Barclay, 172 M 415, 564 P2d 1299 (1977).

Libel — Insufficient Complaint: Complaint for libel alleging that defendant, while acting within the course and scope of his employment caused employer to terminate plaintiff's contract, was a contradiction and was insufficient to allege libel or interference with contract. Baillie v. Rollins, 165 M 516, 530 P2d 440 (1974).

New Complaint Following Dismissal: "Amended complaint" filed under original cause number, was a valid, initial complaint where it satisfied requirements of notice despite fact that previous complaint had been withdrawn and dismissed without prejudice. Butte Country Club v. Metropolitan Sanitary & Storm Sewer District, 164 M 74, 519 P2d 408 (1974).

Notice Pleading: Where pleading titled "Amended Complaint" which satisfied notice and other requirements of statute was filed, it was a valid initial complaint under modern rules of notice pleading. Butte Country Club v. Metropolitan Sanitary & Storm Sewer District, 164 M 74, 519 P2d 408 (1974). See also Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998).

Rule Requires Only Notice Pleading: The rules are essentially notice pleading statutes rather than the more formal fact pleading statutes. Brothers v. Surplus Tractor Parts Corp., 161 M 412, 506 P2d 1362 (1973).

Relation Back of Amendment — Avoidance of Statute of Limitations: Although the Statute of Limitations is an affirmative defense that need not be negated in the complaint, the court should consider whether a motion to amend a complaint relates back to the original complaint and so avoids the bar of the Statute of Limitations. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Failure to Plead Claim — Bar to Judgment: Where plaintiff failed to plead claim for deficiency judgment on balance remaining after sale of repossessed vehicles, no deficiency judgment could be rendered and the pleadings could not be amended to conform even though evidence had been received which might have supported such a judgment. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968).

Failure to State a Claim — Terms of Pleading: Mere absence of certain terms of act does not cause a complaint to be bad by failing to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. A short and plain statement of the claim, in whatever words, suffices. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Alternative Relief — Separate Claims on Note and Mortgage: Upon default in an action against the unconditional guarantors of a note and to foreclose mortgage securing the note, the holder of the note may properly proceed at its option against either security in the same action. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation v. Cowgill, 143 M 98, 387 P2d 435 (1963).

Optional Claims — Alternate Relief: Holder of note secured by contracts of unconditional guarantee and real estate mortgage may plead alternatively as to theory of recovery with court having authority under the rules to dispense with any claim left unadjudicated. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation v. Cowgill, 143 M 98, 387 P2d 435 (1963).

Creation and Maintenance of Nuisance — Failure to State a Claim: A complaint endeavoring to set out the creation and maintenance of a public nuisance was insufficient to state a claim upon which relief could be granted where it set out the construction of mill by defendant in 1954, yet alleged the incorporation of defendant company in 1956, and purported to show the measure of damages to the plaintiffs based on the value of the property before the mill was established and the value of the property at the time the complaint was filed in 1962. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 142 M 175, 382 P2d 552 (1963).

Failure to State a Claim — Dismissal of Complaint Held Proper: Where plaintiffs elected not to amend their complaint, but to stand on it, and there was nothing in the record to indicate that there was any set of circumstances which would admit of their stating a claim upon which relief could be granted under the complaint, the court properly sustained defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 142 M 175, 382 P2d 552 (1963).

Sufficiency of Pleading — Failure to State a Claim: A complaint must state something more than facts which, at the most, only hint at a right to relief. Court properly dismissed complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 142 M 175, 382 P2d 552 (1963), followed in Treutel v. Jacobs, 240 M 405, 784 P2d 915, 46 St. Rep. 2233 (1989), and Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). Treutel v. Jacobs was followed in Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996). Ryan v. Bozeman was followed in Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999).

Variance Between Testimony and Complaint: Where complaint alleged that plaintiff had earned $2,956 while working for the defendant, and the defendant proved payment of this amount to plaintiff, it was error to permit plaintiff to testify that there was still another $2,956 due him. It confronted defendant with a cause of action not pleaded. Johns v. Modern Home Crafters, Inc., 134 M 76, 328 P2d 641 (1958).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Action on Account: It is not necessary to allege the items constituting an account, but an allegation that an indebtedness is owing from defendant to plaintiff for the balance due on "stumpage from timber purchased of and from the plaintiff" which upon demand the defendant failed and still fails to pay, is sufficient to allege the ultimate facts required to state a cause of action. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Action on Commercial Paper — Necessary Allegations: It is a fundamental rule of pleading in actions on bills and notes that the plaintiff must allege facts showing title or right to sue. In an action by the payee named in the instrument, however, a formal allegation that he is still the owner and holder is unnecessary if the execution of the instrument, its delivery to the plaintiff, and the default of the maker or acceptor are alleged. Parkinson v. Diefenderfer, 128 M 547, 280 P2d 424 (1955).

Statement of Legal Conclusion Subject to Dismissal: Statement that the defendant "wrongfully failed to perform his official duty to supply the plaintiff with license blanks" in a suit for damages against the state Fish and Game Warden was a bald conclusion of law and insufficient to withstand general demurrer. Meinecke v. McFarland, 122 M 515, 206 P2d 1012 (1949).

Divorce Action — Allegation of Desertion: In a divorce action a complaint charging desertion must be sufficiently informative as to matters of time and place of desertion as to reasonably inform the defendant of the charge. Hosking v. Hosking, 120 M 437, 186 P2d 503 (1947).

Divorce Action — Necessary Allegations: In divorce action complaint must do more than allege ground of divorce in language of the statute and must allege the particular facts relied upon as a cause of action. Crenshaw v. Crenshaw, 120 M 190, 182 P2d 477 (1947), explained in Hosking v. Hosking, 120 M 437, 186 P2d 503 (1947).

Purpose of Pleading — Notification of Facts: The object of pleading is to notify the adverse party of the facts which the pleader expects to prove, and for that reason the allegation of such facts must be made with that certainty which will enable the opponent to prepare his evidence to meet the alleged facts. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 99 M 347, 42 P2d 1003 (1935); Kozasa v. N. Pac. Ry., 61 M 233, 201 P 682 (1921).

Action for Personal Injuries — Liberal Construction of Complaint: Under the more modern doctrine of liberal construction of pleadings, the complaint in an action for damages arising out of an automobile accident, alleging that defendant operated his machine "in such a negligent, careless and unlawful manner" as to run into a child lawfully in an alley, was sufficient as against the objection that the particular acts of negligence relied upon were not alleged. Johnson v. Herring, 89 M 156, 295 P 1100 (1931), distinguished in Linney v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., 94 M 229, 21 P2d 1101 (1933).

Complaint Stating Ultimate Facts as Sufficient: If the complaint states ultimate facts and not conclusions of law drawn from facts, in ordinary and concise language, so that the man on the street may know what is charged therein, it is immune to a general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or to an objection to the introduction of testimony on the ground that it does not state a cause of action. Wells-Dickey Co. v. Embody, 82 M 150, 266 P 869 (1928).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Breach of Contract: A complaint stating the facts constituting a contract imposing a duty upon defendant, its breach and resulting damages, in ordinary and concise language, is sufficient and proof against a general demurrer. Borgeas v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 73 M 407, 236 P 1069 (1925).

Complaint for Wrongful Death Held Sufficient: Complaint in an action against a street railway company alleging that the motorman of defendant carelessly, negligently, etc., ran his car on a city street at a rate of speed prohibited by ordinance and without ringing the bell at a crossing and as a proximate result thereof ran over and killed plaintiff's decedent, was sufficient as against the objection that it stated mere legal conclusions, the facts and circumstances constituting the negligence being matter of proof and not of averment. McManus v. Butte Elec. Ry., 68 M 379, 219 P 241 (1923).

Sufficiency of Complaint — All Elements to Be Alleged: Whatever may be the nature of the cause of action upon which a plaintiff seeks to recover, he must allege in his complaint facts disclosing the presence of all the elements necessary to make it out. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 68 M 42, 216 P 791 (1923); Griffin v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 67 M 386, 216 P 765 (1923); Chealey v. Purdy, 54 M 489, 171 P 926 (1918).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Legal Theory Immaterial: A complaint will be held sufficient if a cause of action is stated upon any theory. Griffin v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 67 M 386, 216 P 765 (1923).

Legal Conclusions Alleged — Complaint for Injunction: To state a cause of action for an injunction the complaint must disclose the facts from which the court may draw the conclusion that plaintiff has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, the bare statement that plaintiff has no such remedy being insufficient, it being no more than the averment of a conclusion. State ex rel. Stephens v. Zuck, 67 M 324, 215 P 806 (1923).

Form of Action Immaterial: The form in which an action is brought is immaterial, for if upon any view of the case made plaintiff is entitled to relief, the pleading will be sustained and the character of the action determined from the nature of the grievance rather than from the form of the declaration. Samuell v. Moore Mercantile Co., 62 M 232, 204 P 376 (1922).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Complaint to Relate to Proof: A complaint which leaves to surmise and conjecture the course of proof that will be offered in support of it, and obliges the court, as well as the opposing party, to accept the pleader's bare statement, is defective. Mont. Amusement Sec. Co. v. Goldwyn Distrib. Corp., 56 M 215, 182 P 119 (1919).

Superfluous Allegations: If the facts stated disclose a violation of the statute and the resulting damage, the complaint is not rendered insufficient because it contains other allegations which might have been omitted. Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Allegation of Damages — Sufficiency: To state a cause of action for rescission of a contract for fraud, plaintiff need not allege that he suffered pecuniary loss, the statement that he suffered damage or injury being sufficient. Stillwell v. Rankin, 55 M 130, 174 P 186 (1918).

Legal Conclusions Alleged — Fraud in Sheriff's Sale: The complaint in a suit to set aside a judgment and vacate the Sheriff's sale, which alleged that the claim forming the basis of the judgment was a "pretense and fraudulent", and "in fraud of the rights" of plaintiffs, but did not set forth the facts upon which the charges of wrongdoing were grounded, was insufficient, such statements consisting of bald conclusions. Brandt v. McIntosh, 47 M 70, 130 P 413 (1913).

Sufficiency of Pleading Action for Slip — Fall: A complaint against a city for personal injuries received from falling on a sidewalk, obstructed with accumulations of ice and snow, will not support a judgment where it fails to allege facts showing that the city had notice of the obstruction for a sufficient length of time before the injury to have given it a reasonable opportunity to prevent accidents. McEnaney v. Butte, 43 M 526, 117 P 893 (1911), distinguished in Robinson v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 80 M 431, 261 P 253 (1927).

Common-Law Pleading: If the phraseology of any common-law count is adequate in the particular case to bring the pleader within the statutory rule, then his pleading is sufficient; otherwise it is not. Truro v. Passmore, 38 M 544, 100 P 966 (1909).

Legal Conclusions Alleged — Negligence of City: A complaint in an action against a city for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, which merely stated that the city had negligently placed the sidewalk in an unsafe, dangerous, and defective condition, and permitted it to remain so, but failed to specify in what respect the walk was unsafe, dangerous, or defective, did not state facts sufficient to show negligence on the part of the city. The allegation amounted to a bare legal conclusion of the pleader. Pullen v. Butte, 38 M 194, 99 P 290 (1909), distinguished in Stevens v. Butte, 107 M 354, 85 P2d 339 (1938). See Forquer v. North, 42 M 272, 112 P 439 (1910).

ACTIONS FOR LIBEL AND SLANDER

Libel — Insufficient Complaint: Complaint for libel, alleging that defendant while acting within the course and scope of his employment caused employer to terminate plaintiff's contract, was a contradiction and was insufficient to allege libel or interference with contract. Baillie v. Rollins, 165 M 516, 530 P2d 440 (1974).

Libel of Corporation — Sufficiency of Complaint: Complaint by private corporation for libel was sufficient where it charged that the publication was made of and concerning it. Professional & Business Men's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., 163 F. Supp. 274 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Reference to Plaintiff — Sufficiency of Allegations: While, before recovery of damages in a slander action is permissible, it must appear that at least one person of those who heard the defamatory statement knew that plaintiff was meant, plaintiff is not required to so allege in the complaint but may prove such fact under the general allegation that the statement was made of and concerning plaintiff. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

Allegations of Readers' Understanding: In an action for libel founded on an article in a newspaper concerning a certain class of attorneys styled as "shysters" and referring to incidents occurring at a certain inquest, without, however, naming plaintiff or mentioning any individual in particular, which article was libelous per se, the complaint alleging that the matter printed was published "of and concerning the plaintiff" and that readers of the paper understood that plaintiff was the person alluded to, was sufficient to permit of proof showing that plaintiff was the person concerning whom the article was published, and was not demurrable. Nolan v. Standard Publishing Co., 67 M 212, 216 P 571 (1923).

Words Clearly Defamatory: When the words are unequivocal in their import and obviously defamatory, it is not necessary to employ colloquium or innuendo to explain their application and meaning. However, if the words be of doubtful significance, or derive their libelous character not from their own intrinsic force, but from extraneous facts, it is necessary to allege the meaning intended, or set forth such extraneous facts by proper averments. Paxton v. Woodward, 31 M 195, 78 P 215 (1904).

Former Rule 8(b). Defenses — form of denials

Answer Pleading Insufficient Knowledge Creates Factual Dispute Subject to Trial — Disposition of Trial Issues by TRO Prohibited — Verified Complaint Not Basis for Agreed Facts — Denial of Due Process: After a writ of execution was issued against certain property belonging to her husband, Nancy filed a verified complaint against the Sheriff who would execute on the property. She also filed a petition for a temporary restraining order (TRO), claiming to be a tenant by the entirety in the property subject to execution. The District Court issued the TRO and, at a later show cause hearing, discussed the underlying law with counsel but took no testimony. The Sheriff then filed his answer, pleading insufficient knowledge to admit or deny. A creditor was later allowed to intervene. The creditor's answer also pleaded insufficient knowledge, but his brief took a position opposing Nancy's view of the law applicable to ownership of the property. Nancy then responded with a brief in which she asked the District Court to allow oral argument and reiterated her view of the law. The District Court issued findings and conclusions and quashed the writ of execution, relying upon the "undisputed" facts alleged in Nancy's verified complaint. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that under this rule, the effect of pleading insufficient knowledge is to deny a plaintiff's allegations. The Sheriff's and intervenor's answers pleading insufficient knowledge put into issue the allegations in Nancy's complaint. The only way that those issues of fact could be resolved, short of a trial on the merits, was by a motion for summary judgment or judgment on the pleadings, neither of which was made. The Supreme Court also noted that there was no discovery and no hearing at which facts were determined because there was no testimony taken by the District Court. Citing Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295 (1995), the Supreme Court held that a District Court may not determine, in proceedings on a preliminary injunction or a temporary restraining order, those issues that may arise in a trial on the merits. In this case, the District Court negated Nancy's burden of proof and, without notice, precluded discovery and deprived the Sheriff and the intervenor of the opportunity to disprove Nancy's allegations concerning her right of ownership in the property, thereby depriving the Sheriff and intervenor of their right to procedural due process under the Montana Constitution. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and remanded for proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 287, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Denial of Contractual Liability by Both Defendant Entities — Claims Put in Issue — Burden of Proof — Proposed Findings to Be Based Upon Evidence — No Evidence of Intent to Mislead as Basis for Relief From Judgment: Wright Oil sued Goodrich for petroleum products allegedly delivered but not paid for. Goodrich denied liability, claiming that the products were for the use of West Yellowstone Snowmobile Rentals, Inc. (WYSR), which owned Westgate Texaco, operated by Goodrich. Wright Oil amended its complaint to include WYSR, and after a bench trial, the District Court held against Goodrich because no evidence had been presented proving a contract between WYSR and Wright Oil. Wright Oil then filed a motion for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), seeking relief from the District Court's failure to hold against WYSR. On the basis of evidence not presented at trial, the District Court granted the motion and ordered an evidentiary hearing to reopen the case against WYSR regarding WYSR's contractual liability to Wright Oil. WYSR appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the motion because the circumstances of the District Court's failure to hold WYSR liable for the debt to Wright Oil were not so extraordinary as to warrant relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6). The Supreme Court noted that WYSR's denial of its liability put the allegation of its contractual liability at issue under this rule and that under 26-1-401 and 26-1-402, Wright Oil had the burden of going forward with the evidence of WYSR's contractual liability but failed to present evidence of a contractual relationship between WYSR and Wright Oil. The fact that Goodrich alleged that WYSR was liable for the debt could not, the Supreme Court held, be taken as an admission by WYSR that it was liable for the amounts due. Further, the Supreme Court noted that Wright Oil should not have been surprised by WYSR's proposed findings of fact that it was not liable for the debt because under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., a party's proposed findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and Wright Oil failed to produce that evidence of liability. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Defendant's Duty to Set Out Specific Defenses Not Raised by General Denials: The same principles of fairness and notice that require a plaintiff to set forth the basis of a claim require a defendant to shoulder a corresponding duty to set out not merely general denials as appropriate but also those specific defenses not raised by general denials by which the defendant seeks to avoid liability, rather than merely to controvert plaintiff's factual allegations. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992).

Reliance on Contract Terms — Not Affirmative Defense: The plaintiffs' insurance policy contained a clause that required implementing an appraisal procedure if the parties could not agree on the amount of loss. The policy also stated that no legal action could be initiated until there was full compliance with the terms of the policy. The insurer invoked the appraisal clause, but the plaintiffs refused to submit to the procedure and instead filed suit for damages and bad faith against the insurer. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment in favor of the insurer was appropriate in light of the clear language of the policy, and the court further held that the terms of the policy were a negative defense and did not have to be affirmatively set out in the defendants' answer. Dunn v. Way, 241 M 208, 786 P2d 649, 47 St. Rep. 213 (1990).

Lack of Agency as Negative Defense: Lack of agency is a negative rather than affirmative defense. Sterrett v. Milk River Prod. Credit Ass'n, 234 M 459, 764 P2d 467, 45 St. Rep. 2048 (1988), following Porto v. Peden, 233 F. Supp. 178 (W.D. Pa. 1964). See also Grimsley v. Estate of Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85 (1983).

"Material" Allegations Denied: Where answer denied each and every "material" allegation of the complaint and plaintiff went to trial thereon without objection, each and all allegations in the complaint were material and the plaintiff was required to make proof of such material allegations so pleaded by him. Maass v. Patterson, 122 M 394, 204 P2d 1040 (1949).

Waiver of Objections to Pleadings: Objections to the form of denials are waived by going to trial without first challenging the pleading by motion, demurrer, or other timely and proper objection. Maass v. Patterson, 122 M 394, 204 P2d 1040 (1949).

Lack of Sufficient Information — No Admission Because of General Denial: A denial in an answer to the effect that defendant has not sufficient information as to a given paragraph in the complaint to form a belief and therefore denies the same may not be said to be an admission of the matter set forth therein, where the pleading closed with a general denial of all matters and things in the complaint not specifically denied, admitted, or qualified, the general denial thus covering the allegations of the paragraph. Nelson v. Stukey, 89 M 277, 300 P 287 (1931).

Effect of General Denial: The effect of a general denial is to put in issue every material allegation constituting the cause of action alleged, and thus to cast upon the plaintiff the burden of establishing by his evidence, prima facie at least, the presence of every element of it and hence his right to recover. Swords v. Occident Elevator Co., 72 M 189, 232 P 189 (1924); Chealey v. Purdy, 54 M 489, 171 P 926 (1918).

Action on Promissory Note — Lack of Information: In an action to enforce payment of a promissory note, a denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of an allegation that the note has not been paid raises an issue. The allegation of nonpayment is a material and essential allegation in an action of this character. First Nat'l Bank v. Silver, 45 M 231, 122 P 584 (1912).

Admissions in Answer — Proof Unnecessary: An allegation in an answer that a fact, stated in the complaint as true, is true, or the affirmative statement therein of a fact which is likewise pleaded in the complaint, is an admission of the truth of the allegation of the complaint, and proof thereof is not necessary. O'Donnell v. Butte, 44 M 97, 119 P 281 (1911).

Specific and General Denials Allowed: A defendant may deny generally or specifically certain allegations of the complaint, and may, as to other allegations, deny any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief, and may admit other allegations, and may put still others, or all others, in issue by a general denial. Pengelly v. Peeler, 39 M 26, 101 P 147 (1909).

Allegation of Insufficient Knowledge: An allegation in the answer that "defendants have not sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief . . . and therefore deny the same" was in substantial compliance with section 93-3401, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P.). Milwaukee Gold Extraction Co. v. Gordon, 37 M 209, 95 P 995 (1908).

Denial on Information and Belief: The provisions of section 93-3401, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P.), relative to denial on information and belief, applied to any and all allegations in a complaint. Hence, an allegation in the complaint of a corporation that plaintiff was and is a corporation was put in issue by such a denial. Milwaukee Gold Extraction Co. v. Gordon, 37 M 209, 95 P 995 (1908).

GENERAL

Advice-of-Counsel Defense Must Be Affirmatively Pleaded: An advice-of-counsel defense, when used as an affirmative defense, must be pleaded in accordance with Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P.

Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), overruling McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979), to the extent that McGuire can be read to imply that an advice-of-counsel defense can be invoked to positively avoid a claim for malicious prosecution even if it is not affirmatively pleaded.

Waiver of Defense by Failure to Assert Defense by Answer: The plain language of this rule requires a party to affirmatively set forth a defense, such as statute of limitations, by answer, in order to avoid surprise and eliminate the sweeping ambiguities of a general denial. Nothing in the rule suggests that an affirmative defense may be raised later in the proceedings upon the showing of a lack of prejudice to the opposing party. In this case, defendants raised the statute of limitations defense in a motion for summary judgment filed almost a year after their answer to plaintiff's complaint but made no attempt to amend the answer in the months leading up to the motion. Thus, the District Court did not err in denying the summary judgment motion because defendants waived the statute of limitations defense by failing to assert the defense by answer. Meadow Lake Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 41, 341 M 345, 178 P3d 81 (2008).

Belated Attempt to Amend Answer Properly Denied: Defendant waited almost 5 years until 3 months prior to trial before seeking to amend its complaint to include a statute of frauds defense. The District Court denied the request to amend, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The long delay, allegedly based on defense counsel's oversight, would have prejudiced plaintiff's case because discovery had already closed and reopening discovery would have cost plaintiff considerable money. The District Court acted within its discretion in denying the amendment, given the belated request and potential prejudice. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 M 145, 153 P3d 627 (2007).

Failure to State Legal Defense in Answer — Judgment on Pleadings Proper: Plaintiff filed an action for damages for breach of contract and nonpayment of an account. Defendant filed a response, after which plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings. The District Court granted the motion, and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed after holding that defendant failed either to deny any of the material allegations in the complaint or to allege any affirmative defense to defeat the action. Although pleadings are to be taken in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, defendant's failure to state a legal defense warranted judgment on the pleadings. Neil Consultants, Inc. v. Lindeman, 2006 MT 80, 331 M 514, 134 P3d 43 (2006).

Absence of Evidence of Rescission, Release, Waiver, or Accord and Satisfaction of Contract — Reversal Warranted: Plaintiffs owned shares in defendant's corporation and sought to sell the shares back to the corporation. The corporation sent a letter offering to purchase the shares for $64,933.60, and plaintiffs were instructed that to accept the offer, they were to sign the back of the stock certificate and mail it to the corporation. Plaintiffs did so, but included with the certificate a letter stating that by accepting the offer, plaintiffs reserved their rights under federal and state law. The corporation found the language unacceptable and declined to purchase the shares, instead returning the certificate to plaintiffs. Concerned about possessing a signed stock certificate, plaintiffs ultimately visited the corporation and surrendered the endorsed certificate in exchange for a new one. Plaintiffs then brought a breach of contract suit claiming $64,933.60 in damages, asserting that the corporation had breached its offer to repurchase the stock. The corporation denied that a contract offer existed, arguing that plaintiffs' reply was not an acceptance but rather a counteroffer, and asserted that even if a contract did exist, plaintiffs had waived their rights under it by forfeiting the endorsed certificate in favor of a new one and by failing to immediately assert their rights under the contract. A jury found that the corporation had breached its contract, causing damages in the amount of $64,933.60, but then entered a verdict for the corporation on grounds that the corporation had proved at least one of its affirmative defenses of rescission, release, waiver, or accord and satisfaction. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that only in rare cases should a jury verdict be set aside but reversed the verdict nevertheless on grounds that, even drawing all legitimate inferences in favor of the corporation, there was a complete absence of probative evidence supporting any of the corporation's affirmative defenses. The case was remanded for entry of judgment of $64,933.60 in favor of plaintiffs. Benson v. Diverse Computer Corp., 2004 MT 114, 321 M 140, 89 P3d 981 (2004), followed in Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Strict Liability Statute — Only Enumerated Defenses Available: If a strict liability statute does not expressly provide for a particular defense, that defense may not be raised. Madrid v. District Court, 2002 MT 291, 312 M 517, 60 P3d 438 (2002).

Failure to Assert Timeliness as Affirmative Defense in Construction Lien Case Not Constituting Waiver of Issue — Burden on Lien Claimant to Establish Validity of Lien: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. The Burnses agreed to renovate the motel for Keating. Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, the Burnses filed construction liens for $48,539.19 and $7,403.30. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. The Burnses then filed a complaint against the Partnership, asserting that the action was commenced within the time prescribed by 71-3-562 and seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to 71-3-553. The Partnership admitted that the Burnses filed notices of liens and that the action was filed within 2 years of those filings, but denied that the filings constituted a valid lien. The District Court agreed, concluding that the liens were invalid because they were not timely filed. On appeal, the Burnses contended that the Partnership waived the issue of timeliness by failing to affirmatively plead the issue, relying on Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510 (1992), for the proposition that the timeliness of a construction lien is an affirmative defense required to be pleaded affirmatively pursuant to this rule. The Supreme Court held that Brown v. Ehlert did not support the contention that the timeliness of a construction lien must be affirmatively pleaded. Rather, the defense of timeliness went to the merits of the complaint because timeliness was an element of the claim, and the Partnership's pleading of timeliness did not implicate considerations of fairness or surprise for the Burnses, who were on notice under the 90-day filing requirement in 71-3-535 that they had to establish the validity of their liens. The Partnership's specific denial that the liens were valid was a negative defense that warned the Burnses that they had to prove the validity of the liens as part of their prima facie case, and the Partnership's answer appropriately underscored the Burnses' burden of proof. Thus, the Partnership did not have to affirmatively plead the timeliness issue. The District Court properly concluded that the liens were not valid because the Burnses failed to satisfy the procedural requirement that their liens be timely filed, so the Burnses could not avail themselves of the remedies in the construction lien statutes. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000).

Lack of Justification in Relying on Allegedly False Information — Claim of Negligent Misrepresentation Properly Dismissed: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds of negligent misrepresentation, alleging that Bitterroot relied on Knutson's allegedly false information regarding the value of stock acquired through purchase of another company. However, the definition of negligent misrepresentation set out in St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 M 21, 664 P2d 295 (1983), requires that the party asserting that defense was justified in relying on the allegedly false information. In this case, Spencer, majority shareholder and president of both Bitterroot and the company that was acquired, knew the respective values of both companies and their stocks and knew that the book values were disparate at the time of the transaction. Thus, Spencer's assertion that he was misled by Knutson was neither credible nor supported by the record, and the District Court correctly dismissed Spencer's claim of negligent misrepresentation. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000).

Mistaken Valuation of Stock Insufficient Grounds for Rescission of Contract: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds of mistake of fact, arguing that both parties had mistakenly valued stock exchanged during the purchase of another business. The District Court could not rescind a validly formed contract simply because Bitterroot undervalued the stock. A mutual mistake as to value is not necessarily sufficient to rescind a contract (see 17A C.J.S. Contracts §149). The District Court did not err in dismissing the affirmative defense of mistake of fact because the law does not protect a business from its improvident valuation of stock. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000).

Misvaluation of Corporate Stock Not Constituting Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds that Knutson breached his fiduciary duty to Bitterroot, arguing that Knutson's mistaken valuation of stock acquired during the purchase of another business constituted a breach of that duty. Bitterroot did not contend that Knutson acted in bad faith, but only that he was wrong about the stock value. Applying the standard in 35-1-443, the Supreme Court found that Knutson's inaccurate stock valuation did not constitute a breach of fiduciary duty and that the District Court did not err in dismissing Bitterroot's claim that Knutson breached his fiduciary obligation. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000). See also 18A Am. Jur. 2d Corporations §451 and 18B Am. Jur. 2d Corporations §1705.

Reciprocal Rights and Obligations Considered Sufficient Consideration to Sustain Shareholders' Agreement: Following his termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay on grounds of insufficient consideration, contending that the essential consideration for the shareholders' agreement was the exchange of stocks of equal value—an argument based on the premise that the stock exchange and the shareholders' agreement were one agreement. However, the shareholders' agreement was enforceable independent of the stock exchange between the parties, and the creation of reciprocal rights and obligations among the shareholders was sufficient consideration to sustain the shareholders' agreement; thus, the District Court did not err in concluding that the consideration was sufficient. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000).

Defense of Statute of Frauds Raised Sua Sponte by District Court Reversed — Defense to Be Raised by "Party": State Farm Insurance Company, as a subrogee of Estabrook, sued Baden for negligent damage to Estabrook's vehicle and obtained a default judgment. State Farm then sought a default judgment against codefendant Clark, but the District Court, because of the amount of fees requested by State Farm's counsel, reviewed the facts of the case and, sua sponte, raised the issue of the statute of limitations with State Farm's counsel. The District Court then denied the motion for default judgment against Clark, set aside the default judgment against Baden, and dismissed the complaint with prejudice. Citing Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992 (1986), and cases from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that because subsection (c) of this rule provides for the raising of affirmative defenses by a "party", the defense of the statute of limitations should not have been raised sua sponte by the District Court. The Supreme Court reasoned that because it had held in Bennett that the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations had to be raised by answer and not by motion, the court must also conclude that a party's waiver of the defense could not be suspended, sua sponte, by the District Court when the affected party had not only failed to file a motion but had failed to appear at all. Estabrook v. Baden, 284 M 419, 943 P2d 1334, 54 St. Rep. 947 (1997).

Assumption of Risk Inapplicable to Contract Action — Harmless Error: Garrison sued Averill, a real estate broker, in contract for defrauding him by failing to disclose the true facts concerning an easement on real property purchased by Garrison. The District Court found that Garrison had "assumed the risk" of subsequent damages by failing to read the terms of the easement. The Supreme Court held that assumption of risk is ordinarily a tort term associated with personal injury actions, but held that because the District Court did not continue with any more analysis or conclusion after its reference to assumption of risk and because the District Court found that Averill did not breach his duty of care to Garrison, the reference by the District Court to assumption of risk was harmless error. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

Failure to Assert Discharge of Debt by Bankruptcy in Earlier Action as Waiver and Res Judicata in Subsequent Action: Loney was sued by his law firm for fees owed for representing him in bankruptcy proceedings. Loney failed to answer the complaint, and a default judgment was entered. Loney subsequently filed a complaint to have the judgment declared void on the basis that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. The Supreme Court held that Loney had been required to assert the discharge of the debt in bankruptcy as an affirmative defense when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he had waived that defense and could not now assert it in his claim against the firm. The Supreme Court also held that Loney could have litigated the issue of the discharge of the debt when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from litigating that issue again in his suit to have the firm's judgment voided. Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995), followed in Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997).

Evidence of When Life Begins and Biblical or Moral Justification Inadmissible as Criminal Defense: As a defense, defendants who blocked access to an abortion clinic sought to introduce evidence of when life begins, as well as biblical and moral justification for their actions. Evidence of when life begins was properly excluded by the trial court absent any citation to a defense to which the evidence might be relevant. Further, defendants' individual religious and moral beliefs were neither included in nor relevant to any allowable statutory defense. Personal beliefs do not provide legal justification for or immunize a person from the consequences of acts that violate state criminal laws. Missoula v. Asbury, 265 M 14, 873 P2d 936, 51 St. Rep. 383 (1994), distinguishing Strzelczyk v. Jett, 264 M 153, 870 P2d 730, 51 St. Rep. 206 (1994).

Search and Seizure — Complaint for Return of Photographs Not Properly Pleaded: John and Jane Doe brought an action for invasion of privacy stemming from execution of a search warrant. They claimed that the search was overbroad in that agents searched an envelope and found nude photos when they were searching for evidence of tax evasion. The complaint contained a statement that three of the photographs were missing. The parties' brief referred only to a single count for invasion of privacy. The Supreme Court held that these references were insufficient to put the defendants and the District Court on notice that Does were alleging a specific seizure by one of the named defendants and did not constitute an independent basis for a claim for invasion of privacy. Doe v. St., 256 M 348, 846 P2d 1018, 50 St. Rep. 105 (1993).

Defendant's Duty to Set Out Specific Defenses Not Raised by General Denials: The same principles of fairness and notice that require a plaintiff to set forth the basis of a claim require a defendant to shoulder a corresponding duty to set out not merely general denials as appropriate but also those specific defenses not raised by general denials by which the defendant seeks to avoid liability, rather than merely to controvert plaintiff's factual allegations. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992).

Workers' Compensation Exclusivity and Coemployee Immunity Matters to Be Pleaded Affirmatively — Timeliness: Workers' compensation exclusivity and coemployee immunity are matters of avoidance that, pursuant to this rule, must be pleaded affirmatively. When these matters were raised only after plaintiff's case in chief rather than in initial pleadings, after opportunity for discovery, or at the pretrial conference, the procedure did not provide appropriate notice to plaintiff or apprise the District Court that the issues were before it. Consideration of the matters was thus waived as not timely raised. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992).

Exclusion of Evidence on Suretyship Defense on Grounds of Surprise — Adequate Opportunity to Raise Defense, Yet No Notice Given: Challinors sought to introduce evidence concerning a "suretyship defense" for the first time at trial. Glacier National Bank (Glacier) repeatedly objected on the basis of surprise. The trial court gave Challinors ample opportunity to demonstrate that notice concerning this legal theory had been given to Glacier during discovery or at any other time. Upon finding that notice had not been given, the court considered possible prejudice to Glacier. The issue Challinors sought to raise would have changed the entire complexion of the lawsuit. In light of the lack of notice prior to trial of the intent to raise the issue and in light of Glacier's timely objections, it was not an abuse of the court's discretion in not allowing Challinors to present the evidence. Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992).

Fire of Unknown Origin — Res Ipsa Loquitur Inapplicable: The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not usually applicable in cases of fires of unknown origin, which may occur in the absence of negligence. Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Steadman's Hardware, Inc., 251 M 242, 824 P2d 250, 49 St. Rep. 13 (1992), following Wright v. U.S., 472 F. Supp. 1153 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Advice of Counsel as Affirmative Defense — When Jury Instruction Warranted: In order to warrant an instruction on the affirmative defense of advice of counsel, defendant must establish prima facie that he fully and fairly presented to counsel all facts within his knowledge. It is insufficient for defendant to describe the factual allegations underlying the prosecution and then testify generally that all facts were conveyed to the prosecutor. Rather, defendant must specifically testify as to the details of the information conveyed to the prosecutor at that time. Hill v. Burlingame, 244 M 246, 797 P2d 925, 47 St. Rep. 1580 (1990), citing Cornner v. Hamilton, 62 M 239, 204 P 489 (1922).

Lack of Agency as Negative Defense: Lack of agency is a negative rather than affirmative defense. Sterrett v. Milk River Prod. Credit Ass'n, 234 M 459, 764 P2d 467, 45 St. Rep. 2048 (1988), following Porto v. Peden, 233 F. Supp. 178 (W.D. Pa. 1964). See also Grimsley v. Estate of Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85 (1983).

Assumption of Risk Not Pleaded: Assumption of risk is an affirmative defense, and in a case where it was not pleaded affirmatively, the District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on assumption of risk. Samuelson v. A.A. Quality Constr., Inc., 230 M 220, 749 P2d 73, 45 St. Rep. 157 (1988).

Affirmative Defenses in Initial Action as Basis for Later Complaint — Res Judicata: In response to a bank's initial action to collect on defaulted loans, affirmative defenses were raised alleging creditor misconduct. In a second action, this time against the bank, the same allegations were raised again in greater detail. The Supreme Court found that the answer and affirmative defenses raised in the initial action indicated a knowledge of all facts necessary to raise the issue as compulsory counterclaims in the first action; therefore, the second complaint was barred by res judicata. First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987).

Applicability of Affirmative Defenses to Question of Separate Trials: Affirmative defenses which do not go to the merits of defendant's claim, for example, a defense of a Statute of Limitations or a lack of jurisdiction, may lend themselves to bifurcation, but affirmative defenses which dispute the merits of a claim on issues of fact do not. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Wrongful Conversion Claim Not Properly Raised: The Supreme Court found it unnecessary to address appellants' claim of wrongful conversion by Northwestern Bank. Such an allegation should have been raised as either an affirmative defense or a counterclaim. Appellants failed to plead it as either. Therefore, it was not considered by the trial court and will not be considered on appeal. NW. Bank of Lewistown v. Estate of Coppedge, 219 M 473, 713 P2d 523, 43 St. Rep. 102 (1986).

Findings of Court in Error — No Waiver of Indemnity Reimbursement From State: Appellant contracted with the state to build a segment of highway. Respondent subcontracted with appellant to do certain concrete work on bridges. The state designed cuts through a mountainous area that were too steep and had to be redone for stability. This delayed the project and the availability of concrete, increasing costs of construction. Appellant entered a supplemental agreement with the state that purported to waive claims for extra costs. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court finding that this provision precluded appellant from indemnity reimbursement from the state for extra money paid to respondent because of the delay. Under the waiver provision, the contractor could still claim expenses from conditions not within the knowledge of the parties at execution of the agreement. Unavailability of concrete because of delay was such a condition. The court noted that the judgment against the state was subject to 18-1-404. E.F. Matelich Constr. Co. v. Goodfellow Bros., Inc., 217 M 29, 702 P2d 967, 42 St. Rep. 1004 (1985).

Summary Judgment Granting Attorneys Amount Billed Under Retainer Agreement: On appeal from summary judgment granting attorneys amount billed under retainer agreement, the Supreme Court held that when an attorney entered into a contingent fee arrangement based on a percentage of the judgment or award recovered by the client, there was no genuine issue of material fact as to the amount owing. The total amount recovered properly included interest, and the attorney was entitled not only to a percentage of the actual damages recovered but also to a percentage of the prejudgment and postjudgment interest recovered. Although the court agreed to treat appellants' counterclaim as an affirmative defense, it held that the affirmative defense did not foreclose a summary judgment determination of attorney fees. Smith v. Howery, 217 M 23, 701 P2d 1381, 42 St. Rep. 995 (1985).

Alleged Fraudulent Sale of Property With Title Defects — Not Pleaded in Answer: The Supreme Court rejected vendee's contention that it was justified in withholding payments on land sale contract because vendors were guilty of fraud and misrepresentation for selling property with incurable defects in the title. The court noted that the record does not support vendee's contention of incurable defects, that vendee's pleadings contain no such affirmative defense, and that the court will not consider on appeal issues that have not been raised below. Scheitlin v. R. & D. Minerals, 217 M 8, 701 P2d 1388, 42 St. Rep. 986 (1985).

Release Applicable to Claims for Attorney Fees and Bad Faith in Settlement: Where the plaintiff retained counsel to force the defendant insurance company to settle an automobile liability claim and later signed a release of the company when it settled the claim, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment to the insurance company on the issue of the company's liability for the plaintiff's attorney fees and bad faith in settlement of the claim. The plaintiff's obligation to pay the attorney fees arose prior to the signing of the release, and recovery is therefore precluded by the release. Moreover, while the plaintiff claims it was not his intent to release the company from his claim for bad faith, the release applies to all claims arising out of the occurrence and the plaintiff's intent, unknown to the defendant, therefore is not controlling. Richardson v. Safeco Ins. Co., 206 M 73, 669 P2d 1073, 40 St. Rep. 1515 (1983).

Waiver of Provision in Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Affirmatively Pleaded: A declaratory judgment action was brought to construe a collective bargaining agreement. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment. The defendant opposed the motion and filed an affidavit in support of its opposition. The plaintiff argued that the affidavit submitted by defendant was inadmissible as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The trial court concluded that no material factual issue existed but denied the motion because of waiver by the plaintiff. The waiver issue was addressed in the affidavit but not in any of the other pleadings. The Supreme Court held that the waiver issue was not properly before the trial court and ordered the trial court to reconsider its denial of the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court also said that the defendant could amend its answer to affirmatively plead waiver. Butte Teachers' Union v. Bd. of Trustees, 201 M 482, 655 P2d 146, 39 St. Rep. 2248 (1982).

Proof Allowed on Affirmative Defense Not Pleaded: In a quiet title action, defendant filed a general denial as well as a cross-claim. Plaintiff replied to the cross-claim. This rule prevented defendant from pleading further and asserting the affirmative defense of estoppel. He was entitled to present evidence on that issue, because where there has been no opportunity to allege estoppel, it may be put into evidence as if alleged. Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Forfeiture: Forfeiture is an affirmative defense which must be pleaded. Sun Dial Land Co., Inc. v. Gold Creek Ranches, Inc., 198 M 247, 645 P2d 936, 39 St. Rep. 908 (1982).

Denial of Negligence — Pleading "Defective Equipment" Not Required: In a negligence action for wrongful death resulting from an airplane crash, the defendant denied the pilot's negligence. By so denying, the defendant was entitled to offer proof establishing another cause for the crash. Testimony regarding defective equipment was properly admitted, although not raised in the pleadings. Tompkins v. NW. Union Trust Co. of Helena, 198 M 170, 645 P2d 402, 39 St. Rep. 845 (1982).

Failure of Consideration: Where defendant in counterclaim action failed to affirmatively plead a failure of consideration or plead facts substantiating a failure of consideration, he is precluded from pursuing such a defense. Chandler v. Madsen, 197 M 234, 642 P2d 1028, 39 St. Rep. 508 (1982), followed in Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991).

Application of Comparative Negligence Law to Assumption of Risk: U.S. District Court found that Montana law is unclear as to absorption of the former affirmative defense of assumption of risk into the comparative negligence law but that latest Montana cases indicate assumption of risk has been abolished as an absolute defense and that it was therefore error to instruct jury on assumption of risk question. However, since defendants contended assumption of risk was absolute defense and requested the erroneous instruction, they invited the error; hence, motion for judgment notwithstanding, the verdict and motion to amend judgment must be denied. Ingram v. Dick-Char, Inc., 39 St. Rep. 96 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Concurrent Negligence: Plaintiff tenants alleged that a fire which destroyed the building was caused by the landlord's negligence, and there was evidence that the fire started in rooms leased by one of the tenants. An instruction that when the negligent conduct of two or more persons contributes concurrently as the proximate causes of an injury, the conduct of each person is a proximate cause of the injury, regardless of the extent to which each contributes to the injury, and that a cause is concurrent if it was operative at the moment of the injury and acted with another cause to produce the injury was fairly designed to meet an issue raised by the evidence, and it was not error to give the instruction. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Timeliness of Appeal of Decision of County Commission — When Properly Raised as Affirmative Defense: County Commissioners created a planning and zoning district and a complaint was filed in response seeking declaratory judgment, but filing was not made within the 30-day time limit of 76-2-110. Neither landowner intervenors nor the county officers raised that section as an affirmative defense. Some time later, at the "total hearing", the defendants filed a motion to dismiss the appeal based on the time limitations in 76-2-110. The District Court denied this motion and was upheld on appeal. The Supreme Court said the proper method of raising the question of a timely appeal is by an affirmative defense pleaded in an answer to a complaint. Mont. Wildlife Fed'n v. Sager, 190 M 247, 620 P2d 1189, 37 St. Rep. 1897 (1980).

Invalidity of Marriage as Affirmative Defense — Burden of Proof: Where, following a Mexican wedding ceremony between the parties, the respondent sought a decree of divorce and child support, the appellant's contention that the marriage was invalid should have been raised by affirmative defense. The appellant had the burden of proof to overcome the respondent's allegation that the marriage was lawful. Wilson v. Wilson, 186 M 290, 607 P2d 539 (1980).

General Release of Tortfeasor — Effect: From the date of this decision the law of Montana on the effect of a general release of a tortfeasor on the liability of a joint tortfeasor will follow the position of the Restatement (Second) of Tort. Section 885, "the release of one joint tortfeasor is not a release of any other joint tortfeasor unless the document is intended to release the other tortfeasors, or the payment is full compensation or the release expressly so provides". Unless a release specifically states otherwise, a finder of fact may consider the intent of the parties in making a release. Kussler v. Burlington N., Inc., 186 M 82, 606 P2d 520 (1980).

New Defense on Appeal: Defense not pleaded or proved in District Court by state agency in wage conflict cannot be raised on appeal. Massa v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 172 M 60, 560 P2d 895 (1977).

Waiver of Breach of Warranty Refuted by Evidence: Defense of waiver of breach of warranty was refuted by evidence that the plaintiff, although retaining defective computer for nearly 8 months, made numerous complaints resulting in almost daily service calls and shutdowns for repairs. Lovely v. Burroughs Corp., 165 M 209, 527 P2d 557 (1974).

Partial Payment — Burden of Proof: Partial payment by special deposit was an affirmative defense which debtor had burden of proving in suit on note; that burden of proof required that it be shown that payment was made on the particular obligation in controversy. Baker Nat'l Bank v. Lestar, 153 M 45, 453 P2d 774 (1969).

Unavoidable Accident — Rule Inapplicable: Unavoidable accident is not among defenses that must be pleaded affirmatively and is covered under general denial of negligence. Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967).

Allegation of Fraud Not Pleaded Properly Ignored: Allegation that plaintiff's title to motor vehicle in claim and delivery action based on fraud was properly ignored when that defense was not set forth as an affirmative defense or with particularity. Interstate Mfg. Co. v. Interstate Prod., 146 M 449, 408 P2d 478 (1965).

Rule as Statute of Limitations: Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P., is procedural and not a Statute of Limitations which, under Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P., must be affirmatively pleaded as a defense. A dismissal can be raised by motion under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P. The hiatus between the repeal of the former section dealing with failure to serve summons and enactment of Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E) did not vitiate the validity of the dismissal or restart computation of time. Whitcraft v. Semenza, 145 M 94, 399 P2d 757 (1965).

Payment to Be Pleaded: Payment is new matter constituting a defense and to be available as such must be pleaded. It cannot be proven under a general denial, either in bar or mitigation of recovery. Davis v. Sullivan Gold Min. Co., 103 M 452, 62 P2d 1292 (1936).

Military Immunity to Be Pleaded: Where a militia officer is sued for destroying private property without the owner's consent, and without compensating the owner therefor, he must, if he would make justification for his defense, plead the same specially. Herlihy v. Donohue, 52 M 601, 161 P 164 (1916).

Quiet Title Demand Properly Ignored: The demand made by the defendant in his answer, filed in an action for waste, that his title be quieted, which demand was not based upon a properly pleaded cause of action or counterclaim, should have been disregarded. Erbes v. Smith, 35 M 38, 88 P 568 (1907).

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

Contributory Negligence Defense Allowed in FELA Claim — Federal Law Applied: A railroad employee sued a railroad for injuries he received on the job while walking on a narrow, snowy, and slushy walkway instead of an alternative path, and the issue of contributory negligence was submitted to the jury. The Supreme Court determined that contributory negligence remains a valid defense in a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) action and that some evidence existed indicating the employee's injury was attributable in part to his own actions. An employee is entitled to recover damages under FELA as long as the employer's negligence played any role in producing the employee's injury, but damages are reduced to the extent the employee was contributorily negligent. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115, following Taylor v. Burlington N. R.R. Co., 787 F2d 1309 (9th Cir. 1986).

Defense of Comparative Negligence Inapplicable to Medical Malpractice Case When Patient's Pretreatment Behavior Furnishes Need for Care That Later Becomes Subject of Malpractice Claim: Plaintiff's daughter had asthma, was allergic to horses, and had a long history of breathing difficulties, but nevertheless went horseback riding. She stopped breathing and collapsed, ultimately suffering irreversible brain damage and death. The mother sued the physicians at the hospitals where the daughter was taken for treatment, alleging that the physicians were negligent in failing to intubate the daughter immediately and that the physicians' negligence caused the daughter's injury and death. The physicians argued that the daughter had already suffered a severe brain injury because of oxygen deprivation brought on by her asthma and that it was her own negligence, not that of the physicians, that caused her death. The District Court allowed the physicians to present arguments and jury instructions on comparative negligence. In assisting a jury to decide a case involving a patient's fault as a defense in a medical malpractice case, it is necessary to first clarify the sequence of events in relation to the interwoven doctrines of contributory or comparative negligence, proximate cause, and avoidable consequences (see Bryant v. Calontone, 669 A2d 286 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996). The temporal headings under which the patient's conduct is to be examined are: (1) the pretreatment period; (2) the treatment period during which the alleged malpractice occurred; and (3) the postmalpractice period. A patient's conduct before seeking medical treatment is merely a factor that a physician should consider in treating the patient. When the patient's negligent act merely precedes that of the physician and provides the occasion for medical treatment, contributory negligence is not a permissible defense and the physician's negligent act is considered an intervening act that does not bar a patient from recovering (see Durphy v. Kaiser, 698 A2d 459 (D.C. 1977). In the present case, the patient's actions were clearly pretreatment conduct and not to be considered as evidence of fault that could offset any negligent conduct by the physicians. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in giving instructions on comparative negligence because in a medical malpractice action, jury instructions on a patient's comparative negligence are appropriate only when the patient's negligent conduct occurs contemporaneous with or subsequent to treatment. Further, allowing evidence of the daughter's prior acts denied the mother a fair and impartial trial, and the District Court also abused its discretion in failing to grant the mother's motion for a mistrial, constituting reversible error. Harding v. Deiss, 2000 MT 169, 300 M 312, 3 P3d 1286, 57 St. Rep. 696 (2000), followed, with regard to treatment at an accident scene by law enforcement personnel responding to allegedly negligent conduct of DUI that occurred prior to the accident, in Cutler v. Jim Gilman Excavating, Inc., 2003 MT 314, 318 M 255, 80 P3d 1203 (2003).

Admissibility of Evidence to Rebut Affirmative Defense — "Plain Visibility" of Oncoming Train: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In basing its defense on Mickelson's comparative negligence in failing to see the train, MRL was allowed to allege and represent to the jury that the train was plainly visible, in part because of its yellow blinking light, thereby triggering Mickelson's alleged duty to stop for the train. Mickelson sought to refute that contention by offering testimony that the train's lighting configuration did not make the train visible to approaching motorists, but the evidence was held inadmissible on grounds that MRL met federal requirements regarding lighting and thus could not be held liable for its particular lighting configuration. However, Mickelson's evidence was not offered to impose liability upon MRL for failing to change its lighting configuration, but rather to demonstrate that, contrary to MRL's experts, the lighting configuration did not make the train so plainly visible that Mickelson was comparatively negligent for failing to see it. Under Pitasi v. Stratton Corp., 968 F2d 1558 (2nd Cir. 1992), evidence that is not admissible to prove culpability may nevertheless be introduced to rebut an affirmative defense. By denying Mickelson the right to rebut MRL's evidence in support of its contention that Mickelson was comparatively negligent, the trial court essentially directed a verdict in favor of MRL on the comparative negligence issue, which was an abuse of the court's discretion, constituting reversible error. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), distinguishing Marshall v. Burlington N., Inc., 720 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1983), and Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in 27-1-702 provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A nuisance per se is an inherently injurious act, occupation, or structure that is a nuisance at all times and under any circumstances, without regard to location or surroundings. A nuisance per accidens is one that becomes a nuisance by virtue of circumstances and surroundings. In turn, nuisances may be classified as either absolute or qualified. An absolute nuisance, similar to a nuisance per se, is a nuisance the substance of which is not negligence and that obviously exposes a person to probable injury. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when 27-30-101(2) indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. In the present case, the city of Thompson Falls was statutorily authorized to construct the city's storm and sewer drain system, which Barnes alleged to be a nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999). The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

Availability of Affirmative Defenses to Railroad — Absolute Liability: Plaintiff was employed by a subsidiary of Burlington Northern and was injured in an accident involving Burlington's railroad cars. The Supreme Court decided the federal Safety Appliance Act applied despite the fact that the railroad cars involved in the accident were on a siding where loading operations were handled by the subsidiary. Noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has declared that the question of whether a railroad can assert contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defense in a case involving a nonrailroad employee depends entirely on state law, the Supreme Court cited its 1966 holding that, where the theory of absolute liability applies, liability is established when it is proved that a statute has been violated and there is a proximate cause connection between the violation and the resulting injuries. Proximate cause in a case under the Safety Appliance Act is decided using the definition that prevails under state law. Comparing the 1966 case under the scaffolding law with this case, the Supreme Court denied the defendant the two defenses. The Supreme Court also noted that railroad employees are entitled to a more liberal standard imposing liability than nonrailroad employees. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Last Clear Chance — Application: The doctrine of last clear chance has application to a case not only where defendant actually saw plaintiff in a position of peril in time to avoid the injury by the exercise of reasonable care but also to a case where in the exercise of reasonable care he should or could have discovered plaintiff in his perilous position in time to avoid the injury. Sorrels v. Ryan, 129 M 29, 281 P2d 1028 (1955).

Contributory Negligence Not Admission: A plea of contributory negligence does not admit the truth of particular allegations stated in the complaint, where the answer also contains a general or specific denial of those allegations. Day v. Kelly, 50 M 306, 146 P 930 (1915). See also Nelson v. N. Pac. Ry., 50 M 516, 148 P 388 (1915); Lewis v. Steele, 52 M 300, 157 P 575 (1916).

LACHES

Detrimental Reliance on Failure to Enforce Covenants — Laches Applied: A property owner sued his neighbor for violating restrictive covenants after the neighbor built two fences on his property and extended a deck on his home to reach as far as the eaves of his home. A surveyor testified that the eaves of the home, as well as the newly extended deck, extended 2 feet beyond the 90-foot setback covenant. The District Court concluded that the fences did not violate the restrictive covenants but ordered that the deck addition be removed. Both parties appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the fences did not violate the covenants. With regard to the deck, the Supreme Court determined that the defendant neighbor had detrimentally relied on the belief that the eaves of his home did not violate the covenants and that he could therefore extend the deck to the same distance as the eaves. Because the plaintiffs had never challenged the eaves on the neighbor's home as a violation of the restrictive covenants, the doctrine of laches applied, and the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's order for the removal of the deck extension. Wagner v. Woodward, 2012 MT 19, 363 Mont. 403, 270 P.3d 21.

Damages for Violation of Restrictive Covenants Absent Waiver: Plaintiffs alleged that defendant development corporation violated subdivision restrictive covenants, trespassed, and converted some of plaintiffs' trees. A jury found that plaintiffs suffered $350,000 in damages for the violation and that defendant had converted trees valued at $6,500, but the jury did not find defendant liable for trespass. The jury also awarded plaintiffs $1 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $25,000. On appeal, defendant contended that plaintiffs were barred from enforcing the restrictive covenants by waiver and laches. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiffs did not knowingly, voluntarily, and intentionally relinquish their right to object to a large maintenance building being built next to their house, and the restrictive covenant against construction of the maintenance building was neither waived by plaintiffs nor barred by laches. However, the Supreme Court did reduce the amount plaintiffs received for conversion of their trees from $6,500 to $600, which is what the evidence would sustain. McKay v. Wilderness Dev., LLC, 2009 MT 410, 353 M 471, 221 P3d 1184 (2009).

Erroneous Judgment Overpayment Properly Offset Against Attorney Fees: Plaintiff was awarded $40,948.83 in a human rights case against Cascade County. The county subsequently sent plaintiff another check for $28,062.95. Plaintiff's attorney inquired whether the check was a partial payment of fees and costs, and the County Attorney replied that the check was in response to the order of the Human Rights Bureau, which did not relate to fees. The county eventually contended that the check was sent in error and sought repayment through a reduction in attorney fees. Plaintiff asserted that the county released its claim for a refund. The District Court disagreed and ordered that the overpayment be offset against the attorney fees owed by the county. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The county, through the County Attorney, made a mistake in stating what the check was for, and the letter did not constitute an unequivocal release of a claim to recover the overpayment mistakenly made by the county, nor did the county release the claim through abandonment. Therefore, the District Court did not err in ordering that the county recover its overpayment by offsetting that amount against the attorney fees owed by the county to plaintiff as the prevailing party in the human rights action. Edwards v. Cascade County, 2009 MT 229, 351 M 360, 212 P3d 289 (2009).

Lack of Diligence and Prejudice Required to Assert Laches: In 1949, plaintiffs' predecessor in interest granted an easement to defendant's predecessor in interest to allow the construction of radio towers on a portion of a 160-acre parcel, conditioned on location and maintenance of the property. Defendant subsequently notified plaintiffs that he intended to expand the radio facilities beyond the original construction site. Plaintiffs sued, asserting that the expansion would encompass property not included in the original grant and contending that defendant had neglected to maintain the property. Defendant asserted the defense of laches on grounds that plaintiffs unreasonably delayed in asserting their claims. The District Court rejected the laches defense, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. For laches to apply, a court must find lack of diligence by the party against whom the defense is asserted and prejudice to the party asserting the defense. In this case, defendant made no showing of prejudice as a result of the allegedly unreasonable delay, and the laches defense was correctly rejected. Anderson v. Stokes, 2007 MT 166, 338 M 118, 163 P3d 1273 (2007).

Challenge to Ballot Issue Timely — Laches Inapplicable: Proponents of a ballot issue contended that the opponents negligently delayed asserting their rights to challenge the issue and that the opponents' claim was therefore barred by laches. Laches applies when a claimant has unreasonably delayed or has been negligent in asserting the claim, to the prejudice of the party against whom relief is sought. The argument failed on two grounds. First, the proponents failed to raise laches in their answer to the complaint, and laches cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, so the defense was procedurally barred. Second, the opponents brought their claim within the narrow 30-day window after the ballot issues were certified (as provided in this section at the time), so it could not be reasonably argued that the opponents waited until the claim was stale before asserting it. Thus, the claim was not barred by laches. Montanans for Justice: Vote No on CI-98 v. St., 2006 MT 277, 334 M 237, 146 P3d 759 (2006).

Time Limit for Appeal of Termination of Parental Rights Running From Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Laches Inapplicable: The District Court determined that a mother abandoned her children and terminated the mother's parental rights; however, the mother was never served with notice of entry of judgment regarding the termination. The mother moved to vacate or void the order and requested a hearing on the termination, but the motion was denied. The state contended that further consideration of the issue was barred by 42-2-620 or by laches. The Supreme Court disagreed that the mother's appeal was barred by 42-2-620 because the statute does not alter the filing period for timely appeals but merely sets a 6-month time limit on all other challenges to orders terminating parental rights. Rather, Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The rule requires service of notice of entry of judgment, and former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that the 60-day time limit for appeals did not apply until service of notice of entry of judgment, but the mother was never served. The equitable doctrine of laches also did not apply because the state failed to discharge its simple affirmative duty to notify the mother of entry of judgment. Thus, the mother's appeal was timely. In re T.H. & C.D.F., 2005 MT 237, 328 M 428, 121 P3d 541 (2005), clarifying In re P.D.L., 2004 MT 346, 324 M 327, 102 P3d 1225 (2004).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Time and Prejudice Elements of Laches — Liability for Payment of Child's Medical Expenses Under Dissolution Decree: After a lapse of 6 years, the mother filed to require the father to pay for medical treatment and consultant fees as contemplated in the parties' dissolution decree. The father contended that payment was precluded by laches because of the substantial delay in filing the motion. The Supreme Court noted that laches is not simply a matter of elapsed time; it is also a question of the inequity of permitting a claim to be enforced. For laches to apply, there must be both a showing of lack of diligence by the party against whom laches is asserted and prejudice to the party asserting the defense, requiring case-by-case analysis. Here, the father knew that the child received medical treatment, how much it cost, that the services were not covered by insurance, and that he was obligated to pay a portion of the bill. Thus, the father was not prejudiced by the 6-year delay, so laches did not apply. However, the father was not aware that the consultant bill existed and never had a chance to submit the bill to insurance or pay the bill, so he was prejudiced by the 6-year delay in advising him of that additional bill, and the claim for the consultant bill was therefore barred by laches. In re Marriage of Deist, 2003 MT 263, 317 M 427, 77 P3d 525 (2003).

Challenge to Term Limits Barred by Doctrine of Laches: Constitutional Initiative No. 64, which in 1992 enacted term limits for various elective offices, was challenged in 2002 on several grounds by two state senators whose terms were affected by the limits. The Supreme Court did not address the merits of the claims because it held that they were barred by the doctrine of laches. Laches is a concept of equity that can apply when a person is negligent in asserting a right, and exists when there has been an unexplainable delay of such duration or character as to render the enforcement of an asserted right inequitable. Laches is appropriate when a party is actually or presumptively aware of the party's rights, but fails to act. In order to apply laches, a showing must be made that the passage of time has prejudiced the party asserting laches or has rendered the enforcement of a right inequitable. To allow plaintiffs' challenge 9 years after the enactment of the initiative would prejudice those who relied on its presumptive validity, and raise a question of the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced. The court noted that voters still retain the right to repeal the term limits provision, by initiative or through legislative referendum, but that the point had been reached at which a claim asserting that voters failed to follow the proper procedures in enacting the constitutional initiative was simply too late. Cole v. State ex rel. Brown, 2002 MT 32, 308 M 265, 42 P3d 760 (2002), followed in Phillips v. Whitefish, 2014 MT 186, 375 Mont. 456, 330 P.3d 442, in which the Supreme Court concluded that filing a lawsuit challenging a referendum 4 days after the referendum passed did not warrant dismissal based on laches when no demonstration of prejudice or inequity was made, aside from the ordinary cost of the election process.

Laches Applicable to Claim for "Equitable Easement": Murrays purchased property from Countryman Creek Ranch, a partnership formed to sell recreational homesites in a subdivision along the Yellowstone River. The original declaration contained covenants applicable to some property designated as a "common area", which was to be used by all property owners. Later, a ranchette was purchased by the partnership along the river, and a dispute arose as to whether homesite owners had any intangible, undefined rights in this property similar to the "common area" property. An amendment was made to the subdivision declaration to clarify the rights of the property owners with regard to this property. In 1980, Murrays filed a complaint with the Montana Realty Board (now the Board of Realty Regulation) because of their belief that they had an intangible, undefined right in the ranchette property, but the complaint was resolved against Murrays. In 1989, Murrays filed an action in District Court, which the court determined was barred by laches. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because Murrays had a dispute since at least 1980 as to any undefined rights in the ranchette property but did not take action for 9 years, the claim was barred by laches. Murray v. Countryman Creek Ranch, 254 M 432, 838 P2d 431, 49 St. Rep. 854 (1992). See also Wagner v. Woodward, 2012 MT 19, 363 Mont. 403, 270 P.3d 21.

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 833 P2d 215, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Defense of Laches to Quiet Title Action Unavailable Without Valid Claim to Royalty: Defendants in an action to quiet title to a royalty interest raised the defense of laches. The Supreme Court held that laches is a question of the inequity that would result if a claim were to be permitted to be enforced. Because the defendants had always held their title subject to the plaintiffs' royalty interest, no inequity would result if the plaintiffs' claim was enforced. Because the defendants lacked a valid claim to the royalty, the court also held that the defendants lacked standing to assert the defense of laches. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

No Demonstration of Inequitable Delay — Laches Inapplicable: As part of their contract for purchase of property, the Undems agreed not to sell or convey the property without Larson's written consent. The Undems sold the property in October 1984 without Larson's consent. The last payment on the contract was tendered in December 1986, and Larson filed suit for breach of contract in October 1987. Finding no demonstration of an inequitable delay on Larson's part, the District Court properly held that Larson's claim was not barred by laches. Larson v. Undem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Prejudice and Lack of Diligence as Elements of Laches: For laches to be applied, the court must find lack of diligence by the party against whom the defense is asserted and prejudice to the party asserting the defense. Gue v. Olds, 245 M 117, 799 P2d 543, 47 St. Rep. 1906 (1990). See also Coalition for Canyon Preservation v. Bowers, 632 F2d 774 (9th Cir. 1980).

Claim for Past Salary Barred by Laches: The plaintiff initiated a claim for sums due for conversion compensation brought about by a change of contract entered into by the plaintiff and university 17 years prior to the suit. The Supreme Court ruled that the claim was barred by the equitable doctrine of laches due to the unexplained delay in bringing the suit that was of such duration or character as to render the enforcement of the asserted right inequitable. Sperry v. Mont. St. Univ., 239 M 25, 778 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1482 (1989).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Jury Instructions — Equity Issues in Discretion of District Court: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The District Court refused the instructions, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of equitable issues rests solely within the discretion of the District Court. Equity aids the vigilant. The plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Failure to Ascertain Property Status for Nearly Forty Years — Laches Applicable: The trial court properly applied laches in a quiet title case where appellants "slept on their rights by not ascertaining the status of their property for nearly 40 years", then claimed the warranty deed had been materially altered to deprive them of their mineral rights. Absence from the state was not an excuse for sleeping on their rights. Benson v. Diehl, 228 M 199, 745 P2d 315, 44 St. Rep. 1455 (1987).

Delays Resulting From Bureaucratic and Legal Snafus — Laches Inapplicable: In a marital status discrimination case involving an antinepotism policy, where 9 years elapsed from the time the claim arose, laches did not apply since the delays were not the fault of plaintiff or any one body but rather were the cumulative result of one bureaucratic or legal snafu after another. Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 1351 (1987).

Rescission Barred by Laches: The Supreme Court held that plaintiffs' inability to completely restore defendants to their original condition would not alone foreclose rescission as a remedy. Plaintiffs had notice of circumstances that should have put them on inquiry of possible fraud at the time of sale in 1977 and in 1978 when the net income did not reflect earlier representations. Nevertheless, plaintiffs continued to make payments and operate the business without complaint until 1981. The court held that these facts constituted laches, or a failure to use reasonable diligence to rescind promptly on the part of the plaintiffs. Since the time period between notice of possible fraud and filing of a complaint exceeded the 2-year Statute of Limitations for fraud, the District Court erred in permitting the jury to consider rescission as a remedy for the plaintiffs. McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986).

Failure to Assert Royalty Interest in Tax Deed Land — Laches:

A tax deed issued to the county in 1930 without affidavits setting forth the statutorily requisite statements as to notice to the owner and as to occupancy was void. The county sold the land to A.O., reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiff children of the original owner who had lost the land for failure to pay taxes quitclaimed all their interest in the land to A.O.'s successors, reserving their claim to and interest in the 6¼% royalty claimed by the county, and in turn A.O.'s successors conveyed to plaintiffs all of the successors' interest in that royalty. Plaintiffs' conveyance cleared the title of any insufficiency in the tax deed proceedings but did not convey or give up plaintiffs' claim to the 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiffs' redemption argument failed because they had never attempted a redemption. After analyzing nine factors relating to laches, the court ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim to the county's royalty interest. Richardson v. Richland County, 219 M 48, 711 P2d 777, 42 St. Rep. 1834 (1985), followed in Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991). (The court also stated that King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981), in which the court concluded that laches was inapplicable because laches did not commence until oil was produced and royalties earned, was incomplete in its laches analysis because the court overlooked the inchoate ownership of the royalty interest.)

County's tax deed was void for insufficient notice of the tax sale and failure to give notice of application for a tax deed to the owners of the property. The county had deeded the land to Swigart, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Swigart, using a statutory proceeding, applied for and received a deed confirming the tax deed. The confirmation deed did not mention the county's 6¼% royalty interest. The confirmation deed was void for failure to give sufficient notice to the owners who had lost the land to the county or to their successors in interest. The two original owners had each had an undivided one-half interest in the land. Plaintiff heirs of one of the original owners sued to quiet title to the county's 6¼% royalty interest and then quitclaimed to Swigart's heirs all plaintiffs' interest in the land, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. In return, Swigart's heirs quitclaimed the 6¼% royalty interest to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' quitclaim to Swigart's heirs did not convey or give up any claim plaintiffs had to or any interest they had in the 6¼% royalty interest. The court analyzed 10 factors relating to laches and ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim and that the 6¼% royalty interest was vested in the county. Anderson v. Richland County, 219 M 60, 711 P2d 784, 42 St. Rep. 1843 (1985).

Laches Not Established: The Supreme Court held in Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019 (1982), that Kunnemann, the original owner of a 160-acre parcel of land, had reserved certain water and ditch rights when he conveyed the land to Franks, and that Franks, therefore, had not conveyed any of these water rights to the Castillos and the Cotants when they each purchased subdivided portions of the original parcel from Franks. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the Cotants and Castillos sued Franks for breach of contract, fraud, and in the case of the Cotants, for breach of warranty. Franks asserted that these actions were barred by laches. On appeal of this second case, the Supreme Court rejected Franks' argument for the following reasons: (1) plaintiffs had acted reasonably promptly in suing Kunnemann for the rights that Franks contended had been conveyed to them; (2) plaintiffs filed this action 3½ months after the Supreme Court rejected their claim against Kunnemann; and (3) plaintiffs' demands are not stale. They have not been lax in enforcing their rights, and they have not acquiesced in the loss of denial of their rights. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Laches — Elements — Questioning One's Right to Real Property: The length of time during which rights are not asserted is not the only factor to be considered in determining whether laches applies. There must be negligence in asserting a right and an unexplained delay that would render enforcement of the asserted right inequitable. Plaintiff here did not have to seek judicial determination of her right to a one-half mineral interest in land until that right was questioned. There was no harm to defendants as they were unaware of their possible claim to the one-half interest until lessee of plaintiff's interest raised a title question. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Laches Defense Unavailable — First Raised on Appeal: Laches could not be raised for the first time on appeal as a defense to action for rescission of contract for the sale of a ranch because it is an affirmative defense that must be set forth in the answer. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

Raise in Loan's Interest Rate Allowed by Contract — Challenge Barred by Laches: In June of 1979 credit union mailed to borrower under a written contract for an open-ended revolving credit plan a notice that pursuant to its contract right it was raising the interest rate. The credit union gave borrower the choice of accepting the raise or paying in full by July 15, 1979. Borrower made payments through October of 1981 and during that month sued, claiming that the credit union breached the contract. It would be inequitable to allow the suit when the credit union had for more than 2 years relied on borrower's acquiescence to the raise. The claim was barred by laches. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984).

Failure to Assert Claim in Accordance With Terms of Dismissal and Death of a Party — Laches Applicable: Where a former action brought in another state between the parties was dismissed upon stipulation that it could be brought in Montana courts by June 13, 1981, and the case was not filed in Montana until July 2, 1981, one of the parties having subsequently died, the District Court did not err in dismissing the case. It was barred by the doctrine of laches as set forth in Riley v. Blacker, 51 M 364, 152 P 758 (1915), and subsequent cases. Wellman v. Wellman, 205 M 504, 668 P2d 1060, 40 St. Rep. 1459 (1983).

Laches Raised on Appeal: Defendants cannot raise laches as a defense on appeal. Laches must be raised as an affirmative defense upon filing of an answer. Moschelle v. Hulse, 190 M 532, 622 P2d 155, 37 St. Rep. 1506 (1980).

Objection to Termination of Trust Barred by Laches: Where 4 years after appellant's appointment as trustee appellant objected to the termination of a trust on the grounds that the decree of distribution made 32 years earlier was based on fraud and offered no reasonable explanation for his failure to earlier file an objection, the appellant would be barred by laches from objecting to the petition for termination of the trust. Estate of Wallace v. McAlear, 186 M 18, 606 P2d 136 (1980).

Enforcement of Easement — Laches: The plaintiff had no duty to seek judicial enforcement of an easement by prescription until the easement's benefits were in jeopardy as a result of defendants' actions. Thus, plaintiff was not barred by the doctrine of laches. Mtn. View Cemetery v. Granger, 175 M 351, 574 P2d 254 (1978).

Laches: Unlike the Statute of Limitations, laches begins to run when the trust is created by operation of law. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 150, 561 P2d 917 (1977).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Pleaded: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Laches Not Pleaded — Effect: Defendant who failed to plead laches as an affirmative defense in his answer waived such defense and could not raise the issue in a posttrial motion to dismiss. Hansen v. Kiernan, 159 M 448, 499 P2d 787 (1972).

STATUTE OF FRAUDS

Landowner Subdivision Rights Precluded by Restrictive Covenants — No Oral Contract Without Consideration — Statute of Frauds Applied: Plaintiffs subdivided about 80 acres into a 40-acre water ski lake and five residential lots. Restrictive covenants provided that no more than six landowners would be allowed to use the lake, that five landowners would be owners of lots in the subdivision, and that one landowner would be the owner of a single family dwelling built on property immediately west of the lake. Plaintiffs initially intended to build on the west side of the lake and become the sixth landowner but changed their minds, sold the west side property, and decided to build on the south side instead. Four of the five landowners filed an affidavit that when they purchased their lots, they understood that plaintiffs would be the sixth landowner and that they had orally approved the relocation of plaintiffs' residence to the south shore. After plaintiffs' home was built on the south side, they sought a declaratory judgment that they were the sixth landowner under the restrictive covenants and thus had the right to use the lake. One dissenting landowner opposed the declaratory judgment and moved for summary judgment on grounds that the restrictive covenants prohibited plaintiffs from use of the lake. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that there was no evidence of consideration given to the landowners for modification of the covenants and that as a result, the modification benefited plaintiffs only. The right to use the lake ran with the land and was therefore a real property interest, and under the statute of frauds, any transfer of the right from one parcel to another had to be in writing or altered by an executed oral agreement. However, without consideration, there could be no oral contract, and without an oral contract, there could be no executed oral contract. Plaintiffs' argument that because they relied on oral agreements, equitable estoppel should prohibit defendants from denying plaintiffs' use of the lake also failed because equitable estoppel does not apply under the statute of frauds except when the statute would operate to perpetuate a fraud. The District Court was affirmed. Hanson v. Water Ski Mania Estates, 2005 MT 47, 326 M 154, 108 P3d 481 (2005).

Defense of Statute of Frauds Raised Sua Sponte by District Court Reversed — Defense to Be Raised by "Party": State Farm Insurance Company, as a subrogee of Estabrook, sued Baden for negligent damage to Estabrook's vehicle and obtained a default judgment. State Farm then sought a default judgment against codefendant Clark, but the District Court, because of the amount of fees requested by State Farm's counsel, reviewed the facts of the case and, sua sponte, raised the issue of the statute of limitations with State Farm's counsel. The District Court then denied the motion for default judgment against Clark, set aside the default judgment against Baden, and dismissed the complaint with prejudice. Citing Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992 (1986), and cases from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court held that because subsection (c) of this rule provides for the raising of affirmative defenses by a "party", the defense of the statute of limitations should not have been raised sua sponte by the District Court. The Supreme Court reasoned that because it had held in Bennett that the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations had to be raised by answer and not by motion, the court must also conclude that a party's waiver of the defense could not be suspended, sua sponte, by the District Court when the affected party had not only failed to file a motion but had failed to appear at all. Estabrook v. Baden, 284 M 419, 943 P2d 1334, 54 St. Rep. 947 (1997).

Failure to Plead Statute of Frauds: A defendant's failure to mention the Statute of Frauds in the pleadings precludes its consideration. Peretti v. St. Bd. of Education, 464 F. Supp. 784 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Statute of Frauds Not Pleaded: Defendant failed to raise the Statute of Frauds defense in his pleadings; therefore he could not maintain it on appeal. Mont. Seeds, Inc. v. Holliday, 178 M 119, 582 P2d 1223 (1978).

Statute of Frauds — Partition: When Statute of Frauds was not raised as defense at court level in partition action, it will not be considered for the first time on appeal. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 150, 560 P2d 1331 (1977).

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Proper Conversion of Counterclaim of Mutual Mistake to Affirmative Defense — Mutual Mistake Counterclaim Subject to Statute of Limitations: Johnson's loan agreement listed the loan interest rate as 13%, but the promissory note and accompanying payment coupons mistakenly listed the interest rate as 0.13%. Following Johnson's final payment, defendant recalculated the amount due and determined that Johnson still owed $16,612.09. Johnson filed a complaint requesting release of the lien, and defendant filed a counterclaim alleging mutual mistake. The District Court held that justice required that the counterclaim be treated as an affirmative defense in order to avoid the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-203, because applying the statute of limitations would constitute an undeserved windfall to Johnson in light of the fact that Johnson knew or should have known that the 13% interest rate in the loan agreement applied. Defendant then filed a counterclaim to reform the note to reflect a 13% interest rate, and the court then granted affirmative relief to defendant based on the mutual mistake counterclaim. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the interests of justice required conversion of the counterclaim to an affirmative defense, but the counterclaim could not be converted to an affirmative defense seeking affirmative relief without bumping against the statute of limitations. Defendant's affirmative defense of mutual mistake went well beyond a defensive claim, and the subsequent mutual mistake counterclaim presented a cause of action seeking affirmative relief that was subject to the 2-year statute of limitations for initiation of an action for relief on grounds of fraud or mistake. Defendant's counterclaim was not timely, therefore defendant was not entitled to recover anything beyond Johnson's last payment or to an award of attorney fees and costs. Additionally, in light of defendant's inability to collect any additional payments under the loan, Johnson was granted reconveyance of the property she had conveyed by deed of trust. Johnson v. Dist. VII, Human Resources Dev. Council, 2009 MT 86, 349 M 529, 204 P3d 714 (2009), following State ex rel. Egeland v. City Council of Cut Bank, 245 M 484, 803 P2d 609 (1990).

Failure to Raise Statute of Limitations Defense in Original Pleadings — Defense Waived: A doctor filed wage claims against a health care facility in 1999 as a counterclaim against the facility's claim against the doctor for failing to sign outstanding warrants in 1997. The facility then claimed that the doctor was time-barred for failing to raise the wage claim within the statute of limitations in 39-3-207. The District Court concurred and held that the doctor's claim was not timely filed. On appeal, the doctor asserted that the facility could not first raise the statute of limitations defense in its posttrial memorandum because a statute of limitations defense is an affirmative defense that must be raised in the original pleadings. The Supreme Court agreed. The facility failed to raise the issue in its original pleadings and was thus barred from raising the defense on appeal. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

Pleading of Statute of Limitations Superseded by Pretrial Order: In response to a civil action brought against him by the State Fund, Berg pleaded the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations. Later, in response to interrogatories propounded by the State Fund, Berg indicated that it was his intent to drop the defense of the statute of limitations and did not object to the failure of a pretrial order to include the statute of limitations as an issue. After judgment against him, Berg raised the defense of the statute of limitations on appeal. Citing Zimmerman v. Robertson, 259 M 105, 854 P2d 338 (1993), the Supreme Court held that Berg had waived the defense of the statute of limitations and that the pretrial order superseded the pleading and governed the subsequent course of the civil action. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

No Affirmative Act of Concealment by Defendant That Would Toll Statute of Limitations: HKM had been hired to design a pipeline project and was subsequently sued for negligence by the general contractor for damages because of delays caused by pipe installed pursuant to HKM's specifications. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the general contractor. HKM then filed suit against the pipe manufacturer for indemnification for the amount for which HKM had been found liable. HKM alleged that the manufacturer had fraudulently misrepresented the characteristics of the pipe that HKM had purchased. The Supreme Court held that as early as April 18, 1986, HKM had been aware that the manufacturer had taken an inconsistent position as to the characteristics of the pipe and therefore there had been no affirmative act of concealment on the manufacturer's part that would toll the running of the statute of limitations. Therefore, HKM's cause of action was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations. HKM Associates v. NW. Pipe Fittings, Inc., 272 M 187, 900 P2d 302, 52 St. Rep. 692 (1995).

Relation Back — Joinder of Additional Parties Not Barred by Statute of Limitations: Berlin sued Boedecker, and 7 ½ years after the transaction that was the basis of the suit joined Boedecker Resources, Inc., of which Boedecker was the owner. Boedecker argued that the joinder of the corporation was precluded by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that under Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P., parties may be dropped or added at any time and that when so added, the addition relates back to the date of filing of the original action. In this case, the requirements of Rule 15(c) were fulfilled because the party to be joined was involved in the transaction at issue, the original action was filed within the period of time for bringing suit against the party to be joined, the party sued in the original action was acting as an agent for the party to be joined, and Boedecker had extensively intermingled his funds with those of the corporation. The joined party was therefore not prejudiced by a lack of notice. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994).

Amendment of Answer at End of Trial — Discretion of Court to Allow Amended Pleadings to Conform to Evidence: At the end of trial, the District Court allowed defendants to amend their answer to raise a statute of limitations defense to plaintiff's fraud claim. Plaintiff contended that defendants' waived their statute of limitations defense by failing to set it forth in the pleadings. However, nothing in this rule precludes the trial court from allowing a party to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence under Rule 15(b), M.R.Civ.P. Keller v. Dooling, 248 M 535, 813 P2d 437, 48 St. Rep. 554 (1991).

Statute of Limitations Defense — Raised Only by Answer: A codefendant, Rancher's Agra Services, Inc. (Rancher's), requested the Supreme Court to order the District Court to enter summary judgment by reason of the running of the Statute of Limitations in Rancher's favor. Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), provides that a defense of the running of the Statute of Limitations is an affirmative defense and can only be raised by answer. Rancher's never filed an answer or provided the Supreme Court with any reason for failing to do so. The request was denied. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986), followed in Estabrook v. Baden, 284 M 419, 943 P2d 1334, 54 St. Rep. 947 (1997).

Raising Statute of Limitations and Estoppel in Motion — When Allowed: The affirmative defenses of the Statute of Limitations and estoppel by judgment may be raised in a motion to dismiss rather than in the answer when the complaint on its face shows that the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations and the judgment relied on for the estoppel by judgment defense was made in the same court that is asked to pass on the motion. Beckman v. Chamberlain, 673 P2d 480, 40 St. Rep. 2044 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Raising for First Time on Appeal Disallowed: Statute of Limitations defense was an affirmative defense and could not be raised in Supreme Court when it was not raised in District Court. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983), followed in Turk v. Turk, 2008 MT 45, 341 M 386, 177 P3d 1013 (2008). For application to cases of personal injury, see Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986).

Conflicting Evidence on Time of Accrual: The question of whether an action is barred by the Statute of Limitations is for the jury to decide when there is conflicting evidence as to when the cause of action accrued. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Pleaded: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Pleadings Versus Motion to Dismiss: Defendant was not entitled to raise Statute of Limitations by motion to dismiss since Statute of Limitations defense is to be pleaded affirmatively. Butte Country Club v. Metropolitan Sanitary & Storm Sewer District, 164 M 74, 519 P2d 408 (1974).

Waiver of Statute of Limitations — Injury to Real Property: Where plaintiff filed complaint alleging injury to real property more than 2 years after injury occurred, defendants waived defense of Statute of Limitations when they failed to plead it affirmatively. Butte Country Club v. Metropolitan Sanitary & Storm Sewer District, 164 M 74, 519 P2d 408 (1974).

Reply to Answer Pleading Statute: No reply need be filed to an answer pleading the Statute of Limitations where plaintiff, in an action on a note, set forth in the complaint that interest had been paid on the note within the statutory period, thus tolling the statute. Matteson v. Ackerson, 104 M 239, 66 P2d 797 (1937).

Claim Against Estate — No Requirement to Plead Statute: While it is the general rule that the bar of the Statute of Limitations can be raised only by answer, where it appears to the court in an action against an executor or administrator to recover on a rejected claim that the claim, or a part of it, is barred, it must so hold though the defendant fails to interpose such defense. Pincus v. Davis, 95 M 375, 26 P2d 986 (1933).

Statute to Be Pleaded by Answer Only: The objection that an action was not commenced within the time limited by law can be taken only by answer, and defendant has the burden of proving it as alleged. Reed v. Richardson, 94 M 34, 20 P2d 1054 (1933); Stagg v. Stagg, 90 M 180, 300 P 539 (1931); Bielenberg v. Higgins, 85 M 56, 277 P 631 (1929).

Compliance With Statute to Be Pleaded by Plaintiff: The rule that the objection that an action was not commenced in time can be taken only by answer does not apply to an action to enforce a statutory liability by the exercise of a right granted by statute and which did not exist at common law. In such a case the limitation of time prescribed is of the essence of the right itself and plaintiff must in his complaint show that the action was commenced within the proper time, else the pleading is subject to a general demurrer. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929).

Basis for Waiver — Choice of Defendant: The Legislature has left it entirely optional with the party against whom a cause of action is alleged to avail himself of the Statute of Limitations or to forbear it. If he omits to invoke it at the proper time and in the proper way, it does not avail him under any circumstances, even though the cause of action alleged against him is completely barred. It is of no concern to the court or to the public that this is so, whether the omission is the result of oversight or of a prior agreement of the adversary party. Adams v. Stenehjam, 50 M 232, 146 P 469 (1914), distinguished in Thielbar Realties, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932); Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914).

Statute to Be Pleaded — Waiver: The bar of the Statute of Limitations can be raised only by answer and is waived by the failure to interpose it as a defense. State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909); Grogan v. Valley Trading Co., 30 M 229, 76 P 211 (1904).

RES JUDICATA

Date of Rendition of Judgment Controlling, Not Date of Filing Complaint — Res Judicata — Effect of Voluntary Dismissal: The plaintiffs filed two complaints within a week of each other that both challenged the county's denial of their request for a zoning change. The complaints named the same parties and addressed the same issues. Ultimately, the plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed the later-filed action with prejudice and the defendants amended their answer to the other complaint to include res judicata as an affirmative defense. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants, concluding that the plaintiffs' claims were barred under res judicata. The court held that the voluntary dismissal of the later-filed case constituted a final judgment that barred the claims set forth in the earlier-filed complaint. Touris v. Flathead County, 2011 MT 165, 361 Mont. 172, 258 P.3d 1.

Breach of Intervention Agreement — Issue Preclusion Applicable: McDaniel was sentenced to 20 years for burglary, with the sentence suspended subject to several conditions. About 4 months after sentencing, McDaniel tested positive for drugs, and the probation officer elected to initiate an intervention hearing, where an agreement was entered into in lieu of a formal violation being filed. Upon learning of the intervention hearing, the County Attorney filed a petition to revoke McDaniel's suspended sentence based on McDaniel's drug use. McDaniel moved for partial summary judgment on grounds that the intervention hearing agreement constituted a final adjudication of the probation violation and a binding contract and that the state was barred from relitigating the issue. The District Court denied the motion, McDaniel appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. McDaniel and the state, acting through the Department of Corrections, entered a valid binding contract that precluded filing of a formal violation, and the state breached the contract by filing the revocation petition. Additionally, the elements of issue preclusion were satisfied with respect to the state's liability on the breach of contract claim, including the state's opportunity to argue liability, so absent any genuine issue of material fact, McDaniel was entitled to partial summary judgment on the breach of contract claim. McDaniel v. St., 2009 MT 159, 350 M 422, 208 P3d 817 (2009), following Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Due Process Applicable to Revocation Proceedings, Not Deprivation of Property —Failure to Raise Due Process Claims in Motion to Dismiss — Summary Judgment Properly Denied: McDaniel was sentenced to 20 years for burglary, with the sentence suspended subject to several conditions. About 4 months after sentencing, McDaniel tested positive for drugs, and the probation officer elected to initiate an intervention hearing, where an agreement was entered into in lieu of a formal violation being filed. Upon learning of the intervention hearing, the County Attorney filed a petition to revoke McDaniel's suspended sentence based on McDaniel's drug use. McDaniel moved for partial summary judgment on grounds that litigation of the revocation petition should be barred on due process grounds because the issue had already been litigated and thus should be barred by issue preclusion. The District Court denied the motion and McDaniel appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The issue preclusion argument failed because the due process question as a deprivation of property was not raised in the analysis of the state's liability for a procedural due process violation, nor was the state afforded an opportunity to argue the deprivation of property due process claim. Additionally, McDaniel never raised a due process argument in the motions to dismiss, so the state did not address the due process issue that McDaniel claimed was adjudicated in District Court. Thus, McDaniel's motion for summary judgment on the due process claim was properly denied. McDaniel v. St., 2009 MT 159, 350 M 422, 208 P3d 817 (2009).

Res Judicata Applicable to Action Regarding County's Failure to Transfer Conditional Use Permit: Plaintiff filed an 18-count complaint for damages contending that Flathead County did not follow zoning regulations and violated plaintiff's due process and property rights when the County Board of Adjustment failed to transfer a conditional use permit to plaintiff to allow a gravel pit on property plaintiff purchased. However, plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board to transfer the conditional use permit was properly dismissed (see Beasley v. Flathead County Bd. of Adjustment, 2009 MT 120, 350 M 171, 205 P3d 812 (2009)), so the County argued that the damage complaint was res judicata. Plaintiff had appealed the Board's decision pursuant to 76-2-227 but moved to dismiss the appeal with prejudice after a local citizens' group intervened to defend the Board's decision. The District Court held that the damage complaint involved the same issues as the appeal of the decision to deny transfer of the conditional use permit, so the damage complaint was dismissed as res judicata. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to establish a protected property interest in obtaining the transfer of the permit, so the constitutional claims were properly dismissed. Likewise, plaintiff's purported tort claims involved the same subject matter and issues as the prior appeal, so res judicata applied. Plaintiff's opportunity to challenge the legality of the Board's decision to deny transfer of the permit ended when plaintiff elected to dismiss the appeal under 76-2-227 with prejudice. Section 76-2-227 remained an available remedy if plaintiff chose to apply for a conditional use permit in his own right and the application was denied, but that remedy was no longer available for the current challenges. Beasley v. Flathead County, 2009 MT 121, 350 M 177, 206 P3d 915 (2009).

Admissibility of Evidence From Prior Suit — Distinct Causes of Action and Different Instances of Alleged Wrongdoing: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for breach of contract for failing to cover medical expenses, even though coverage had been provided for similar medical costs in the past and the insurance policy remained the same. The District Court held that evidence from prior settled disputes could not be used in the present suit and granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Although the medical issue was similar to the prior settled coverage, the instant action alleged wrongdoing by the insurer after the prior coverage dispute was settled and alleged a distinct cause of action arising from a different instance of alleged wrongdoing, so plaintiffs' use of evidence that was relevant in the previous dispute did not constitute relitigation of the prior dispute that would be barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel, and the District Court erred in so holding. The prior evidence was admissible to provide a context for the instant claims by revealing the history of plaintiffs' relationship with the insurer. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Final Judgment in Prior Claim Prerequisite for Application of Res Judicata: In a 2003 suit, William sued his brother Otto on the issue of partnership assets, and then in 2004, when that case was still pending, William filed claims against Otto for further misappropriating business assets and against Otto's wife Frances for conspiring to assist Otto. The District Court held that the 2004 case was barred by res judicata because Otto and Frances were in privity and the issues in both cases were identical. On appeal, the parties argued vigorously as to whether the elements of res judicata were met, and William even conceded that the 2004 suit was barred as to claims against Otto. The Supreme Court disagreed. Because final judgment was not entered in the 2003 case, despite William's acquiescence, res judicata did not bar any claims raised in the 2004 case. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel — Inapplicable Absent Final Judgment: In In re B.N.Y., 2003 MT 241, 317 M 291, 77 P3d 189 (2003), the Supreme Court held that a mother's due process rights were violated in parental rights termination proceedings. Almost immediately after the 2003 decision, the state began new proceedings. The mother asserted that res judicata and collateral estoppel barred the new action. The District Court disagreed, and the mother appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Both res judicata and collateral estoppel require a final judgment in an initial action before they preclude a similar future action. The initial order terminating the mother's parental rights did not constitute a final judgment as a result of In re B.N.Y. The 2003 decision had no preclusive effect in the current action, and the mother's res judicata and collateral estoppel arguments failed. In re B.N.Y., 2006 MT 34, 331 M 145, 130 P3d 594 (2006). See also Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005). See also Touris v. Flathead County, 2011 MT 165, 361 Mont. 172, 258 P.3d 1.

No Res Judicata Absent Final Judgment in Related Case: Brown was one of 64 prisoners who filed a complaint in 2002 alleging that the Department of Corrections improperly transferred prisoners to prisons where treatment, training, and rehabilitation opportunities were not available. While that case was pending, Brown filed suit in 2004 against the Department, alleging that his liberty interest in parole was violated because the Department transferred him to locations where he was unable to obtain the sex offender treatment required for parole eligibility. The District Court concluded that the 2004 case was barred by res judicata because Brown was a plaintiff in the 2002 case, which presented identical claims. Brown appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Under Audit Serv., Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491 (1984), the primary requirement necessary to sustain a plea of res judicata is that there be a judgment on the merits. Because the 2002 case was still pending, dismissal of the 2004 case on res judicata grounds was error. Brown v. Dept. of Corrections, 2005 MT 58, 326 M 231, 108 P3d 498 (2005).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

Order That Spouse Maintain Insurance and Pay Medical Bills as Part of Property Agreement — Spouse Liable Absent Insurance Termination Date: As part of the parties' property settlement in 1990, the husband Glenn agreed to maintain insurance for his ex-wife through his employer and to pay any medical bills not covered by insurance. There was no termination date applied to Glenn's obligation. Pursuant to federal law, Glenn's employer was allowed to maintain insurance on the former spouse for only 3 years, and after that time, the insurance lapsed. In 1994, Glenn then stipulated that he would provide insurance under a new policy, but again no termination date was specified. Glenn eventually retired and continued to pay premiums for several months, but the new policy also lapsed, at which point the ex-wife filed a contempt petition requiring that Glenn pay her medical bills and provide insurance pursuant to the stipulation. Glenn sought a ruling that he was no longer required to pay, arguing that pursuant to the dissolution decree, his liability to provide insurance and pay uncovered medical bills should have ended when coverage could no longer be provided through his employer. The District Court determined that the issue was barred by res judicata and held for the ex-wife. Glenn appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Glenn could, and perhaps should, have raised the issue relating to the duration of his obligation when he stipulated to providing insurance in 1994, but failed to do so. Instead, he entered a stipulation to continue to provide insurance coverage with no termination date, so Glenn was barred from raising the issue by the doctrine of res judicata. In re Marriage of Kolczak, 2004 MT 241, 322 M 520, 97 P3d 1091 (2004).

No Error in Denial of Motion to Amend Pleadings to Address Previously Decided Statutory Constitutionality: In Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2002 MT 269, 312 M 320, 59 P3d 398 (2002), the Supreme Court held that a process allowing a landowner to petition for exclusion from an irrigation district was constitutional. The dissent in Geil suggested an additional constitutional argument that was not previously considered, so the irrigation district attempted to amend the pleadings, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that although leave to file amendments to pleadings should be freely granted, a District Court also has discretion to deny amendments to pleadings when justice requires and that denial of a motion to amend will be upheld absent an abuse of that discretion. Noting the length of the proceeding and the fact that the irrigation district brought the new constitutional argument only after the dissent brought it to its attention, the Supreme Court determined that Geil had addressed the constitutionality issues, so further constitutional arguments were barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the irrigation district's effort to amend the pleadings, and the District Court was affirmed. RSG Holdings v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 214, 322 M 369, 96 P3d 1131 (2004). See also Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 217, 322 M 388, 96 P3d 1127 (2004), Petitioners I-549 v. Legal Malpractice Claim by Estate Not Barred by Res Judicata, Equitable Estoppel, or Judicial Estoppel: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. The trust beneficiaries brought a separate suit against the trustee. The District Court granted summary judgment for the attorney on grounds of res judicata, equitable estoppel, and judicial estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Res judicata and collateral estoppel did not apply because the subject matter and parties in the beneficiaries' suit were different. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the defendants did not present any evidence to establish that they relied on an act by the personal representative or changed their position for the worse because of that act. Judicial estoppel did not apply because the judicial admission in this case referred only to plaintiffs' legal theory and not to an unequivocal statement of fact and because of the absence of any evidence that defendants were misled by a judicial admission. Thus, summary judgment was inappropriate. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. No Appeal of Final Judgment of Property Boundary Dispute — Appeal Barred by Res Judicata: The District Court ordered the Clerk of Court to file a certificate of survey of plaintiffs' land in compliance with a previous judgment and required that the survey not exceed 1 acre. Plaintiffs appealed on grounds that the District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering the new survey. The Supreme Court noted that although the appeal was characterized as a jurisdictional question, the substance of the argument principally concerned the size of the new tract. However, the parties had a full and fair opportunity to litigate property boundaries, and the result was a final judgment that was never appealed or altered by the District Court through subsequent orders. Plaintiffs were attempting to undo the prior judgment, but the appeal was barred by res judicata. Johnson v. Hamilton, 2003 MT 199, 317 M 24, 75 P3d 778 (2003).

Easement Issue Resolved Against Predecessor in Interest Barred by Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel: Plaintiffs claimed an easement by necessity over Skyline Drive. Defendants asserted that the action was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel based on a prior District Court ruling that another property owner did not have an easement over Skyline Drive. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. As set out in Hall v. Heckerman, 2000 MT 300, 302 M 345, 15 P3d 869 (2000), res judicata applies if: (1) the parties or their privies are the same; (2) the subject matter of the present and past action is the same; (3) the issues are the same and relate to the same subject matter; and (4) the capacities of the persons are the same in reference to the subject matter and to the issues between them. A form of res judicata, collateral estoppel, applies if: (1) the identical issue raised was previously decided in a prior adjudication; (2) a final judgment of the merits was issued in the prior litigation; and (3) the party against whom the plea is now asserted was a party or in privity with a party in the prior adjudication (see Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778 (2000)). In this case, plaintiffs attempted to raise an easement issue that was previously adjudicated and conclusively resolved against their predecessor in interest, so plaintiffs' claim was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003).

Previously Raised but Unlitigated Alter Ego Claim Not Barred by Res Judicata: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court decided that res judicata did not bar Kimble's litigation of the alter ego claim. The action to pierce the H-D

Irrigating corporate veil was neither previously adjudicated in District Court nor were the facts upon which the claim was based known to Kimble at the time that the counterclaim was filed or at any other time during the course of the previous action. The case was thus remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), applying Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Res Judicata Not Bar to Petition to Withdraw From Irrigation District: The Legislature enacted legislation primarily directed at the Missoula Irrigation District (MID) allowing certain landowners to opt out of MID because they had no access to MID's water. MID argued that the petitioner's action to withdraw from MID was barred by the doctrine of res judicata because an earlier case found that all of the land within an irrigation district was susceptible to irrigation and was served by the district and therefore the petitioner could not now argue for withdrawal on the basis that the petitioner's property could not access MID's water. The Supreme Court held that res judicata did not apply because the earlier suit dealt with the establishment of an irrigation district and the current case dealt with the rights of an individual to withdraw from an irrigation district. Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2002 MT 269, 312 M 320, 59 P3d 398 (2002).

Claims in Excess of Amount for Consideration in Small Claims Court Not Barred by Res Judicata From Consideration in District Court: Thornton contracted to purchase a modular home from Alpine Home Center (Alpine), agreeing to pay $3,000 down toward the $72,120 purchase price, and receiving $6,900 credit for trade-in of an older mobile home. Thornton complained of problems with the modular home necessitating $500 in repairs, and stopped payment on the downpayment check. Upon taking possession of Thornton's trade-in, Alpine discovered damage to the trade-in in the amount of $3,450, and also discovered that Thornton owed $210.09 in back taxes on the trade-in. Alpine subsequently filed a complaint in Small Claims Court for $3,000. The Small Claims Court offset the cost of Thornton's repairs against the amount of damages suffered by Alpine and awarded Alpine $2,500. Thornton did not appeal the judgment, but instead filed a complaint in District Court alleging numerous theories for relief and seeking $65,000 for consequential damages, $100,000 for punitive damages, and general damages to be determined by the District Court. The District Court dismissed Thornton's claim on grounds that the action was barred by res judicata. Thornton appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements of res judicata as set out in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), concluding that the issues raised by Thornton in District Court were different from the claims raised in Small Claims Court, and pointed out that the issues could not have been raised in the lower court in any case because 25-35-502 limits Small Claims Court jurisdiction to claims not exceeding $3,000 [subsequently changed]. The District Court erred in holding that res judicata barred Thornton's action, so that holding was reversed and Thornton's case was remanded for further District Court proceedings. Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001).

Injured Employee Who Receives All Allowable Benefits From Uninsured Employers' Fund Not Permitted to Also Collect Compensation From Uninsured Employer — Double Dipping Disallowed: Daughenbaugh was injured while working at the Olsons' ranch. The Olsons did not carry workers' compensation insurance on Daughenbaugh, but the parties negotiated a settlement agreement that paid Daughenbaugh's salary and medical expenses and allowed him to continue to live at the ranch and continue his duties there for a specific period of time. In turn, Daughenbaugh signed a general release and indemnification agreement releasing all claims against the Olsons and agreeing to indemnify them against any claims arising from the injury. Daughenbaugh then filed a workers' compensation claim with the state, and because the Olsons were uninsured, the uninsured employers' fund (UEF) processed the claim and paid wage loss and other benefits to Daughenbaugh. The Olsons then sought a declaratory judgment holding that the general release and indemnification agreement was valid and enforceable. Daughenbaugh responded that the agreement was unenforceable and counterclaimed that, pursuant to the independent cause of action provided in 39-71-515, he was entitled to recover from the Olsons damages in the amount of compensation that he would have received if the Olsons had been properly enrolled in a workers' compensation plan. Daughenbaugh subsequently agreed to accept $5,000 from the Olsons for attorney fees and $38,820.88 from the UEF (inclusive of sums already paid by the UEF), acknowledging that that amount represented his full entitlement to workers' compensation benefits had the Olsons been properly enrolled in a plan, and agreed to fully release and discharge the Olsons and the UEF from all obligations and benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act. The Olsons agreed to reimburse the UEF for $38,820.88 and to pay a penalty for failure to enroll in a plan. However, Daughenbaugh reserved the counterclaim against the Olsons, alleging that he was entitled to direct compensation from the Olsons under 39-71-515.

The District Court summarily dismissed the counterclaim, finding that Daughenbaugh was not entitled to receive the benefits that he would have received from the Olsons in an independent action because he had admittedly already received all those benefits to which he was entitled from the UEF. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to the legislative history of 39-71-515, Neustrom v. St., 283 M 179, 939 P2d 990 (1997), and Thayer v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 1999 MT 304, 297 M 179, 991 P2d 447 (1999), 39-71-515 does not allow for a double recovery of workers' compensation benefits. Daughenbaugh was allowed to pursue a benefit claim from the UEF and an independent action against the Olsons at the same time, but pursuant to the doctrine of res judicata, Daughenbaugh was bound by the decision of the first venue to arrive at a decision, and was not allowed to double-dip workers' compensation benefits and receive full compensation twice for the same work-related injury. Olson v. Daughenbaugh, 2001 MT 284, 307 M 371, 38 P3d 154 (2001).

Parties in Dissolution Proceeding Not Same as Parties in Abuse and Neglect Proceeding — Res Judicata Inapplicable: During marriage dissolution proceedings, the mother was granted custody of the children, but during a subsequent abuse and neglect proceeding, permanent custody was granted to the father. The mother appealed the placement on grounds that it constituted a readjudication of the earlier custody order in her favor in the dissolution action, in violation of the doctrine of res judicata. The Supreme Court disagreed. Four criteria must be met for res judicata to apply, the first of which is that the parties or their privies are the same. The mother failed to meet this criteria because in the dissolution action, the parties were the mother and father, while in the abuse and neglect proceeding, the parties were the state, the children, and the mother. Despite the fact that the state was investigating claims of abuse within the family during the dissolution action, it was not a party to that action and did not petition for investigative authority and protective services for the children until the dissolution was final. Summary Denial of Petition for Postconviction Relief — Defendant Entitled to Hearing to Present Nonrecord-Based Ineffective Assistance of Counsel Claims: Schaff was convicted of deliberate homicide and filed a petition for postconviction relief, contending that he received ineffective assistance of counsel when forced to decide whether to accept a plea agreement after considering the matter for less than 2 hours. He claimed that with the assistance of different counsel at the hearing to withdraw the guilty plea, he could have established that the plea was not voluntary. Schaff further argued that he could not have raised the precise issue of ineffective assistance because discussions between his attorney and him were not record-based and thus could be presented only through a petition for postconviction relief. The state argued that the petition was defective because Schaff did not sufficiently specify the claim of ineffective assistance, offered no supporting information, and did not identify precisely why counsel was ineffective. The state also pointed out that Schaff had previously raised the issue of voluntariness in St. v. Schaff, 1998 MT 104, 288 M 421, 958 P2d 682 (1998), and that the issue had been decided and was barred from being raised again by the doctrine of res judicata. The Supreme Court disagreed that the voluntariness of Schaff's plea was not a proper subject for a postconviction proceeding. Although the issue of voluntariness was previously raised, Schaff did not raise the precise question of whether he had received competent advice prior to entering a plea or the question of whether he was misled to believe that he was required to proceed with the change of plea hearing with trial counsel when he was legally entitled to be represented by other counsel. The question of whether Schaff was properly advised necessarily touched on the voluntariness of the plea but was separate from it and was not part of the record in the direct appeal, nor was it the type of evidence that Schaff would be likely to present at a change of plea hearing. Rather than summarily dismiss Schaff's petition, the better course would have been for the District Court to appoint Schaff counsel and provide an opportunity for a hearing to present the ineffective assistance claims. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the part of the District Court's order with regard to any record-based voluntariness claims that had already been addressed by direct appeal, but reversed that part of the order that held that Schaff was procedurally barred from raising the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel in the nonrecord-based postconviction proceeding. St. v. Schaff, 2001 MT 130, 305 M 427, 28 P3d 1073 (2001). Following hearing on remand, the District Court again denied Schaff's petition for postconviction relief, and Schaff appealed on grounds of ineffective assistance of counsel, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Applying the Strickland test, the Supreme Court found that Schaff proved neither that counsel's assistance was deficient nor that counsel's performance was prejudicial to Schaff's case. An ineffective assistance claim must be grounded on facts in the record rather than on mere conclusory allegations. Schaff's claim was not supported by the record, so the petition for postconviction relief was properly denied. Schaff

Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Claim for Punitive Damages Not Precluded by Estoppel — Issues of Previous Litigation Not Identical: Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for Finstad and an award of $400,000 in compensatory damages, as well as a determination that punitive damages were warranted. The District Court conducted a minitrial on the issue of punitive damages, and the jury awarded $83,000. Defendant contested the award of punitive damages and moved for dismissal on grounds that Finstad's claim was barred by collateral estoppel by virtual representation because the issue had already been litigated in two previous Lincoln County cases against defendant. Defendant contended that the issues were identical, that final judgment had been rendered, and that Finstad was a party to or in privity with a party in the previous cases and thus was virtually represented by those parties in the previous cases. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, finding that the issues were not identical, and also ruled for Finstad on the question of estoppel by virtual representation. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the record, noting that although some of the evidence and witnesses regarding the punitive damages claim were the same as in the previous cases, several significant factual distinctions and legal claims existed. Because the first element of collateral estoppel regarding identical parties was not met, the Supreme Court affirmed without reaching the question of estoppel by virtual representation. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000), following Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318 (1994).

Fatally Tardy Request to Set Aside Default Judgment — Elements of Res Judicata Met: Pro se plaintiff filed to set aside a default judgment entered against him over 1 ½ years earlier. The District Court dismissed the motion on grounds of res judicata, noting that plaintiff did not proceed with diligence after being personally served, having ignored the service of the initial complaint, the personal service of defendants' notice of intent to enter default and default judgment, and service of the court's entry of judgment and writ of assistance. Plaintiff argued that as a pro se litigant, he should be accorded extra latitude. The Supreme Court noted that although pro se litigants may be given a certain amount of latitude, that latitude cannot be so wide as to prejudice the other party and that even pro se litigants are expected to adhere to procedural rules. Plaintiff's motion was fatally tardy. Citing Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665 (1996), the court found that the elements of res judicata existed because the parties were the same, the subject matter of the claim was the same, the issues were the same and related to the same subject matter, and the capacities of the persons were the same in reference to the subject matter and the issues. The District Court did not err in dismissing plaintiff's complaint pursuant to res judicata. Greenup v. Russell, 2000 MT 154, 300 M 136, 3 P3d 124, 57 St. Rep. 610 (2000).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the Rule 60(b) motion, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the Rule 60(b) motion was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their Rule 60(b) motion were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Broad Language in Complaint as Opportunity to Litigate Unfair Claims Practices Action — Res Judicata Barring Second Action — Summary Judgment Proper: The doctrine of res judicata not only precludes a party from relitigating claims that were litigated in a previous action, but under Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997), res judicata will also bar an action for a claim that a party had an opportunity to, but did not, litigate in a previous action. In the present case, Fisher sued State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) and one of its agents for wrongfully denying coverage, alleging in the complaint that defendants were liable "for damages incurred as a result of the subject fire and the denial of coverage on theories of breach of contract, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and any other applicable legal theories", and sought relief for money due under the insurance policy and "other further relief as the court may deem just and proper". One year later, Fisher filed a second action based on State Farm's denial of coverage, alleging failure to conduct a reasonable investigation of the claim and to attempt a good faith settlement. A few months later, State Farm presented a written offer of judgment on all claims in the original action, which Fisher accepted. Fisher then amended the second action to include allegations of a violation of the Unfair Claims Practices Act (UCPA) and sought punitive, special, and general damages. The District Court granted summary judgment for State Farm on grounds that the second action was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under the broad wording of the original complaint, Fisher clearly had the opportunity to litigate the UCPA claim. Had the claim been less broadly drafted, a judgment in the first action could not have barred the second action. However, the criteria of res judicata regarding identity of subject matter, issues, and relationship of the parties were met, and summary judgment on the second action was proper. Fisher's argument that the application of res judicata essentially negated statutory permissive joinder provisions and compelled mandatory joinder of otherwise independent causes of action was unpersuasive. Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452, 56 St. Rep. 1236 (1999).

Petition for Postconviction Relief Filed With Supreme Court — No District Court Jurisdiction to Amend Pleadings on Remand: Boucher filed with the Supreme Court for postconviction relief. The Supreme Court remanded to District Court for an evidentiary hearing on whether Boucher was denied effective assistance of counsel because of counsel's failure to investigate and formulate a defense based on the victim's history of making false accusations of sexual assault. On remand, Boucher sought to offer additional evidence of ineffective counsel unrelated to the issue remanded. Although a District Court has the discretion to grant or deny a motion to amend a postconviction petition when the petition is filed with that court, in cases like this when the petition is originally filed with the Supreme Court and remanded, the District Court does not have authority to grant leave to amend the pleadings to include allegations not included in the original petition. Petition for Postconviction Relief — Only Record-Based Claims Barred by Statute or Res Judicata: In 1993, Hagen was convicted of deliberate homicide and aggravated assault and appealed to the Montana Supreme Court, raising the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court. Hagen then filed a petition for postconviction relief, raising nine claims of ineffective assistance of counsel and argued that: (1) none of the claims could have been raised in his earlier direct appeal; (2) all claims were appropriate for his petition because an evidentiary hearing was required for all nine issues; (3) appellate counsel was ineffective in raising a particular issue in his previous direct appeal; and (4) if some or all of the claims relating to ineffective assistance of trial counsel should have been raised in his direct appeal but were not and were therefore barred, his appellate counsel provided ineffective assistance in failing to present those issues in his direct appeal. The state responded that six of Hagen's claims were procedurally barred by 46-21-105 because they could have been raised in his previous appeal, that one claim was barred by res judicata because it had been raised and decided in his previous appeal, and that three of Hagen's claims were not supported by the record or by the law and could therefore be decided on their merits without an evidentiary hearing. The District Court refused Hagen's request for an evidentiary hearing on his petition for postconviction relief and dismissed the petition, holding that the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel was raised in Hagen's direct appeal and had been decided by the Supreme Court, that Hagen's adequate remedy of appeal had been pursued, and that the petition for postconviction relief failed to state a claim for relief. Hagen appealed the dismissal of the petition to the Supreme Court. As an initial observation, the Supreme Court pointed out that although all of the issues raised by Hagen in his appeal of the District Court's denial of his petition for postconviction relief concerned ineffective assistance of counsel, not all of those claims were raised in the previous direct appeal and only those claims that were raised or that could have been raised in that previous direct appeal based upon the trial record were barred by 46-21-105(2) or the doctrine of res judicata. Citing In re Petition of Evans, 250 M 172, 819 P2d 156 (1991), and St. v. Bromgard, 273 M 20, 901 P2d 611 (1995), the Supreme Court further pointed out that those issues that are not record-based are properly brought to the Supreme Court by a petition for postconviction relief and that the District Court erred in failing to make that distinction and dismissing all of Hagen's ineffective assistance claims just because some of those claims may have been legitimately barred. The Supreme Court then individually reviewed each of Hagen's ineffective assistance claims and held that: (1) the manner in which mental evaluations of Hagen were disseminated during the trial was a matter of record and was therefore barred; (2) failure of Hagen's trial counsel to object to evidence introduced at trial was a matter of record and was therefore barred; (3) eliciting certain cross-examination testimony was based upon record evidence and was barred; (4) shifting the burden of proof during counsel's closing argument was a matter of record and barred by 46-21-105 and res judicata; (5) failure to investigate facts that could have provided a defense was properly raised in the postconviction relief petition because there could be no record evidence on this issue; (6) failure of trial counsel to present impeachment testimony was in part resolved during the appeal and was therefore res judicata and, with regard to one potential witness, was a matter of failure of trial counsel to investigate, could not be a matter of record, and therefore was not barred; (7) failure of trial counsel to properly prepare witnesses for trial was not and could not be reflected in the trial record and therefore was not barred; and (8) failure of appellate counsel to raise the ineffective assistance of trial counsel could not have been a matter of record evidence by its very nature and was therefore not barred from consideration in the postconviction relief petition. Hagen v. St., 1999 MT 8, 293 M 60, 973 P2d 233, 56 St. Rep. 33 (1999), followed in St. v. Wright, 2001 MT 282, 307 M 349, 42 P3d 753 (2001), and St. v. Upshaw, 2006 MT 341, 335 M 162, 153 P3d 579 (2006). See also St. v. Schaff, 2001 MT 130, 305 M 427, 28 P3d 1073 (2001), in which the question of voluntariness of a plea because of ineffective assistance of counsel was remanded for a hearing, despite the previous disposition of other voluntariness claims on direct appeal, because discussions between defendant and counsel were not record-based and thus could be presented only through postconviction proceedings.

Failure to Follow Procedural Requirements of Individuals With Disabilities Education Act Held Not to Deny Free Appropriate Public Education — Independent Cause of Action for Misdiagnosis and Misplacement Dismissed as Barred by Res Judicata: Brian Parini was diagnosed with a learning disability and was placed in special education pursuant to the requirements of the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), 20 U.S.C. 1400, et seq. Subsequently, Brian's mother filed a petition with the Office of Public Instruction (OPI), alleging that Brian's condition had not been subjected to a 3-year reevaluation as required by IDEA and that Brian was therefore denied his right under IDEA to a free appropriate public education (FAPE). OPI found that while IDEA may not have been complied with as to certain procedural requirements, Brian was not denied a FAPE. Brian then filed a complaint with the District Court in which he alleged that OPI had erred and also asserted an independent cause of action for damages, claiming that school employees had negligently misdiagnosed and misplaced him, denying him a FAPE. Relying extensively upon federal case law interpreting and applying IDEA, the Supreme Court held that the absence of a reevaluation did not deny Brian an educational opportunity because there was no causal linkage between the absence of the reevaluation and the educational opportunity afforded to Brian. The Supreme Court also concluded, in reliance upon its opinion in B.M. v. St., 200 M 58, 649 P2d 425 (1982), and Art. X, sec. 1, Mont. Const., that Brian was entitled to bring an independent tort action for negligent misdiagnosis and misplacement. However, the Supreme Court held that because a nearly identical claim had been brought before OPI and the District Court and decided against Brian, his independent tort action was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. Parini v. Missoula County High School District No. 1, 284 M 14, 944 P2d 199, 54 St. Rep. 711 (1997).

Federal Court Wrongful Discharge Case — Dismissal on Summary Judgment Held Res Judicata as to State Court Claims: Hollister brought an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 in federal District Court, seeking damages for being wrongfully discharged from her position with Rosebud County. The federal District Court held that Hollister did not have a sufficient property interest in her job to support an action based upon a denial of substantive due process of law and section 1983. The federal District Court therefore granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Hollister then filed a motion for relief from judgment in the federal District Court, pointing out that the Montana Supreme Court had since noted in Boreen v. Christiansen, 267 M 405, 884 P2d 761 (1994), that the federal District Court had misapprehended the law in her wrongful discharge suit. The state District Court dismissed, holding that it was barred, but the federal court would not reverse itself. Hollister then refiled her section 1983 claim in state District Court, but that court dismissed, holding that the federal District Court opinion was res judicata as to her section 1983 claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that an identical situation occurred in Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265 (1993). In that case, the Montana Supreme Court had also held a federal District Court opinion to be res judicata as to claims in state District Court, even though the state law had changed in the meantime. Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment for Violation of Agency Rule — Suit Not Barred by Failure to Appeal Petition for Judicial Review Related to Challenge of Rule: Wadsworth, a real estate appraiser, sued the Department of Revenue for wrongful discharge from employment after being dismissed by the Department for failing to comply with the Department's conflict of interest rule. The rule prohibited Department employees from engaging in independent fee appraisals and other activities during off-duty hours. Prior to dismissal and the suit for wrongful discharge, Wadsworth had filed an administrative grievance challenging the validity of the rule. The grievance was ultimately dismissed by the District Court, and Wadsworth did not appeal. On appeal of the wrongful discharge from employment suit, the Department argued that the District Court erred in not granting the Department's motion for summary judgment based on Wadsworth's failure to appeal the petition for judicial review of the rule. The Supreme Court held that the action for wrongful discharge did not meet the criteria for application of the doctrine of res judicata. The District Court correctly denied the motion for summary judgment. Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996), distinguished in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Failure to Assert Discharge of Debt by Bankruptcy in Earlier Action as Waiver and Res Judicata in Subsequent Action: Loney was sued by his law firm for fees owed for representing him in bankruptcy proceedings. Loney failed to answer the complaint, and a default judgment was entered. Loney subsequently filed a complaint to have the judgment declared void on the basis that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. The Supreme Court held that Loney had been required to assert the discharge of the debt in bankruptcy as an affirmative defense when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he had waived that defense and could not now assert it in his claim against the firm. The Supreme Court also held that Loney could have litigated the issue of the discharge of the debt when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from litigating that issue again in his suit to have the firm's judgment voided. Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995), followed in Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997).

Plaintiff's Contract Action After Defendant's Prior Contract Action Barred by Res Judicata — No Attorney Fees for Defendant: A trucker obtained default judgment in Justice's Court for the failure of Greenwood to pay the full amount that the trucker charged for hauling cattle. Greenwood had claimed that the amount charged was more than agreed upon and refused to pay the difference. He also deducted an amount for the trucker's alleged injury to two steers. Greenwood's later District Court action alleging that the contract was void for an overcharge and alleging the negligent injury of the two steers was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court also ruled that the case was not one of those rare ones in which a court could use its equitable powers to award attorney fees, which were requested by the trucker. Greenwood v. Steve Nelson Trucking, Inc., 270 M 216, 890 P2d 765, 52 St. Rep. 151 (1995), and overruled in Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001), to the extent that different claims in excess of $3,000 that could not have been raised and litigated in Small Claims Court are not barred by res judicata for subsequent consideration in District Court.

Res Judicata Inapplicable When Only Theories of Recovery and Testimony of Certain Witnesses the Same: Berlin sued Boedecker twice in actions involving fraudulent sales of royalties on oil well property. In the second suit, Boedecker argued that Berlin was precluded from litigation by the doctrine of res judicata. The prerequisites for the application of res judicata include the requirements that the subject matter and the issues of the second suit be the same as in the first suit. The Supreme Court cited In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729 (1985), and held that res judicata was inapplicable because the subject matter of the suits involved different transactions or contracts and because the issues, while presenting the same theories of recovery, were not related to the same subject matter. The Supreme Court also held that it made no difference that Berlin's testimony in the second suit was the same as in the first because Berlin's testimony in the second suit was used only to describe the background to the parties' relationship and transactions. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994), distinguished in Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997).

Clarification of "Parties or Their Privies" Element of Res Judicata: The concept of "privy" in the context of a judgment applies to one whose interest has been represented at trial. Privies are also defined as those so connected in estate, in blood, or in law as to be identified with the same interest and consequently affected with each other by litigation. However, mutual conduct between parties does not necessarily establish a shared legal interest. In this case, absent a showing of an agency relationship, the mere fact that two parties were involved in related elements of the same occurrence did not form a sufficient basis for summary judgment on the issue of privity or shared legal interest between the parties. Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318, 51 St. Rep. 340 (1994).

Federal Court Summary Judgment Final — Subsequent State Court Action Barred as Res Judicata: Mills filed a claim in U.S. District Court against Lincoln County for negligence. The county filed a motion for summary judgment, claiming immunity under 2-9-111, and the court granted the motion. Shortly thereafter, the Legislature amended 2-9-111 to clarify that legislative immunity extended only to legislative bodies and to legislative actions taken by those bodies. Rather than filing a motion for reconsideration in federal court, Mills filed a complaint in state District Court, effectively precluding any relief from the federal system and rendering the federal court judgment final. A federal court summary judgment is a final judgment on the merits, and Mills' subsequent state action was therefore barred as res judicata. Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265, 50 St. Rep. 1552 (1993), followed in State ex rel. Harlem Irrigation District v. District Court, 271 M 129, 894 P2d 943, 52 St. Rep. 364 (1995), and Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Res Judicata Found Inapplicable to Subject Matter Jurisdiction Under Facts of Case: After protracted litigation beginning in 1977 over the use of cows for collateral for a tribal loan, the Blackfeet Tribe filed a motion to dismiss in 1986 based upon its sovereign immunity, and the District Court granted the motion in 1992. The Supreme Court held that the doctrine of res judicata, as adopted in Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), did not apply to the case. Res judicata only applies to bar the later raising of an issue if the party had a full opportunity to raise the issue and failed to do so. In this case, the Blackfeet Tribe did raise the issue as a defense in its original answer in 1977 and the issue was reserved for later consideration by the District Court's order of September 19, 1977. At no time during the subsequent 10 years did the Blackfeet Tribe have a "full opportunity" to litigate the issue of sovereign immunity. Thus, the doctrine of res judicata did not apply to this case. Wippert v. The Blackfeet Tribe, 260 M 93, 859 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 973 (1993), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Settlement of Estate Based on First Will Bars Probate of Second Will: In 1976, Caleb and Viola Heath executed wills creating a trust and appointed Norwest as trustee. In 1978, they both executed second wills, appointed First Trust as trustee, and revoked the first wills, trusts, and appointments. Norwest and First Trust litigated the efficacy of the respective wills and appointments until several years after Caleb's death, at which time they entered into a settlement agreement to resolve all pending litigation between Norwest, First Trust, and Caleb's and Viola's heirs. The District Court dismissed all pending litigation with prejudice and distributed Caleb's assets pursuant to the 1976 will and trust. Six months later, Tisher and Schleve, relatives of Caleb and Viola, sought to probate Viola's 1978 will and filed an action against Norwest. The District Court concluded that the action was barred by res judicata and found for Norwest on a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the four prerequisites for application of res judicata were satisfied because Tisher and Schleve are privies of Caleb and Viola and because the subject matter and issues of the two legal actions were the same in that both dealt with the efficacy of the 1978 wills and trusts. Even though the issue of the efficacy of the 1978 will and trust was never actually litigated, the parties had the opportunity to litigate the issue and chose to resolve it by settlement of the case. Tisher v. Norwest Capital Management & Trust Co., Inc., 260 M 143, 859 P2d 984, 50 St. Rep. 960 (1993).

Tort and Contract Defenses in Bank's Foreclosure Action Following Borrowers' Tort Action Against Bank: In Mann I, the borrowers sued Traders State Bank for tort damages. In this case, Mann II, the bank sought foreclosure against the borrowers, who asserted both tort and contract defenses. The subject matter of the two cases is generally the same because both suits revolve around the borrower-lender banking relationship. The issues in the Mann I tort case are distinct from those inherent in the Mann II contract case. The fundamental question in the first case was whether the bank violated a standard of care, and the fundamental question in the second case is whether the mortgage, security interests, and underlying notes are valid and enforceable contracts. Therefore, res judicata does not bar the contract defenses. It was not necessary to raise the issue of the validity of the notes in Mann I; thus, res judicata did not bar the contract defenses in Mann II on the grounds that the notes' validity should have been raised in Mann I. The entire tort action occurred during the borrowers' bankruptcy proceeding, during which the debtor could not challenge the validity of the notes. By the time of Mann II, however, the bankruptcy action had been dismissed; thus, issues as to the validity of the notes had not been decided, and the borrowers could assert the contract defenses. However, the tort defenses were barred because they could have been raised in Mann I. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Summary Judgment in Justice's Court as Bar to Litigation in District Court on Same Issue — Justice's Court as Court of Competent Jurisdiction for Res Judicata Purposes — No Due Process Violation: A bill collection agency brought an action in Justice's Court against Whirry for payment of a medical debt. Whirry filed a third-party complaint against Swanson, alleging that the medical debt was incurred as the result of injuries received in an automobile accident in which Swanson was negligent. Whirry moved for summary judgment against Swanson on the grounds that Swanson was solely liable for any judgment. Summary judgment was granted, and the Justice's Court entered final judgment in Whirry's favor, ordering Swanson to pay the medical debt. Whirry then filed in District Court to recover all damages incurred through Swanson's misconduct during the same accident. The District Court concluded that the Justice's Court necessarily determined Swanson's negligence in order to assign liability for Whirry's medical bills and that the matter had therefore already been litigated and was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court agreed, holding that: (1) the four criteria for application of res judicata were met; (2) distinguishable from Boucher v. Dramstad, 522 F. Supp. 604 (D.C. Mont. 1981), the Justice's Court was a court of competent jurisdiction for determining Whirry's third-party claim; and (3) inapposite to Boyer v. Kargacin, 202 M 54, 656 P2d 197 (1982), foreclosure of the opportunity for a hearing on the merits of Whirry's case on res judicata grounds was not a violation of due process. Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227, 49 St. Rep. 764 (1992), followed in State ex rel. Harlem Irrigation District v. District Court, 271 M 129, 894 P2d 943, 52 St. Rep. 364 (1995), and overruled in Thornton v. Alpine Home Center, 2001 MT 310, 307 M 529, 38 P3d 855 (2001), to the extent that different claims in excess of $3,000 that could not have been raised and litigated in Small Claims Court are not barred by res judicata for subsequent consideration in District Court.

Res Judicata Inapplicable to Involuntary Commitment Hearing — Criterion of "Seriously Mentally Ill" Only Issue: L.B. was examined by a professional person and determined to suffer from a serious mental disorder that required treatment. Following presentation of the professional's testimony at a hearing for involuntary commitment, the District Court held that the testimony was too speculative and ordered L.B. released. After the hearing, L.B. was detained by the Sheriff's office for a short time in an attempt to find a place for him, rather than just sending him out onto the streets. During his detention, L.B. was examined by a second professional person who determined that L.B. should be involuntarily committed to the state hospital for immediate treatment, and a second petition for commitment was filed that same day. The District Court subsequently determined that L.B.'s mental illness deprived him of the ability to protect his life or health and transferred him to the state hospital for treatment. L.B. argued that the doctrine of res judicata barred consideration of the second petition. However, the District Court expressly prohibited the introduction of evidence relating to the time period prior to the first hearing; therefore, the issues were not the same in the second hearing, nor could the first order releasing L.B. be considered final and subject to res judicata. The question of whether an individual is seriously mentally ill may be brought at any time as long as the necessary statutory criteria are met. A finding at one time that an individual does not suffer from a serious mental illness is not intended to be a final and irrevocable decision on the individual's mental health. In re Mental Health of L.C.B., 253 M 1, 830 P2d 1299, 49 St. Rep. 290 (1992).

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Failure to Show Unfair Denial of Opportunity to Have Case Heard — Res Judicata: Richland County sought to enforce a 6¼% oil, gas, and mineral royalty interest reserved prior to a 1937 quiet title decree by asserting that there was extrinsic fraud upon the court because plaintiff's attorney in the quiet title action, who also happened to be the Richland County Attorney, failed to appear on behalf of the county, resulting in a default judgment against the county and denying the county the opportunity to litigate the reservation. However, the county failed to produce facts to substantiate its theory that the county's interest was subverted or that the county was unfairly denied an opportunity to have its case heard. Absent such a showing, relitigation of the reservation claim was barred by res judicata. Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991).

Issues Fully Litigated in Federal Court — State Court Action Barred by Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel: When the same facts and issues formed the basis of both a federal and a state court case and the case was fully litigated and final judgment was entered in federal court, dismissal by summary judgment in state court was appropriate based on the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Finch, 246 M 359, 805 P2d 1331, 47 St. Rep. 2154 (1990).

Action to Enforce Land Covenant Barred by Res Judicata: The plaintiff brought an action to enforce a covenant that allowed the defendants to reside in a trailer on the property for no longer than 1 year. The defendants argued that after they had moved onto the property, the plaintiff had made representations that constituted a waiver of the covenant. The defendants were unsuccessful in the initial suit and subsequently filed a second suit, alleging that the plaintiff had fraudulently induced them to purchase the property by representing to them, prior to the sale, that he would not enforce the covenant. The Supreme Court held that the issues were similar and that the defendants had the opportunity to litigate the fraud claim in the original suit and their action was thus barred by res judicata. Turtainen v. Poulsen, 243 M 355, 792 P2d 1089, 47 St. Rep. 1028 (1990).

Agency's Unemployment Compensation Decision — Not Res Judicata in Separate Wrongful Discharge Suit: The Board of Labor Appeals (now the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board) ruled that the plaintiff left his employment voluntarily and was not entitled to unemployment compensation. In a separate suit for wrongful discharge, the employer argued that the agency's decision was res judicata as to the issue of whether the plaintiff had been wrongfully discharged or had quit. The Supreme Court held that the agency's decision was not res judicata in the wrongful discharge suit in that the full panoply of issues that arises in a wrongful discharge suit is not within the realm of the agency's consideration in determining eligibility for unemployment benefits. Niles v. Weissman & Sons, Inc., 241 M 230, 786 P2d 662, 47 St. Rep. 240 (1990), following Fetherston v. ASARCO, Inc., 635 F. Supp. 1443 (D.C. Mont. 1986), and distinguishing Nasi v. Dept. of Highways, 231 M 395, 753 P2d 327 (1988).

Res Judicata Inapplicable — No Prior Final Order or Judgment: In a prior proceeding between the parties, the first court failed to rule on the wife's request for attorney fees. In a second hearing, the husband argued that the first court had implicitly denied the requested fees and that the issue was barred by res judicata. The second court ruled that the first court had never issued a final order with respect to attorney fees and therefore the request was not barred by res judicata. The second court's ruling was affirmed on appeal. In re Marriage of Lyman, 240 M 336, 783 P2d 1362, 46 St. Rep. 2174 (1989).

Res Judicata Inapplicable to Bankruptcy Court Proceedings and Federal District Court Appeal: A Bankruptcy Court dismissed with prejudice a debtor's Chapter 11 proceedings on the grounds that no plan had been filed, no assets remained in the estate, costs of administration exceeded assets, and there was no chance of reorganization. The dismissal included all adversary matters pending in relation to the Chapter 11 proceedings. The dismissal was affirmed on appeal by the U.S. District Court. Plaintiff, a third party creditor, filed a complaint in state court that set forth theories of liability based on misrepresentation, equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Plaintiff asserted that because the Bankruptcy Court decided only the issue of equitable subordination, the effect of the dismissal was to restore all parties to the status quo before the bankruptcy petition was filed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata was inapplicable to plaintiff's claim because the subject matter of the actions was not the same and the issues relating to them were not the same. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Claim of Federal Constitution Violation in First Action and State Constitution Violation in Second: For res judicata purposes, the issues were not different when the claim in the first action was that a statute violated the federal constitution and the claim in the second action was that the statute violated the state constitution. Once a party has had full opportunity to present a claim or issue, the judgment is final as to all claims or issues that have or could have been raised. Burgess v. St., 237 M 364, 772 P2d 1272, 46 St. Rep. 870 (1989), followed in Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 272 M 349, 900 P2d 929, 52 St. Rep. 823 (1995). Bozeman was distinguished in Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996).

Parties the Same When Plaintiff and Defendant in First Action Switch Places in Second: For res judicata purposes, the parties were the same when the plaintiff in the first action was the defendant in the second and the defendant in the first was the plaintiff in the second. In applying the res judicata rule, parties means all persons who have a direct interest in the subject matter of the action and a right to control the proceedings, defend, examine witnesses, and appeal. Burgess v. St., 237 M 364, 772 P2d 1272, 46 St. Rep. 870 (1989).

Question of Identical Issues as Bar to Second Action: In determining if the principle of res judicata was a bar to a second action when there was a question of whether the issues were the same, the court relied on its decision in Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963), citing Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 82 M 39, 265 P 10 (1928), where it found that "[u]nless it clearly appears that the precise question involved in the second case was raised and determined in the former, the judgment is no bar to the record action". Baertsch v. Lewis & Clark County, 223 M 206, 727 P2d 504, 43 St. Rep. 1660 (1986), followed in DeMers v. Roncor, Inc., 249 M 176, 814 P2d 999, 48 St. Rep. 629 (1991), in Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227, 49 St. Rep. 764 (1992), and Slater v. Cent. Plumbing & Heating Co., 1999 MT 257, 297 M 7, 993 P2d 654, 56 St. Rep. 1023 (1999).

Barring of Action by Res Judicata — Criteria: The Supreme Court, in State ex rel. Sullivan v. School District, 100 M 468, 50 P2d 252 (1935), originally stated the criteria to be used in determining whether an action is barred by res judicata as follows: (1) the parties or their privies must be the same; (2) the subject matter of the action must be the same; (3) the issues must be the same and must relate to the same subject matter; and (4) the capacities of the persons must be the same in reference to that subject matter and to the issues between them. Since the claim by appellant in the case at bar failed as it related to criteria (2) and (3), the court upheld the District Court finding that all matters relating to a lease agreement were res judicata with the exception of a security deposit which was not contemplated in the previous action. Geissler v. Nelson, 222 M 409, 722 P2d 632, 43 St. Rep. 1372 (1986). This criteria was applied in Searight v. Howell, 248 M 122, 809 P2d 588, 48 St. Rep. 370 (1991), Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 255 M 121, 841 P2d 494, 49 St. Rep. 917 (1992), in CB&F Dev. Corp. v. Culbertson St. Bank, 256 M 1, 844 P2d 5, 49 St. Rep. 1122 (1992), and Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Res Judicata Inapplicable — Issues Not Same: Plaintiff suffered a back injury in October 1980, underwent surgery, and was judged to have reached a stationary state. Plaintiff was given an impairment rating of 25% and in August 1981 entered a final settlement for 125 weeks of permanent and partial disability benefits. In June 1981, while employed by a different employer, plaintiff experienced a sexual incident which she characterized as a sexual assault. In September 1981, while employed by a third employer, plaintiff suffered an industrial accident. In March 1984, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that the sexual incident did not constitute a compensable injury and that plaintiff as of that date was entitled to temporary total disability benefits by reason of the September 1981 injury. The benefits were to continue until the disability ceased. In October 1984, plaintiff sought to have the settlement entered in August 1981 set aside, claiming mutual mistake of fact. The Workers' Compensation Court held that its March 1984 decision barred this issue as res judicata. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the issues were not identical so that res judicata was inapplicable. In the first case, the question was basically one of amount. In the second case, the question went to the validity of the settlement itself. The mistake plaintiff alleged was her total disability by reason of the second industrial accident. No ruling in the first case addressed whether the settlement had to be reopened in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Holton v. F.H. Stoltze Land & Lumber Co., 195 M 263, 637 P2d 10, 38 St. Rep. 1835 (1981). The court also noted that the question of mutual mistake of fact could not have been raised in the first case. The case was reversed and remanded with directions to hear the petition on its merits. Phelan v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. 220 M 296, 716 P2d 601, 43 St. Rep. 381 (1986).

Court Ruling on Use of Prior DUI Conviction — Later Civil License Revocation for Second Offense: A Justice's Court ruled that a prior DUI conviction could not be used in sentencing defendant for a second DUI offense because the prior record did not show that defendant was advised of and waived his rights before he pleaded guilty. A District Court then decided that the prior conviction could be used by the Division of Motor Vehicles in revoking defendant's license. The issues in the two causes were not the same, and therefore the prior ruling was not res judicata. Lancaster v. Dept. of Justice, 218 M 97, 706 P2d 126, 42 St. Rep. 1425 (1985).

Union-Employer Trust Fund for Employees and Union — Suing Employer in Separate Actions: A union sued an electrical contractor in federal court, claiming that the contractor failed to hire persons referred by the union and failed to require persons he hired to join the union and that persons referred who were not hired lost compensation and contributions to a benefit trust fund administered by the union and an electrical contractors' association. The assignee of the trust fund's claim against the contractor sued the contractor in a state District Court for contributions due the trust fund. The federal action was dismissed with prejudice by stipulation of the union and contractor. The state District Court then held that the state action was barred by res judicata. That ruling was erroneous, for the rights and claims sought to be enforced in the two actions were not the same and the claimants in the two actions were not in privity. Their functions and duties were different. Audit Services, Inc. v. Anderson, 211 M 323, 684 P2d 491, 41 St. Rep. 1388 (1984).

Minor Shareholder — Privy to Corporate Party: Plaintiff brought suit alleging libel, slander, contract losses, and abuse of process. The allegations had been raised earlier in Engine Rebuilders v. Seven Seas Import-Export, 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871, 37 St. Rep. 1406 (1980). At the time of that action, plaintiff, a shareholder of Seven Seas, was a minor and was dismissed from the action. Plaintiff's claim was dismissed on the basis of res judicata. The necessary criteria for applying res judicata were set out in Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929, 39 St. Rep. 862 (1982), as follows: (1) the parties or their privies must be the same; (2) the subject matter of the action must be the same; (3) the issues must be the same and relate to the same subject matter; and (4) the capacities of the persons must be the same in relation to the subject matter and issues between them. Plaintiff contended the parties were not the same, as he was dismissed from the original suit. The court held that, as a shareholder, he was a privy to the corporate party, Seven Seas. As privies, the decree against the corporation was conclusive against its shareholders.

The only requirement is that the prior action must be adversarial in nature in order to prevent collusion between the opposing party and the corporation representing the shareholder. Brault v. Smith, 209 M 21, 679 P2d 236, 41 St. Rep. 527 (1984), followed in Nasi v. Dept. of Highways, 231 M 395, 753 P2d 327, 45 St. Rep. 710 (1988), and in St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 256 M 38, 844 P2d 100, 49 St. Rep. 1126 (1992).

Action to Determine Ownership of Corporate Property Precluded by Res Judicata — Identity of Subject Matter and Issues: In an action for an accounting of certain properties owned by both the plaintiff and defendant, brought after entry of an earlier default judgment against the plaintiffs in a similar action in 1971, the District Court did not err in dismissing the action as barred by the doctrine of res judicata. The doctrine of res judicata applies, and the plaintiffs are barred from asserting their claim because the case is an attempt to relitigate the 1971 action. This is true despite the plaintiffs' claims that the current action is for an accounting for events occurring after the conclusion of the former case and involves property not included in the former case, as the complaint does not support the plaintiffs' assertions and the former action was for an accounting of all property owned by the parties. Under the requirements for application of res judicata expressed in Meagher County Water District v. Walter, 169 M 358, 547 P2d 850 (1976), and Brannon v. Lewis & Clark County, 143 M 200, 387 P2d 706 (1963), the doctrine applies and the claim is therefore barred. Wellman v. Wellman, 205 M 504, 668 P2d 1060, 40 St. Rep. 1459 (1983).

Judgment Res Judicata — Precedent for Standing Subsequently Overruled: The res judicata consequences of a final unappealed judgment on the merits are not altered by the fact that the judgment may have rested on a legal principle pertaining to standing that was subsequently overruled in another case. Thus, defendants may not now avoid the effect of a final judgment by complaining that if the suit were to be brought after the time of judgment, plaintiffs would not have standing. Libby Rod & Gun Club v. Moraski, 519 F. Supp. 643, 38 St. Rep. 1213 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Conscionability of Divorce Settlement Agreement Not Same as Sufficiency — Finding of Conscionability Not Res Judicata on Completeness of Agreement: At the conclusion of a hearing on the enforcement of his divorce settlement agreement several months after his divorce, the former husband moved to amend the finding of deficiency of the settlement agreement or, in the alternative, to grant a new trial. The motion was denied and the former husband appealed. The District Court had found in its decree of legal separation that the settlement agreement executed by the parties and incorporated into the decree was conscionable and should be approved. The husband contended on appeal that this finding was res judicata as to the issue of the marital agreement, thus barring any further requests by the wife. The Supreme Court found that the res judicata requirement of identity of issue was not met because there was sufficient dissimilarity between the issues in the two actions. The agreement disposed of the marital property but made no provision for any future support. The property disposition had no direct bearing on any contemporary agreement for obligations to be fulfilled in the near future. Res judicata, therefore, did not bar further action on any alleged agreements between the parties as to matters not involving the disposition of marital property. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Defenses Not Estopped by Invalid Collateral Judgment: When a contempt citation was issued in a separate, not related action, because of defendant's violation of Writs of Attachment and Execution, it was proper in a collateral attack to show that plaintiff had failed to comply with statutory requirements for attachment of property and hence void the underlying judgment upon which the contempt was based. As a result of the error in finding the defendant in contempt, the contempt order had no preclusive effect on the present case, and it was error to strike defendant's defenses and grant plaintiff summary judgment upon the theories of res judicata, collateral estoppel, and collateral attack. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Validity of Marriage Not Determined in Paternity Action: Where appellant allegedly fathered the child of the parties in 1962 and respondent subsequently sought and obtained a paternity decree against appellant in 1964 stating that the child was born "out of wedlock", a subsequent divorce action by the respondent was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata, as the validity of the parties' Mexican marriage was not material to the 1964 paternity decree and was never actually and necessarily adjudicated in the 1964 proceeding. Wilson v. Wilson, 186 M 290, 607 P2d 539 (1980).

Amendment of Complaint After Dismissal — Defense Inapplicable: Where Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of complaint by trial court on ground that complaint was unverified as required by 25-4-203 and on additional ground that complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted and a week later plaintiff filed a second verified amended complaint which eliminated confusion, the issue of res judicata was not so clear that the Supreme Court on the second appeal could say that the trial court could have found the defense of res judicata available without an answer under Rule 8(c) or responsive pleading to present the record of the former judgment plus a statement to show why it should be treated as res judicata. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Res Judicata as Affirmative Defense: Res judicata must be pleaded in the answer as an affirmative defense when it does not appear on the face of the complaint in order to support a dismissal on the grounds of failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

COUNTERCLAIM

Counterclaims Entered After Judgment Not Barred by Estoppel: A judgment can bar counterclaims in existence at the time the judgment was entered, but it cannot bar claims that arose after its entry. Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991).

Setoff and Recoupment to Be Pleaded: The terms "setoff" and "recoupment" are sometimes included in the term "counterclaim", and must be pleaded in order to enable the court to base a judgment thereon. Galiger v. McNulty, 80 M 339, 260 P 401 (1927).

Bill of Particulars and General Denial Not Counterclaim: A defendant, whether as defendant or as garnishee, cannot avail himself of a counterclaim unless he pleads it. It cannot be asserted under a general denial of indebtedness, and the furnishing of a bill of particulars in which his claim is listed is not pleading a counterclaim. Dolenty v. Rocky Mtn. Bell Tel. Co., 41 M 105, 108 P 921 (1910).

Defenses of Garnishee — Counterclaim to Be Pleaded: Any defense that a garnishee could interpose, in an action brought against him by the defendant, may be interposed as garnishee in an action by the attaching creditor. If he relies upon a counterclaim, he must, in either case, plead it. Dolenty v. Rocky Mtn. Bell Tel. Co., 41 M 105, 108 P 921 (1910).

Counterclaim to Be Pleaded: A counterclaim must be pleaded, or it cannot be proved. Union Mercantile Co. v. Jacobs, Sultan & Co., 20 M 554, 52 P 375 (1898).

MITIGATION OF DAMAGES

No Error in Failure to Reduce Wage Loss Recovery in Human Rights Case for Failure to Mitigate: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover lost wages. Defendants contended that the wage loss should be reduced because plaintiff failed to take reasonable steps to mitigate the damages. The Supreme Court agreed that in a claim for lost wages before the Commission for Human Rights, a claimant must take reasonable steps toward mitigating damages. Citing Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132 (1987), the court noted that plaintiff was not obligated to seek out all possible employment opportunities, but needed only to be reasonable in pursuing offers of employment. In this case, it was undisputed that plaintiff was emotionally debilitated, and although there was evidence of other reasons why plaintiff did not immediately seek new employment, plaintiff's medical testimony and testimony concerning plaintiff's loss of confidence, anxiety, and reluctance to meet new people supported the hearings examiner's findings, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb those findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Duty to Mitigate Damages — Standard Met: In a marital status discrimination case involving a school district antinepotism policy, the Supreme Court applied the standard established for the duty to mitigate damages as set out in Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978), that is, the duty to do what an ordinarily prudent person would do under the circumstances. The court found that after plaintiff was not hired by the school district, she applied for employment at clothing stores, jewelry stores, flower shops, doctors' offices, dentists' offices, the office of county superintendent of schools, the university, and with the school district again. Her failure to apply for teaching positions in communities surrounding Bozeman, in light of the other evidence of her seeking employment, did not constitute failure to mitigate damages. Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 1351 (1987).

Burden — Pleading and Proof: Matter in mitigation of damages is a defense and the burden of pleading and proving it rests with the defendant. Garden City Floral Co. v. Hunt, 126 M 537, 255 P2d 352 (1953). See also E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984).

Partial Defense to Be Pleaded: Under a general denial in a husband's action for criminal conversation, evidence as to the general bad reputation of plaintiff's wife, being matter tending to mitigation or reduction of damages, and hence a partial defense, was not admissible since partial defenses must be specially pleaded. McKim v. Beiseker, 56 M 330, 185 P 153 (1919).

INSURANCE POLICY PROVISIONS

Waiver of Right to Deny Insurance Coverage — Independent Investigation: Where an insurance company made an independent investigation of the employee status of an insured, found that he was covered, and then later denied coverage to the detriment of the insured, reliance on the investigation constituted waiver of the right to deny coverage even if facts of the employee status were misrepresented. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Remedy in Contract or in Tort — Motion for Separate Trials: An insurer requested a separate trial on the affirmative defenses raised by cross-claim and requested that the trial of the remaining issues raised by the insured be postponed until after the final determination of the affirmative defenses. The Supreme Court noted that the insured, having a choice of two remedies, one in contract and one in tort, elected to pursue his claim in tort. Recovery by him on his claim in tort would have the effect of barring his claim for breach of contract. If the motion for separate trials had been granted, it would have converted insured's claim for tort to one for breach of contract. Insured would then have been precluded from presenting any evidence as to consequential damages for the tort, let alone any evidence relating to punitive damages. His right to trial by jury of his tort claim, guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., would have been prejudiced. Denial of the motion to bifurcate was proper. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Failure to Plead Specific Provisions of Insurance Policy — Effect: When the insured incorporates the entire insurance policy as a defense, all parties understand the exclusions relied upon and no party is misled. The provisions at issue need not be specifically pleaded and the issues may be joined by a general denial. Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 156 M 246, 479 P2d 275 (1971).

Policy Provisions — No Pleading Required: Insurer need not affirmatively plead exceptions and exclusions from coverage contained in policy where entire policy and insurer's denial of coverage were incorporated in insured's pleadings. Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 156 M 246, 479 P2d 274 (1971).

ESTOPPEL

Mother Barred From Asserting Paternity and Sterility — Judicial Estoppel: Several years after the birth of their child, the mother claimed that the father was sterile and not the biological parent. The mother submitted personal observations, photographs, and Internet searches in support. The District Court ruled against the mother based on a DNA paternity test, the father's acknowledgment of paternity, and the mother's own acknowledgment of the father's paternity in a separate legal proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that judicial estoppel prevented the mother from asserting that the father was the parent in one court and yet sterile in another proceeding. J.L.G. v. M.F.D., 2014 MT 114, 375 Mont. 16, 324 P.3d 355.

Party Estopped From Arguing Previously Settled Federal Jurisdiction Issue: In an appeal from a state court decision, defendants argued that plaintiffs' claim was preempted by federal law and that the case should be returned to the federal court that had previously considered and rejected the federal jurisdiction issue. The Supreme Court held that defendants were estopped from arguing the federal jurisdiction issue in state court after the federal court specifically found that the federal court lacked jurisdiction and that defendants were parties to the prior final adjudication. Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009). See also Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Breach of Intervention Agreement — Issue Preclusion Applicable: McDaniel was sentenced to 20 years for burglary, with the sentence suspended subject to several conditions. About 4 months after sentencing, McDaniel tested positive for drugs, and the probation officer elected to initiate an intervention hearing, where an agreement was entered into in lieu of a formal violation being filed. Upon learning of the intervention hearing, the County Attorney filed a petition to revoke McDaniel's suspended sentence based on McDaniel's drug use. McDaniel moved for partial summary judgment on grounds that the intervention hearing agreement constituted a final adjudication of the probation violation and a binding contract and that the state was barred from relitigating the issue. The District Court denied the motion, McDaniel appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. McDaniel and the state, acting through the Department of Corrections, entered a valid binding contract that precluded filing of a formal violation, and the state breached the contract by filing the revocation petition. Additionally, the elements of issue preclusion were satisfied with respect to the state's liability on the breach of contract claim, including the state's opportunity to argue liability, so absent any genuine issue of material fact, McDaniel was entitled to partial summary judgment on the breach of contract claim. McDaniel v. St., 2009 MT 159, 350 M 422, 208 P3d 817 (2009), following Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Due Process Applicable to Revocation Proceedings, Not Deprivation of Property —Failure to Raise Due Process Claims in Motion to Dismiss — Summary Judgment Properly Denied: McDaniel was sentenced to 20 years for burglary, with the sentence suspended subject to several conditions. About 4 months after sentencing, McDaniel tested positive for drugs, and the probation officer elected to initiate an intervention hearing, where an agreement was entered into in lieu of a formal violation being filed. Upon learning of the intervention hearing, the County Attorney filed a petition to revoke McDaniel's suspended sentence based on McDaniel's drug use. McDaniel moved for partial summary judgment on grounds that litigation of the revocation petition should be barred on due process grounds because the issue had already been litigated and thus should be barred by issue preclusion. The District Court denied the motion and McDaniel appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The issue preclusion argument failed because the due process question as a deprivation of property was not raised in the analysis of the state's liability for a procedural due process violation, nor was the state afforded an opportunity to argue the deprivation of property due process claim. Additionally, McDaniel never raised a due process argument in the motions to dismiss, so the state did not address the due process issue that McDaniel claimed was adjudicated in District Court. Thus, McDaniel's motion for summary judgment on the due process claim was properly denied. McDaniel v. St., 2009 MT 159, 350 M 422, 208 P3d 817 (2009).

Failure to Disclose FELA Claim in Bankruptcy — Intent Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Judicial Estoppel: Dovey had financial difficulties that ultimately led him to file for bankruptcy. He first met with his bankruptcy attorney on June 1, 2004. At this initial meeting, Dovey filled out a worksheet listing all his debts and assets. Two weeks later, Dovey sustained severe injuries to his right knee, allegedly in the course of performing his duties as a conductor for BNSF. On October 21, 2004, Dovey filed a Chapter 7 petition for bankruptcy. In the attached forms, Dovey failed to list his potential claim against BNSF as an asset. Dovey's bankruptcy petition was discharged on February 8, 2005, and later terminated on April 3, 2006. On September 8, 2005, Dovey filed a complaint against BNSF under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA). A year later, on September 26, 2006, BNSF filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that Dovey was judicially estopped from pursuing his claim against the railroad. Since Dovey did not list his potential FELA claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy proceedings, BNSF argued, his claim against BNSF was barred by judicial estoppel. Dovey's attorney for the FELA claim stated he was unaware that Dovey had filed for bankruptcy until he read BNSF's motion. That attorney immediately contacted Dovey's bankruptcy attorney and trustee to notify them of Dovey's pending FELA lawsuit. Dovey's bankruptcy claim was reopened on October 20, 2006. In response to BNSF's summary judgment motion, Dovey claimed that he did not know that his potential FELA claim was an asset that should have been included in the settlement of his bankruptcy petition. Dovey noted that judicial estoppel is an affirmative defense that should have been raised in BNSF's answer to his complaint, not on a motion for summary judgment. BNSF subsequently brought a motion to amend its answer to assert judicial estoppel as an affirmative defense. The District Court granted BNSF's motion for summary judgment and dismissed Dovey's claims on the basis of judicial estoppel. Dovey appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Courts may invoke the equitable doctrine of judicial estoppel to prevent a party from asserting a claim that is incompatible with a position advanced by that party in a previous proceeding in which the party prevailed. The court relied on the three factors in U.S. v. Ibrahim, 522 F3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2008) to determine whether a party is judicially estopped from raising a certain claim: (1) whether a party's later position is "clearly inconsistent" with its original position; (2) whether the party has successfully persuaded the court of the earlier position; and (3) whether allowing the inconsistent position would allow the party to "derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party". Before reaching a conclusion on these three factors, the Ninth Circuit first addressed a threshold matter of whether the party intentionally sought to manipulate the courts by taking inconsistent positions. The District Court erred as a matter of law in failing to consider whether the inconsistent positions advanced by Dovey were attributable to mistake or inadvertence or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts by failing to report his FELA claim. The District Court also erred by failing to view the facts in the light most favorable to Dovey. Dovey raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether his unscheduled claim was the product of a good faith mistake or an inadvertent omission or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts. The District Court erred by granting BNSF's motion for summary judgment and by dismissing Dovey's claim. A genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Dovey's failure to list his claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy petition was intentional. The case was remanded to the District Court for further proceedings. Dovey v. BNSF Railway Co., 2008 MT 350, 346 M 305, 195 P3d 1223 (2008).

Admissibility of Evidence From Prior Suit — Distinct Causes of Action and Different Instances of Alleged Wrongdoing: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for breach of contract for failing to cover medical expenses, even though coverage had been provided for similar medical costs in the past and the insurance policy remained the same. The District Court held that evidence from prior settled disputes could not be used in the present suit and granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Although the medical issue was similar to the prior settled coverage, the instant action alleged wrongdoing by the insurer after the prior coverage dispute was settled and alleged a distinct cause of action arising from a different instance of alleged wrongdoing, so plaintiffs' use of evidence that was relevant in the previous dispute did not constitute relitigation of the prior dispute that would be barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel, and the District Court erred in so holding. The prior evidence was admissible to provide a context for the instant claims by revealing the history of plaintiffs' relationship with the insurer. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Collateral Estoppel Inapplicable to Contemporaneous Suits: While a Montana case concerning insurance policy stacking issues was pending, defendant North Dakota insurance company raised the same issues in North Dakota courts, received a favorable declaratory judgment against stacking in the North Dakota Supreme Court, and then argued that the doctrine of collateral estoppel barred plaintiffs from pursuing claims in Montana once the North Dakota courts had ruled. The Montana Supreme Court disagreed, holding that collateral estoppel bars the reopening of an issue that has been litigated or determined in a prior suit but has no application in situations in which contemporaneous suits are unfolding. Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008).

Collateral Estoppel Not Bar to Challenge of Marital Property Disposition by Titleholder Not Party to Dissolution: While defendant was married, her husband allegedly conspired with his sister to hide his interest in a parcel of real property in Lincoln County by placing the property in the sister and her husband's name. When the Flathead County District Court distributed the marital estate, the court ordered the sister and her husband to convey the property to the wife and ordered the wife to sell the property, with the proceeds to be equitably distributed between the husband and wife. The sister and her husband were never named as parties to the underlying dissolution action, nor were they served with a summons, and they argued that for these reasons, the District Court lacked jurisdiction over them and had no authority to order them to convey the property to the wife. The District Court disagreed, ruled that the court had jurisdiction over the property by virtue of its status as part of the marital estate, and held that the court had authority to terminate the sister and her husband's title in the property and to order that it be transferred to the wife. The sister and her husband did not appeal the ruling, but 3 days after the Flathead County District Court directed the property to be transferred to the wife, the sister and her husband filed the present action in Lincoln County to quiet title in the property. The Lincoln County District Court held that the sister and her husband were barred by collateral estoppel from challenging the Flathead County District Court in Lincoln County, and the sister and her husband appealed. The Supreme Court noted that one element of the doctrine of collateral estoppel that must be satisfied requires that the party against whom preclusion is asserted must have been afforded a full and fair opportunity to litigate any issues that might be barred. Additionally, under Blonder-Tongue Laboratories, Inc. v. Univ. of Ill. Foundation, 402 US 313 (1971), when a court entertains litigation that could terminate the real estate interests of third parties, this element of collateral estoppel requires, at a minimum, that they be made parties to the proceedings and served with notice of the fact that their interests in the real property could be affected. In this case, the sister and her husband were never afforded an opportunity to litigate their property ownership, so the Lincoln County District Court erred in concluding that all elements of collateral estoppel were satisfied and that the doctrine precluded the sister and her husband's quiet title action. Without expressing an opinion as to the merits of the quiet title action, the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings. Kubacki v. Molchan, 2007 MT 306, 340 M 100, 172 P3d 594 (2007), distinguishing In re Marriage of Heidema, 2007 MT 20, 335 M 362, 152 P3d 112 (2007).

Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable When County Knew That Insufficient Money Would Be Available to Pay County Attorney's Salary: County Attorney Oster brought an action against Valley County for underpayment of salary. The county contended that Oster should be equitably estopped from bringing suit because Oster actively knew and concealed the fact that the state would be contributing a lesser amount toward Oster's salary and because Oster misled County Commissioners into believing that the state would pay half of Oster's salary increase. The Supreme Court held that equitable estoppel did not apply because the county knew the truth of the facts that Oster allegedly misrepresented at the time that the County Commissioners approved Oster's pay raise. Oster v. Valley County, 2006 MT 180, 333 M 76, 140 P3d 1079 (2006).

Claimant Judicially Estopped From Claiming Wrongful Discharge Following Settlement of Occupational Disease Claim Based on Same Employment: In 1997 and 1998, Vogel filed workers' compensation claims, contending that injuries received on the job required surgeries. Defendant accepted liability for the injuries. Between 1998 and 2002, Vogel continued to have problems performing his job, and Vogel's employment was terminated in May 2002. In June 2002, Vogel filed an occupational disease claim, and in October 2002, Vogel filed a wrongful discharge claim. During the ensuing 2 years, no action was taken on the wrongful discharge case, but Vogel settled the occupational disease claim, stating that starting in 1999, he suffered job-related injuries that rendered him physically unable to continue his work with defendant. When Vogel later pursued the wrongful discharge claim, defendant argued judicial estoppel, asserting that having represented in the occupational disease claim that he was unable to perform his time-of-injury job, Vogel was precluded from later arguing entitlement to wrongful discharge damages resulting from loss of the same job. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment to defendant, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Applying the elements of judicial estoppel set out in Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675 (1994), the court held that all four elements were met and that the District Court had correctly ruled that judicial estoppel applied and properly granted summary judgment. Vogel v. Intercontinental Truck Body, Inc., 2006 MT 131, 332 M 322, 137 P3d 573 (2006).

Finality of Judgment Requirement in Applying Collateral Estoppel: In a 2003 suit, William sued his brother Otto on the issue of partnership assets, and then in 2004, when that case was still pending, William filed claims against Otto for further misappropriating business assets and against Otto's wife Frances for conspiring to assist Otto. The District Court held that the 2004 case was barred by collateral estoppel, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. It is appropriate to accord finality to an earlier judgment that contains findings of fact that definitively resolve all new allegations and legal theories included in a later complaint, and the 2004 judgment was sufficiently final for applying collateral estoppel. The determinative fact of whether and to what extent Frances misappropriated partnership funds without Otto's knowledge was actually and necessarily decided in the 2003 case. Because the precise issue or allegation that provided the basis for each of William's 2004 theories of recovery was already presented and decided in 2003, the District Court properly found that the 2004 suit was barred by collateral estoppel. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006). See also Martelli v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 258 M 166, 852 P2d 579 (1993), and Dowell v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2006 MT 55, 331 M 305, 132 P3d 520 (2006).

Right to Substantiation Hearing on Licensing Issue Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When Dowell applied to work at a day-care center, the Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS) denied the request, without a substantiation hearing, based on Dowell's previous child abuse and neglect proceedings. The District Court affirmed on grounds that Dowell's right to a substantiation hearing was barred by collateral estoppel, and Dowell appealed. The Supreme Court found that all the elements of collateral estoppel were met: (1) the issues in the child abuse and neglect proceedings were the same as those in the substantiation decision; (2) there was a final adjudication on the merits in the prior child abuse and neglect proceedings; (3) Dowell was the same party in both proceedings; and (4) Dowell had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue at the prior hearing. Dowell's right to a substantiation hearing was barred by collateral estoppel, and Dowell was not allowed to relitigate the issue. Dowell v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2006 MT 55, 331 M 305, 132 P3d 520 (2006).

Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel — Inapplicable Absent Final Judgment: In In re B.N.Y., 2003 MT 241, 317 M 291, 77 P3d 189 (2003), the Supreme Court held that a mother's due process rights were violated in parental rights termination proceedings. Almost immediately after the 2003 decision, the state began new proceedings. The mother asserted that res judicata and collateral estoppel barred the new action. The District Court disagreed, and the mother appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Both res judicata and collateral estoppel require a final judgment in an initial action before they preclude a similar future action. The initial order terminating the mother's parental rights did not constitute a final judgment as a result of In re B.N.Y. The 2003 decision had no preclusive effect in the current action, and the mother's res judicata and collateral estoppel arguments failed. In re B.N.Y., 2006 MT 34, 331 M 145, 130 P3d 594 (2006). Failure of Teacher to Exhaust Grievance Procedures Required Under Unambiguous Contract — Estoppel Inapplicable Absent Factual Representation of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Proper: When Wurl's speech-language pathology contract was not renewed, Wurl brought an action against the school district alleging that termination procedures were not followed pursuant to a collectively bargained master agreement and also brought claims for wrongful discharge and due process violations. The parties disagreed whether the master agreement applied because Wurl was not certified. The District Court found that the master agreement did not apply and granted summary judgment to the school district, and Wurl appealed. The Supreme Court found that the language of the employment contract unambiguously incorporated the entirety of the master agreement by reference, so the District Court erred in holding otherwise. Wurl also contended that because the District Superintendent had stated that the master agreement did not apply, collateral estoppel should bar the district from asserting that Wurl failed to go through the collectively bargained grievance procedure. On this point, the Supreme Court disagreed. The superintendent's statement was a legal interpretation rather than a factual representation of a material fact, so Wurl failed to prove the first required element of collateral estoppel, and the district was therefore allowed to argue that Wurl's claims should be barred by failure to exhaust the grievance procedure. Because the master agreement applied and Wurl failed to implement the mandatory grievance procedure, Wurl's claims were barred. The Supreme Court affirmed the summary judgment. Wurl v. Polson School District No. 23, 2006 MT 8, 330 M 282, 127 P3d 436 (2006), following Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Doctrine of Corporation by Estoppel Versus De Facto Corporation Doctrine — Requisite Donative Intent to Show Inter Vivos Gift to Corporation by Estoppel: A church incorporated in 1998. The attorney who filed the incorporation subsequently moved out of state, and because annual reports were not filed, the Secretary of State involuntarily dissolved the church's corporate status in 2000. The church's corporate status was reinstated in 2004. The church was not aware that it was not a valid corporation when it received a gift of property in 2002, but claimed that it was nevertheless a de facto corporation able to accept the gift. The couple who donated the property claimed that because they did not know that the church was not a valid corporation, they should be allowed to revoke the gift and that the subsequent reinstatement of the church's corporate status after the couple sought to revoke the gift did not retroactively create donative intent that the couple had revoked. The Supreme Court distinguished the de facto corporation, which was abolished in 35-1-119, from the doctrine of corporation by estoppel, which provides that a party that has dealt with a corporation cannot then deny the corporation's existence. The court applied the doctrine of corporation by estoppel to this case. It would be inequitable to allow defendants to escape possible liability just because the church, acting in good faith, was involuntarily dissolved at the time that the possible liability arose. Thus, defendants were equitably estopped from denying the corporate status of the church. The couple had the requisite donative intent to meet the definition of an irrevocable inter vivos gift, and as owner of the gifted property, the church had standing to sue. Valley Victory Church v. Sandon, 2005 MT 72, 326 M 340, 109 P3d 273 (2005).

Landowner Subdivision Rights Precluded by Restrictive Covenants — No Oral Contract Without Consideration — Statute of Frauds Applied: Plaintiffs subdivided about 80 acres into a 40-acre water ski lake and five residential lots. Restrictive covenants provided that no more than six landowners would be allowed to use the lake, that five landowners would be owners of lots in the subdivision, and that one landowner would be the owner of a single family dwelling built on property immediately west of the lake. Plaintiffs initially intended to build on the west side of the lake and become the sixth landowner but changed their minds, sold the west side property, and decided to build on the south side instead. Four of the five landowners filed an affidavit that when they purchased their lots, they understood that plaintiffs would be the sixth landowner and that they had orally approved the relocation of plaintiffs' residence to the south shore. After plaintiffs' home was built on the south side, they sought a declaratory judgment that they were the sixth landowner under the restrictive covenants and thus had the right to use the lake. One dissenting landowner opposed the declaratory judgment and moved for summary judgment on grounds that the restrictive covenants prohibited plaintiffs from use of the lake. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that there was no evidence of consideration given to the landowners for modification of the covenants and that as a result, the modification benefited plaintiffs only. The right to use the lake ran with the land and was therefore a real property interest, and under the statute of frauds, any transfer of the right from one parcel to another had to be in writing or altered by an executed oral agreement. However, without consideration, there could be no oral contract, and without an oral contract, there could be no executed oral contract. Plaintiffs' argument that because they relied on oral agreements, equitable estoppel should prohibit defendants from denying plaintiffs' use of the lake also failed because equitable estoppel does not apply under the statute of frauds except when the statute would operate to perpetuate a fraud. The District Court was affirmed. Hanson v. Water Ski Mania Estates, 2005 MT 47, 326 M 154, 108 P3d 481 (2005).

Misrepresentation of Value of Estate — Estoppel Applicable to Prevent Advantage From Misrepresentation: A conservator knew, but failed to mention, that an estate included annuities and jointly held property that was not included in the final estate inventory. Other parties, to their detriment, relied on the inventory as an accurate representation of the value of the estate. The District Court properly held that it would not be equitable for the conservator to take advantage of the misrepresentation of the value of the estate by reducing the distribution to the other parties. The Supreme Court held that the elements of equitable estoppel were met, and the District Court was affirmed. In re Estate of Stukey, 2004 MT 279, 323 M 241, 100 P3d 114 (2004). See also Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

No Error in Denial of Motion to Amend Pleadings to Address Previously Decided Statutory Constitutionality: In Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2002 MT 269, 312 M 320, 59 P3d 398 (2002), the Supreme Court held that a process allowing a landowner to petition for exclusion from an irrigation district was constitutional. The dissent in Geil suggested an additional constitutional argument that was not previously considered, so the irrigation district attempted to amend the pleadings, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that although leave to file amendments to pleadings should be freely granted, a District Court also has discretion to deny amendments to pleadings when justice requires and that denial of a motion to amend will be upheld absent an abuse of that discretion. Noting the length of the proceeding and the fact that the irrigation district brought the new constitutional argument only after the dissent brought it to its attention, the Supreme Court determined that Geil had addressed the constitutionality issues, so further constitutional arguments were barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the irrigation district's effort to amend the pleadings, and the District Court was affirmed. RSG Holdings v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 214, 322 M 369, 96 P3d 1131 (2004). See also Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 217, 322 M 388, 96 P3d 1127 (2004), Petitioners I-549 v. Partner Estopped From Claiming Damages From Formation of Corporation Necessitated by Partner's Own Acts: As a result of one partner's refusal to sign documents necessary for a farm partnership to qualify for federal funding benefits, the remaining partners formed a separate business and qualified for the benefits. The abstaining partner then claimed damages because of formation of the new business and its subsequent leasing of partnership property. The District Court held that the partner was estopped from complaining about the new business, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The partner knew the history and significance of the federal benefits to the partnership and yet refused to sign the necessary documentation shortly before the deadline, which amounted to a representation or concealment of material fact, and induced the remaining partners to form the new business. The six elements of equitable estoppel as set out in Selley v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2000 MT 76, 299 M 127, 998 P2d 156 (2000), were met, and the partner was estopped from complaining that the partnership detrimentally altered its position and then denying the just and legal consequences that were caused by the partner's own conduct, act, or omission. Pankratz Farms, Inc. v. Pankratz, 2004 MT 180, 322 M 133, 95 P3d 671 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim by Estate Not Barred by Res Judicata, Equitable Estoppel, or Judicial Estoppel: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. The trust beneficiaries brought a separate suit against the trustee. The District Court granted summary judgment for the attorney on grounds of res judicata, equitable estoppel, and judicial estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Res judicata and collateral estoppel did not apply because the subject matter and parties in the beneficiaries' suit were different. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the defendants did not present any evidence to establish that they relied on an act by the personal representative or changed their position for the worse because of that act. Judicial estoppel did not apply because the judicial admission in this case referred only to plaintiffs' legal theory and not to an unequivocal statement of fact and because of the absence of any evidence that defendants were misled by a judicial admission. Thus, summary judgment was inappropriate. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Improper Resolution of Disputed Issues of Material Fact Once Insurer's Duty to Defend Established — Reversible Error: A driver was injured when his vehicle struck a horse and filed a claim against Staples, who was allegedly pasturing the horse just prior to the accident. Staples then filed a third-party complaint against the horse owners, claiming that as the horse's custodian, he was an additional insured under the insurance policy of one owner and was entitled to a defense. Defendant insurer unilaterally decided that its insured was not the horse's owner and sought a declaration that it had no duty to defend or provide coverage to Staples. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court found that Staples might be an insured under the policy and that defendant had a duty to defend Staples, but then went on to conclude that because the policyholder did not own the horse at the time of the accident, Staples was not a third-party insured. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Having correctly determined that the insurer had a duty to defend, the District Court should have ended the analysis and concluded that because the insurer breached that duty, it was estopped from denying coverage and that Staples was entitled to coverage. It was error for the District Court to then proceed to resolve disputed issues of fact in ruling on the summary judgment motion in favor of the insurer. Staples v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 108, 321 M 99, 90 P3d 381 (2004), followed in Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rumph, 2007 MT 249, 339 M 251, 170 P3d 934 (2007), and following Independent Milk & Cream Co. v. Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. No Requirement That Court Take as True Conclusions or Allegations With No Factual Basis or Contrary to What Has Been Adjudicated — Estoppel — Dismissal Proper: In Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), the District Court held that a husband's parents and sister had no enforceable ownership interests in their own right to disputed marital property because any interest that they arguably had was dependent on the husband's equitable interest, which was litigated in the dissolution action in which the husband denied any interest in the property. Nevertheless, the parents and sister brought a separate action, claiming that the parents were trustors of a trust created for the husband's benefit and that the sister was a successor trustee or trust beneficiary. The District Court dismissed the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to state a claim. The parents and sister appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not consider matters outside the pleadings, which would have required that the dismissal motion be converted to a summary judgment motion, but properly considered only the complaint and incorporated documents. Moreover, the court was not under any duty to take as true legal conclusions or allegations that had no factual basis or that were contrary to what had already been adjudicated. Any purported interest in the property by the husband was barred by estoppel. The prior decision that adjudicated the husband's interest in the property extinguished any derivative claim that the parents and sister might have had, and the complaint and attached documents supported the District Court's granting of the motion to dismiss. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Deferred Payment Plan for Child Support Arrearages Proper With Parties' Agreement but Improper for Medical Support Arrearages Absent Agreement — Estoppel: Rather than requiring immediate payment of all past-due amounts for child support and medical support, the District Court set up a deferred payment plan that required payment of current child support, an additional monthly amount for past-due child support, and an additional monthly amount for past-due medical support. The wife contended that the deferred payment plan violated 40-4-208 because the plan constituted a retroactive modification of support. The Supreme Court held in In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991), that the doctrine of estoppel applies to support payments if: (1) there is a substantial and continuing change in circumstances rendering the original decree inequitable; (2) there is a mutual agreement between the parties made in good faith; and (3) conduct over a period of years is consistent with the agreement. Here, the parties made an express agreement regarding the deferred payment plan, based on the husband's reduced income because of his failing business, that was followed for over 3 years. Thus, under the estoppel doctrine, the husband was entitled to rely on the wife's conduct in making the agreement. However, the parties made no agreement concerning medical support, so the District Court erred in ordering deferred payment of medical support because estoppel did not apply, and the case was remanded for judgment for the amount of past-due medical support. In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004).

Party Estopped From Asserting That Property Placed in Trust Given Prior Denial of Interest in Property: When dividing the marital estate, the District Court found that the husband had gifted a parcel of property to the wife. Title to the property was never in the husband's name, but was always held by the husband's parents or by one of his previous wives. The husband asserted that the intent in transferring the property was to establish a trust for his benefit, with the wife as trustee. However, the husband was judicially estopped from the trust argument because he had repeatedly and unequivocally denied that he had any interest in the property in a prior lawsuit against him for past-due child support. Allowing the husband to reverse his position would have substantially altered the wife's share of the marital distribution after she helped support the husband and helped add to the value of the property. No person may take advantage of the person's own wrong, and a court of equity will not aid a person who has caused title to property to be transferred to another for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001). See also Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), in which adjudication of the husband's claim in Cowan, id., was held to have extinguished any derivative claim in the property that the husband's parents and sister may have had.

Assurance of Coverage Made by Agent — Coverage Not Extended Beyond Policy Terms: Defendant insurer claimed that plaintiffs' claims in a 2002 action were barred by collateral estoppel and res judicata because of the prior holding in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001). Applying the test in Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), for determining whether collateral estoppel barred the present action because it might be a relitigation of the 2001 case, the Supreme Court disagreed with defendant's assertion. Plaintiffs had not previously litigated whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss because that issue did not arise until defendant refused to indemnify Hoss and Hoss confessed judgment. Also, the issue of whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss was different from the issue in the 2001 case, which concerned whether Lee was a named insured under Hoss's policy, thereby entitling Lee to underinsured motorist benefits. Because the present issue was never litigated, there was never a final judgment on the merits, so defendant's collateral estoppel and res judicata arguments were inapplicable. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

Lee was injured in an accident in Louisiana while in a taxi and filed an underinsured motorist (UIM) claim pursuant to coverage provided by USAA Casualty Insurance Co. (USAA) on two vehicles that she jointly owned, with Hoss contending that she was entitled to stack coverage under the policies. Although USAA initially indicated that Lee would be entitled to UIM coverage because she was a co-owner of the vehicles, the insurer later changed its position and denied coverage on grounds that because Lee was not a named insured and as a matter of law not a "covered person" under the relevant policy provisions, USAA had no obligation to treat her as such. The District Court granted summary judgment for USAA, concluding that Lee was not an insured for purposes of UIM coverage under the express language of Hoss's policy and that Lee could not benefit from a policy to which she was not a party. On appeal, Lee contended that she was entitled to a new trial because USAA's claim adjuster initially indicated that Lee would be covered, USAA should be bound by that admission of coverage, and USAA's first answer should be a binding judicial admission as a matter of law. The Supreme Court relied on DeJonge v. Mut. of Enumclaw, 843 P2d 914 (Oreg. 1992), and Shows v. Pemberton, 868 P2d 164 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994), in holding that an assurance made by an insurance agent that a particular coverage exists, in the absence of an ambiguity, does not create or extend coverage beyond the covered risks expressly identified or excluded in the policy. Assurances or representations made as a result of confusion and misfeasance by an insurance agent do not render an otherwise unambiguous policy ambiguous as a matter of law. As a general rule, the agent's conduct may be offered to demonstrate that an ambiguity exists, particularly from the perspective of a reasonable insurance consumer. Nevertheless, in some limited instances, an assurance of coverage by an agent that conflicts with an unambiguous policy may afford an insured relief under the theories of waiver or equitable estoppel. Lee pursued the theory of estoppel in this case, but failed to prove that she relied on the agent's representation of coverage to her detriment. A judicial admission is not binding unless it is an unequivocal statement of fact, rather than a conclusion of law or the expression of an opinion. USAA admitted no material fact of consequence to the case. Thus, neither the agent's representations that coverage existed nor the first answer admitting that Lee was covered served as sufficient grounds for enforcing the policy in her favor or for estopping USAA from denying coverage. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001), distinguishing Dion v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 22 Mont. Fed. Rep. 225 (D.C. Mont. 1997), and Boyle v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 25 Mont. Fed. Rep. 446 (D.C. Mont. 1999).

No Equitable Estoppel of Defense of Sixty-Month Claim Limit on Workers' Compensation Benefits: Following a work-related injury in 1992, Wiard did not submit a medical claim within 60 months, as required under 39-71-704(1)(d) (now (1)(e)) to avoid termination of benefits. Wiard asserted that the insurer should be equitably estopped from asserting the 60-month claim limit as a defense because if he had been advised of the 60-month limit, he would have sought medical care during that period to extend the benefits. However, Wiard had an affirmative duty to exercise his medical benefits if he reasonably needed medical care within the 60-month period, and if Wiard did not need medical care within that period, then the failure to obtain medical care could not be construed as reliance. Therefore, the insurer's defense was properly allowed. Wiard v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2003 MT 295, 318 M 132, 79 P3d 281 (2003).

Error in Failing to Consider Estoppel Related to Waiver of Right to Declare Contract Forfeiture — Summary Judgment Improper: When plaintiffs began experiencing financial problems, they notified defendants that they would not be able to make the annual payment on their property. Defendants allegedly told plaintiffs that they would have whatever time they needed to come up with the money, as long as they paid any additional interest and other expenses. Defendants subsequently sent plaintiffs a default notice and terminated the contract for deed. Plaintiffs contended that defendants waived the right to terminate the contract and should be estopped from forfeiting the contract. The District Court dismissed the waiver and estoppel arguments as an attempt to offer parol evidence to amend the contract and granted summary judgment to defendants. However, plaintiffs were not trying to amend the contract, but rather were simply trying to show that defendants waived the right to foreclose for at least a period of time, that plaintiffs relied on the waiver, and that defendants should be estopped from foreclosure. Because material questions remained as to whether a waiver occurred, summary judgment was improper and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Danelson v. Robinson, 2003 MT 271, 317 M 462, 77 P3d 1010 (2003).

Refusal to Enforce Unsubstantiated Oral Agreement to Dismiss Claim for Prescriptive Easement — Parol Evidence Rule and Statute of Frauds Inapplicable: Defendant contended that the District Court erred in failing to estop plaintiff from asserting claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property because an agent of plaintiff orally agreed to dismiss the claims and defendant relied on the promise to defendant's detriment. The District Court held that the parol evidence rule and the statute of frauds prohibited admission of evidence of an oral agreement to dismiss the case because there were written temporary access agreements in place and that defendant did not offer sufficient evidence to meet either a fraud or estoppel exception to the parol evidence rule. The Supreme Court found that the trial court reached the correct result, albeit for the wrongs reasons, by automatically applying the parol evidence rule and the statute of frauds without determining whether either rule applied. Actually neither rule barred admission of the evidence in this case, so the trial court was free to consider the merits of the existence of an oral contract without defendant having to prove the elements of fraud or detrimental reliance. Nevertheless, the trial court found defendant's story of an oral agreement to be unsubstantiated and correctly refused to enforce an oral agreement based on the facts before it. Brimstone Min., Inc. v. Glaus, 2003 MT 236, 317 M 236, 77 P3d 175 (2003).

Easement Issue Resolved Against Predecessor in Interest Barred by Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel: Plaintiffs claimed an easement by necessity over Skyline Drive. Defendants asserted that the action was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel based on a prior District Court ruling that another property owner did not have an easement over Skyline Drive. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. As set out in Hall v. Heckerman, 2000 MT 300, 302 M 345, 15 P3d 869 (2000), res judicata applies if: (1) the parties or their privies are the same; (2) the subject matter of the present and past action is the same; (3) the issues are the same and relate to the same subject matter; and (4) the capacities of the persons are the same in reference to the subject matter and to the issues between them. A form of res judicata, collateral estoppel, applies if: (1) the identical issue raised was previously decided in a prior adjudication; (2) a final judgment of the merits was issued in the prior litigation; and (3) the party against whom the plea is now asserted was a party or in privity with a party in the prior adjudication (see Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778 (2000)). In this case, plaintiffs attempted to raise an easement issue that was previously adjudicated and conclusively resolved against their predecessor in interest, so plaintiffs' claim was barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003).

No Representation or Concealment of Material Facts — Estoppel Inapplicable: Geiger contended that his employer and the uninsured employers' fund should be equitably estopped from denying compensation for Geiger's job-related injuries. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that equitable estoppel did not apply, and the Supreme Court concurred. One of the six requirements for the application of equitable estoppel is conduct amounting to a representation or a concealment of material facts. Geiger insisted that the employer concealed the fact that the employer had discontinued paying for Geiger's workers' compensation coverage. The employer testified that Geiger was notified of the discontinuance of coverage at the time that a contract and lease were signed. The Workers' Compensation Court chose to believe the employer, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb that finding. Because Geiger knew that the employer had discontinued coverage, there was no concealment of a material fact, and Geiger's equitable estoppel argument failed. Geiger v. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2002 MT 332, 313 M 242, 62 P3d 259 (2002).

Limited Prescriptive Easement Established — Obvious Use Viewed as Open and Notorious: Albert filed an action to determine a claim for a prescriptive easement and quiet title to a road across Hastetter's property. Hastetter raised the affirmative defense of estoppel, claiming that Albert recognized Hastetter's legitimate title to the road by requesting an easement in an earlier letter and that the use was permissive and subject to Hastetter's consent. The trial court found that Albert had a prescriptive easement that was limited to the historical use of providing access and moving cattle to and from Albert's pasture. Hastetter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert established the elements for a prescriptive easement during the statutory 5-year period, and thus enjoyed the presumption that his use was adverse to Hastetter's interest. Although the servient landowner must know about and acquiesce to the user's claim of right, Montana law does not require that a prescriptive easement claimant verbally communicate a hostile intent. Open and notorious use can be established by showing that the condition of use was so obvious that the owner was not deceived and should have known of the claimant's use. Further, Albert had used the road to move cattle periodically since 1958 and had used the road to check the condition of fences and gates. Given the obvious use of the gates to control livestock, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it refrained from scrutinizing the gates as evidence of permissive use. Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002), followed in Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Claim of Resulting or Constructive Trust Barred by Judicial Estoppel and Clean Hands Doctrine: The parents created a family corporation and made their four children equal, sole shareholders through transfers and gifts. When two medical malpractice suits were filed against the father, he claimed that he had no right to or control over the corporation's assets. In a separate action, two sisters instituted a shareholder derivative action and petitioned for judicial review of their brother's fiduciary duties. The brother called a special meeting to issue additional stock to himself and to transfer property back to the parents, but the sisters objected and the brother was enjoined from doing so. The parents then claimed that the property was held in a resulting or constructive trust, and the District Court ordered that the assets and stock be conveyed to the parents. The sisters appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Both the sisters and the plaintiffs in the medical malpractice action relied to their detriment on the father's judicial declaration that he had no right to or control over the corporate assets, and the father was thus barred by judicial estoppel and the clean hands doctrine from raising equitable claims that a resulting or constructive trust existed. Judicial estoppel binds a party to that party's judicial declarations and precludes the party from taking a position inconsistent with the previous declaration in a subsequent action or proceeding. The clean hands doctrine provides that a party must not expect relief in equity unless the party comes into court with clean hands. The evidence here showed that the parents knowingly transferred assets to the family corporation to circumvent creditors and avoid estate taxes, and the Supreme Court will not aid a party whose claim had its inception in the party's wrongdoing, whether the victim of the wrongdoing is the other party or a third party. Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Elements of Judicial Estoppel: The doctrine of judicial estoppel binds a party to that party's judicial declarations and precludes the party from taking a position inconsistent with the previous declaration in a subsequent action or proceeding. Although judicial estoppel may be regarded as a form of estoppel, it is not strictly one of estoppel, but partakes rather of positive rules of procedure based on manifest justice and, to a greater or lesser degree, on considerations of the orderliness, regularity, and expedition of litigation. Those elements that are generally essential to the operation of equitable estoppel, such as reliance, injury, and prejudice to the individual, may not enter to the same extent into judicial estoppel. A party claiming that judicial estoppel bars another party from relitigating an issue must show that: (1) the estopped party had knowledge of the facts at the time that the original position was taken; (2) the estopped party succeeded in maintaining the original position; (3) the present position is inconsistent with the original position; and (4) the original position misled the adverse party so that allowing the estopped party to change its position would injuriously affect the adverse party. Collateral Estoppel Applied to Preclude Reopening Settlement Agreement Regarding Disposition of Jointly Owned Marital Property — Property Interest Not Altered by Filing of Partition Action: When the husband and wife separated, they entered a property settlement agreement dividing all their real and personal property, agreeing that they would continue to jointly own their residence, with the right of survivorship. In the decree of dissolution, the District Court affirmed that the property settlement agreement was fair and equitable. Several years after the divorce, seeking to wrap up financial affairs with her former husband, the wife moved to partition the residence and obtain an equal division of the value of the property. At trial, the husband argued that the property settlement agreement was unfair and that the wife should be denied any recovery for her interest in the residence because it was purchased prior to the marriage and because she did not contribute to the marriage financially. The wife moved in limine to preclude the husband from reopening matters that should have been raised in the divorce proceedings. The court denied her motion, reasoning that the property was not divided in the divorce and that because the partition action was an action at equity, surrounding circumstances could be considered. The court found that the filing of the partition action severed the joint tenancy, and the husband was then allowed to introduce evidence regarding the marital equities. The court ultimately concluded that the wife's interest in the residence was not compensable because she had not contributed significantly to the acquisition or improvement of the property or contributed to the parties' assets during the marriage. The wife appealed. The Supreme Court found that res judicata and equitable estoppel barred relitigation of the fairness of the joint ownership issue, which was considered and approved in the decree of dissolution. Further, the mere filing of the partition action does not sever one's interest in property. Rather, the parties' respective interests remain intact until the judgment severing the tenancy is entered. The rebuttable presumption that underlies a joint tenancy in property is equal shares, and there was nothing in the evidence to rebut that presumption and no evidence of postdecree events that would justify a different result. The husband failed to carry the burden of rebutting the presumption of equal shares, and the Supreme Court remanded for a 50-50 partition of the value of the residence. Rausch v. Hogan, 2001 MT 123, 305 M 382, 28 P3d 460 (2001).

Issue of Department of Labor and Industry Jurisdiction Raised in Two Separate Hearings — Collateral Estoppel Applicable — Due Process Rights Not Implicated When Party Fails to Pursue Available Remedies: The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that the Department of Labor and Industry should have allowed plaintiff to raise the argument that State Fund had improperly canceled plaintiff's policy for nonpayment of a premium as a defense to the claim by the Uninsured Employers' Fund for assessments and penalties. The court said that the issue was not barred by collateral estoppel because an order from a first hearing only determined whether the Department had subject matter jurisdiction over contract disputes between an insurance carrier and its policyholder (a determination that plaintiff did not appeal) and did not address the issue raised in a second hearing, which was whether the Department had jurisdiction to determine coverage in a proceeding seeking a penalty and indemnification. The court held that collateral estoppel did not apply because the issues in the two hearings were not identical. The court went on to hold that the Department did have jurisdiction, through its quasi-judicial power, to resolve the dispute regarding whether State Fund had rightfully canceled the policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. In the first case, a hearings officer determined that the Department did not have subject matter jurisdiction over the contractual dispute between plaintiff and State Fund, noting that proper adjudication would be in the District Court. The Department only has jurisdiction granted to it by statute, and the adjudication of insurance contracts does not fall within its jurisdiction. Plaintiff's failure to appeal the issue from the first hearing precluded it from arguing that the Department did have jurisdiction over the insurance contract dispute regarding a penalty and indemnification in the second hearing, so relitigation of the jurisdiction question in the second proceeding was barred by collateral estoppel. Further, it was error to give the Department jurisdiction to adjudicate the insurance contract dispute pursuant to its general quasi-judicial powers because an administrative agency may not assume jurisdiction without express delegation by the Legislature and there is no statutory delegation of authority to the Department to resolve contract disputes. Rather, regulation of insurance contracts is governed by the Insurance Commissioner and the relevant statutes relating to insurance disputes. The Department cannot and should not be adjudicating disputes between insurance companies and employers. The Workers' Compensation Court's conclusion that plaintiff was denied due process when it was prevented from presenting evidence relating to the insurance contract between itself and State Fund was also erroneous. Plaintiff had the opportunity to appeal the initial Department order to the Workers' Compensation Court, but failed to do so. Plaintiff also had the opportunity to pursue its remedies against State Fund in District Court, but again failed to do so. There is no denial of due process when a party fails to pursue the remedies provided. Auto Parts of Bozeman v. Employment Relations Div. Uninsured Employers' Fund, 2001 MT 72, 305 M 40, 23 P3d 193 (2001).

Equitable Estoppel Defense Defeated — Failure of Counterclaim to State Claim for Which Relief May Be Granted: The city of Whitefish sought and obtained a permanent injunction against Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), requiring removal of a sign that violated the city's ordinance. Town Pump's defense was that the city's approval of the original building plan equitably estopped the city's claim. Alternatively, Town Pump counterclaimed for the costs of remodeling the building. In order for the city to obtain a permanent injunction, it first had to overcome Town Pump's counterclaim that it was equitably estopped from doing so. The city successfully defeated the counterclaim. Absent a legal theory upon which to base damages, the city could not be held liable, so the District Court did not err in dismissing Town Pump's counterclaim for damages on grounds that it failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Revocation of Prior City Approval of Building Plan Based on Incorrect Conclusion That Proposed Fascia Did Not Constitute Sign — Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable — Jurisdiction Properly Retained: The city of Whitefish adopted a master plan that included a policy providing that commercial signs are a blighting factor and that contained strict limits on the size and character of signs. Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), submitted blueprints to the city for a new exterior, referred to as a fascia, that included lettering above an awning. The city manager reviewed the blueprints for the design before it was installed and, believing that only the written words but not the entire awning constituted a sign, approved the design and issued a building permit. When installed, the awning consisted of a band of translucent, raspberry-colored material 4 feet 11 inches high, extending about 162 feet across the entire length of the front of the building. Four rows of white fluorescent light tubes located behind the awning extended the entire length of the material and lit it from behind, and four neon lights were placed in front of the awning, which ran horizontally the entire length of the front of the building and approximately 42 feet along the rear of the building. The City Council concluded that the entire awning constituted a sign that violated the city ordinance because it was too big and directed Town Pump to remove the lighting. When Town Pump refused, the city sought an injunction prohibiting Town Pump from operating the lighting. Town Pump's defense was that the city's claims were barred under the doctrine of equitable estoppel, because the design had already been reviewed and the building permit issued. During a bench trial, the city manager testified that if he had realized that the fascia would create a lighting scheme that dwarfed the lettering and far exceeded general lighting needs, he would not have approved the building permit. The District Court issued a permanent injunction requiring removal of all lighting and reserved jurisdiction to determine whether the entire awning constituted a sign within the meaning of the ordinance, thereby justifying further injunctive relief. In a subsequent order, the court granted the city's motion for judgment on the pleadings on the counterclaim on grounds that the counterclaim failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Town Pump appealed. The Supreme Court held that original approval of the building permit was based on an incorrect misrepresentation of law, not fact, that the fascia did not constitute a sign. Thus, Town Pump failed to establish the first element of equitable estoppel, which requires a misrepresentation of fact. Further examination revealed that Town Pump failed to establish even one element of equitable estoppel, dooming its defense to the city's request for an injunction. The city's broad definition of sign was intended to include not only traditional signs, but also embellishments intended to draw attention to a traditional sign or to the business itself, so the District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering removal of the lighting. Further, under the city's broad request for relief, the court did not err in retaining jurisdiction to allow the city to return to court after the lighting was removed to consider an order requiring removal of the awning. The court simply exercised its discretion in a manner that allowed it to grant all relief necessary in the matter. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Liability Exemption Distinguished From Contractual Indemnification: Liss had a homeowner's policy with Safeco Insurance Co. (Safeco) that covered personal liability and medical payments to others. Liss shot Bruthers and claimed that it was an accident and that she was involuntarily intoxicated, but she was nevertheless convicted of aggravated assault after pleading nolo contendere. Bruthers was a nonresident and filed a federal action for compensation for physical injuries, emotional distress, and punitive damages, but eventually dropped the intentional tort claim. Liss gave Safeco a copy of the complaint, and Safeco provided Liss a defense under the personal liability provisions of the homeowner's policy. Safeco then filed a declaratory action, claiming that it had no duty to defend Liss in federal court or to indemnify Liss, based on its theory that: (1) Montana policy and 28-2-702 forbid the contractual indemnification of an individual for intentional and illegal acts; (2) the shooting did not constitute an occurrence as defined in the policy; (3) the intentional act and illegal act exclusions barred coverage; and (4) Liss was collaterally estopped to contest the issue based on the guilty plea. Safeco's motion was granted by summary judgment based on policy provisions excluding intentional and illegal acts from personal liability coverage and the undisputed fact that Liss pleaded guilty to aggravated assault. Both Liss and Bruthers appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a contract whose object is to exempt a person from future potential liability is clearly distinguishable from an insurance contract that indemnifies a person for another party's damages once liability is imposed. Therefore, Safeco's duty to defend and indemnify Liss could not be excused by a declaratory judgment based on public policy in 28-2-702. The question of whether the shooting incident constituted an insurable occurrence or accident remained shrouded in material facts and was inappropriate grounds for summary judgment. The shooting did not fall within the nexus of the per se intentional act case law, absent an admission or substantial evidence establishing the intent of the insured. Lastly, Safeco presented no evidence other than Liss's guilty plea to satisfy its burden of proof that Liss either intentionally shot Bruthers or that the shooting was an illegal act, so the Supreme Court addressed whether a nolo contendere guilty plea in a criminal matter is conclusive proof of intent or illegality and precludes relitigation of the issues in a subsequent civil proceeding. The court applied the three-part collateral estoppel rule in Teitelbaum Furs, Inc. v. Dominion Ins. Co., 375 P2d 439 (Calif. 1962), and Aetna Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277 (1984), the second prong of which requires a final judgment on the merits. A guilty plea as a matter of law fails the test because a guilty plea does not constitute a final judgment, so in this case, the plea to aggravated assault carried no collateral estoppel effect in the subsequent civil proceedings. Summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded. Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. Liss, 2000 MT 380, 303 M 519, 16 P3d 399, 57 St. Rep. 1621 (2000).

Parent-Child Relationship Thwarted — Equitable Estoppel Precluding Payment of Child Support: When Stiles and his wife separated, he was given responsibility for the care of his newborn son. Because Stiles was in the military at the time, he asked his sister, Cynthia, if she would care for the child for a short time while he fulfilled his duties in the Navy. Cynthia agreed, but immediately sought legal custody of the child, and physical custody of the child was ultimately granted to her by a California court. She often did not comply with court orders resulting from her custody efforts, including orders to allow Stiles visitation with the child. Stiles initially offered to pay for the child's care, but Cynthia refused any money, saying it was not needed. Nevertheless, Stiles did provide ongoing health insurance for the child. Over a decade later, Cynthia applied for and was granted public assistance, assigning any right to child support to the state. The Child Support Enforcement Division established Stiles's support obligation at $511 a month. Stiles asked Cynthia to sign a waiver of this obligation, but she refused. Stiles petitioned for judicial review, and the District Court remanded to an administrative law judge to make findings regarding Stiles's claim that Cynthia had waived her right to receive child support or that she was equitably estopped from asserting or assigning those rights. The administrative law judge found that the requisite elements of waiver and estoppel were present, and the District Court upheld the findings, holding that because Cynthia had no right to child support, she could not convey to the state rights greater than those to which she was entitled. The state appealed, asserting that the court erred when it held that estoppel and waiver applied to relieve Stiles of the obligation to provide support. The Supreme Court concluded that all six elements of equitable estoppel were met and that Cynthia had no right to receive child support from Stiles either retroactively or prospectively. Cynthia waived her right to support through her language and conduct. Nothing in the record indicated that the child's needs were not being met, and the court declined to order additional support. Although a parent is still responsible for support even in cases of voluntary relinquishment of parental rights, Stiles's relinquishment was involuntary. The court declined to hold Stiles to normal parental responsibilities under these unique circumstances, given that the child's best interests were being served, Stiles provided health insurance for the child at all times, and Stiles was thwarted by Cynthia in his attempts to have a parent-child relationship and was not attempting to exploit narrow legal technicalities to avoid undisputed court-ordered support obligations awarded at the time of dissolution. Stiles v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2000 MT 257, 301 M 482, 10 P3d 819, 57 St. Rep. 1054 (2000), distinguishing Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867 (1980), In re Marriage of Neiss, 228 M 479, 743 P2d 1022 (1987), and In re Support of Krug, 231 M 78, 751 P2d 171 (1988).

Claim for Punitive Damages Not Precluded by Estoppel — Issues of Previous Litigation Not Identical: Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for Finstad and an award of $400,000 in compensatory damages, as well as a determination that punitive damages were warranted. The District Court conducted a minitrial on the issue of punitive damages, and the jury awarded $83,000. Defendant contested the award of punitive damages and moved for dismissal on grounds that Finstad's claim was barred by collateral estoppel by virtual representation because the issue had already been litigated in two previous Lincoln County cases against defendant. Defendant contended that the issues were identical, that final judgment had been rendered, and that Finstad was a party to or in privity with a party in the previous cases and thus was virtually represented by those parties in the previous cases. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, finding that the issues were not identical, and also ruled for Finstad on the question of estoppel by virtual representation. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the record, noting that although some of the evidence and witnesses regarding the punitive damages claim were the same as in the previous cases, several significant factual distinctions and legal claims existed. Because the first element of collateral estoppel regarding identical parties was not met, the Supreme Court affirmed without reaching the question of estoppel by virtual representation. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000), following Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318 (1994).

Truth Regarding Value of Stock Discoverable by Party Claiming Estoppel — Defense Not Available: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds of equitable estoppel, arguing that stock had been mistakenly valued during the purchase of another business, that Spencer, majority shareholder and president of both Bitterroot and the company that was acquired, relied on Knutson's valuation to Spencer's detriment, and that Spencer was unaware of factors that Knutson failed to consider. Spencer may have been mistaken about the value of the stock, but he was in a position to discover all the information necessary to value it and participated in its valuation. The truth regarding the stocks' value was as discoverable to Spencer as to anyone else, and the District Court did not err in dismissing Bitterroot's defense of equitable estoppel. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000), following Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

Default Judgment Generally Carrying No Collateral Estoppel Effect: Plaintiff wife sought to recover damages that were sustained through a fire in the family home. However, plaintiff's husband's arson, fraud, concealment, misrepresentation, and false swearing were considered by the District Court to have been admitted through an otherwise valid default judgment based on the husband's failure to answer or appear. The court subsequently granted summary judgment to the insurance company on grounds that the default judgment served as a final judgment and found that plaintiff was collaterally estopped from contesting whether the husband committed the alleged acts. Applying the collateral estoppel rule in Aetna Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277, 41 St. Rep. 40 (1984), the Supreme Court noted that a default judgment generally carries no collateral estoppel effect. In this case, the defense was not available to the insurance company, which did not plead it in its answer, nor was the defense factored into the District Court's summary judgment order. Further, the husband's acts were never actually litigated, and he had received no opportunity to contest the issues in a prior proceeding, so the elements of collateral estoppel were not satisfied. Thus, plaintiff was not collaterally estopped from litigating any issues pertaining to whether the husband committed the alleged acts decreed by the default judgment. Lane v. Farmers Union Ins., 1999 MT 252, 296 M 267, 989 P2d 309, 56 St. Rep. 990 (1999). See also Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

DUI Suspension or Revocation Clarified — Law of Case Doctrine and Collateral Estoppel Inapplicable — Contempt Order Refused: Sanders was arrested for a second DUI in a 5-year period and filed an action in District Court seeking review of the facts of the arrest. The District Court and the Supreme Court upheld the arrest and noted that a 6-month suspension of Sanders' license would take place. Later, after the Department of Justice refused to reinstate the license after the 6-month period expired because 61-8-402 applied and required a revocation of Sanders' license for 1 year, Sanders brought a contempt action in the District Court asking that the Department be held in contempt for failure to reinstate his license after expiration of the 6-month period. Sanders argued that the 6-month period had become the law of the case and that the failure of the Department to follow that law was a contempt of the District Court. After reviewing the records of the District Court and its own record in the previous DUI action, the Supreme Court held that the law of the case doctrine was inapplicable. Citing Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), and Scott v. Scott, 283 M 169, 939 P2d 998 (1997), the Supreme Court explained that the law of the case doctrine applies only to the rulings of a court that are necessary to the decision and, in the case of the District Court's and Supreme Court's prior ruling in Sanders' DUI conviction, a determination that only a 6-month suspension was required under 61-8-402 was not necessary to either the District Court's or the Supreme Court's prior ruling. Those rulings, the Supreme Court said, concerned only whether the arresting officer had probable cause for the arrest. Thus, the Supreme Court held, the reference to a 6-month suspension in the previous opinions was dicta, there was no law of the case determined concerning the law governing license suspension or revocation, and therefore there could be no contempt for failure to reinstate Sanders' license. The Supreme Court also held that collateral estoppel was likewise inapplicable to require the Department to reinstate the license because collateral estoppel applies only to previously litigated issues and the period of license suspension or revocation of Sanders' license had not been previously litigated. Sanders v. St., 1998 MT 62, 288 M 143, 955 P2d 1356, 55 St. Rep. 272 (1998).

Identical Issue Element of Collateral Estoppel Not Met — Summary Judgment Improper: Collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, bars a party to a prior lawsuit from reopening a previously litigated issue. Identity of issues is the most crucial element of collateral estoppel. In order to satisfy this element, the identical issue or precise question must have been litigated in the prior action. As part of the prior action in this case, the real estate sellers, Fadnesses, were awarded damages from the buyer, Kuntz, for mortgage foreclosure, quiet title, and fraud. Fadnesses then brought an action against the real estate agent and the title insurance agent for negligence and breach of fiduciary duty during the transaction. Although both claims arose from the same events and both sought damages related to the sale of the property, the District Court erred in granting summary judgment based on collateral estoppel because the identical issue, or precise question, was not raised and decided in the earlier litigation. The grant of summary judgment was reversed. Fadness v. Cody, 287 M 89, 951 P2d 584, 54 St. Rep. 1513 (1997).

Misrepresentation Must Be of Fact, Not Law: The Billings VFW ceased operations in 1974 and allowed its pre-1947 liquor license to lapse based on the belief that the license was nontransferable. In 1979, the VFW reopened and was issued a new nontransferable all-beverages license. In 1991, the Supreme Court held that pre-1947 liquor licenses held by fraternal and veterans' organizations were not subject to quota restrictions passed in 1949 and therefore were freely transferable. (See Helena Aerie No. 16 v. Dept. of Revenue, 251 M 77, 822 P2d 1057 (1991).) After the 1991 court decision, the VFW received an offer to purchase its pre-1947 license for $165,000. The Department of Revenue refused to reissue the lapsed license or to declare that the current license held by the VFW was freely transferable. The VFW sought a declaratory judgment that its license be characterized as freely transferable on the basis that the Department was estopped from arguing that the license was nontransferable because the VFW had let the pre-1947 license expire based on the Department's misrepresentation that under the 1949 law, the license was nontransferable. The Supreme Court held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel did not apply because the misrepresentation had to be of fact and not a misrepresentation of law. Billings Post No. 1634 v. Dept. of Revenue, 284 M 84, 943 P2d 517, 54 St. Rep. 786 (1997), following Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131, 54 St. Rep. 293 (1997).

Failure to Plead Estoppel — Estoppel Raised in Trial Brief — No Evidence of Consent — No Motion to Amend Pleadings: Marsha sought to enforce a written conveyance of partnership property against the estate of a deceased partner by arguing that promissory and equitable estoppel prohibit the estate from claiming that the conveyance was invalid for lack of consideration. The Supreme Court held that estoppel must be pleaded and that, while estoppel was raised in Marsha's trial brief, there was no evidence in the record that the issue of estoppel was tried with the express or implicit consent of the estate and no evidence that Marsha moved to conform her answer to any estoppel evidence adduced before the District Court. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in holding that the issue of estoppel was not correctly before it. Nitzel v. Wickman, 283 M 304, 940 P2d 451, 54 St. Rep. 684 (1997).

Failure of Counteroffer Under Statute of Frauds — Handwritten Additions by Sellers' Agent Not Subscribed by Sellers — Part Performance and Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable: After Austin rejected a counteroffer on property that he was interested in buying, the agent, Everett, went to the office of the listing agent, Young, who contacted one of the two owners of the property by telephone. That owner, Cash, said that she would consider sale of the property for an additional $5,000 but that she would first have to discuss it with her brother, the other owner. Everett then added a handwritten paragraph to the rejected counteroffer, noting the sale of all of the property for $115,000 and faxed it back to Austin. When Austin received the revised counteroffer, he believed that it had been signed by Cash and, believing that a binding contract had been made, lowered the sale price of other property that he owned in California. Cash and her brother subsequently received and accepted an offer for their property from a different buyer, whereupon the Austins filed a lis pendens against Cash's property, preventing its sale to the other buyer. The Supreme Court held that because neither the sellers nor their agents signed or initialed the handwritten addition to the counteroffer, the contract was not properly subscribed by the sellers or their agents and therefore did not satisfy the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court also held that the action of the Austins in reducing the sale price of their California properties was an act in contemplation of eventual performance of the contract and not an act of part performance itself. For this reason, part performance did not excuse the application of the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court also held that in order for a court to order specific performance of a contract, there had to be a binding contract in the first place and held that because the additional language to the sale contract had not been subscribed, no contract existed. Finally, the Supreme Court held that promissory estoppel is inapplicable when a contract is clearly within the statute of frauds. Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Party May Not Seek Indemnification When That Party Found Negligent in Prior Suit: HKM had been hired to design a pipeline project and was subsequently sued for negligence by the general contractor for damages because of delays caused by pipe installed pursuant to HKM's specifications. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the general contractor. HKM then filed suit against the pipe manufacturer for indemnification for the amount for which HKM had been found liable. The Supreme Court held that indemnification would turn on the question of whether or not it was HKM's negligence or some other cause that resulted in the general contractor's damages and the question of whether HKM's negligence had already been established. Therefore, HKM was estopped from raising that issue a second time. HKM Associates v. NW. Pipe Fittings, Inc., 272 M 187, 900 P2d 302, 52 St. Rep. 692 (1995).

Collateral Estoppel — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: In a prior action, the plaintiff had filed a motion for a temporary restraining order and asking the court to hold the defendant in contempt for violation of a court order enjoining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's access to a peat resource on the defendant's land. The court, in the prior action, found the defendant not in contempt of court for the alleged actions. In a subsequent suit, the court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on collateral estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court's grant of summary judgment and dismissal of the complaint was proper when the plaintiff could not prove a cause of action without relitigation of the factual issues that had been previously resolved. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Collateral Estoppel Inapplicable When Issues and Relationship of Issues to Subject Matter Not the Same: Berlin sued Boedecker twice in actions involving fraudulent sales of royalties on oil well property. In the second suit, Boedecker argued that Berlin was precluded from litigation by the doctrine of collateral estoppel. After reviewing the prerequisites for the application of collateral estoppel, including the requirement that the issues of the second suit be the same as in the first suit, the Supreme Court held that collateral estoppel was inapplicable because the cases involved different contracts between the parties. Citing Stapleton v. First Sec. Bank, 207 M 248, 675 P2d 83 (1983), the Supreme Court held that because the precise question had not been litigated in the prior action, collateral estoppel was inapplicable. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994).

Change in Legal Theory Not Change in Previously Established Facts and Law: The first Haines case was remanded in part by the Supreme Court because the plaintiff was no longer entitled to punitive damages because of the elimination of tort damages for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. On remand, Haines amended the complaint to allege fraud in order to recover punitive damages. The trial court stated that it would treat the case as a trial de novo because of the new legal theories being presented by the plaintiff. The trial court determined that Haines had failed to prove fraud and was not entitled to any damages, actual or punitive. The Supreme Court ruled that the facts and law established in the first case applied in the second case and that the only question was whether under the previously determined facts and law the plaintiff could prove fraud. Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632, 51 St. Rep. 514 (1994), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 1998 MT 331, 292 M 277, 971 P2d 371, 55 St. Rep. 1346 (1998), and St. v. Boucher, 1999 MT 102, 294 M 296, 980 P2d 1058, 56 St. Rep. 431 (1999).

Claims Arising From Same Event — Identical Issue Element of Collateral Estoppel Not Met: Holtman's claims against a housing association in an initial suit and against a plumbing contractor in a subsequent suit both arose from the same event of asbestos contamination. However, the claim against the housing association alleged an intentional wrongful act, while the claim against the plumbing contractor was an issue of negligence. Therefore, even though the claims arose from the same event, the claims did not raise the identical issue or precise question. Thus, adjudication of the first suit did not bar the second suit on grounds of collateral estoppel. Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318, 51 St. Rep. 340 (1994), followed in Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000).

Equitable Estoppel Against Discontinuation of Worker's Benefits — Element of Representation or Concealment of Material Facts Not Satisfied: After Beery was injured in a fall from an oil rig in 1984, his employer's workers' compensation insurer, CNA Insurance Company, paid domiciliary care benefits for a period of time. Correspondence from CNA indicated that payment was being made to prevent future litigation but that CNA had reservations about the necessity for the payments and care. After Beery was evaluated by a medical panel that concluded that he did not need domiciliary care, CNA terminated benefits. The Supreme Court held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel did not apply to prevent CNA from terminating coverage because one of the criteria announced in Mellem v. Kalispell Laundry & Dry Cleaners, 237 M 439, 774 P2d 390 (1989), distinguished in Billings Post No. 1634 v. Dept. of Revenue, 284 M 84, 943 P2d 517, 54 St. Rep. 786 (1997), that there be an act amounting to a representation or concealment of material facts, had not been satisfied by Beery. Beery's reliance on a letter from the CNA adjuster that stated that the insurer did not contest Beery's right to care was taken out of context because the evidence showed that CNA did reserve the right to determine the value and extent of the care paid for. Other correspondence and the settlement agreement between the parties covering benefits during an earlier period of time support this finding. The Supreme Court also held that although Beery argues he did not have an opportunity to establish the satisfaction of all of the elements of the test for estoppel, the record shows that Beery had ample opportunity before the Workers' Compensation Court to establish the medical necessity for the care and, therefore, he cannot argue that he was put in a worse situation than he would have been in had there not been a representation or concealment. Beery v. Grace Drilling, 260 M 157, 859 P2d 429, 50 St. Rep. 980 (1993).

Elements of Collateral Estoppel: The three-prong test to determine whether collateral estoppel applies to a particular case was set forth in Boyd v. First Interstate Bank, 253 M 214, 833 P2d 149 (1992). The elements are: (1) the identical issue raised has been previously decided in a prior adjudication; (2) a final judgment on the merits was issued in the prior adjudication; and (3) the party against whom the plea is now asserted was a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication. The first prong, identity of the issues, is the most crucial and was not met in this case involving workers' compensation fraud. St. v. Young, 259 M 371, 856 P2d 961, 50 St. Rep. 839 (1993).

Contract Defense to Foreclosure After Borrower Promised, Pursuant to Bankruptcy Plan, Not to Contest Instruments: The borrower's statement in its bankruptcy proceeding that it would not contest the validity of notes, mortgages, or security interests of the bank in state court did not judicially estop the borrower from raising contract-related defenses to the bank's later foreclosure action based on those instruments because: (1) the bankruptcy proceeding was dismissed and the borrower thus did not succeed in the prior proceeding; and (2) the bank was not misled by the statement and allowing the borrower to change its position did not adversely affect the bank. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the bank did not rely on the statement and change its position adversely. For similar reasons, quasi-estoppel, which has not been defined by the Supreme Court but which is used interchangeably with equitable estoppel, does not apply. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Jurisdiction Declined — Review of Final Division Order Barred by Collateral Estoppel: The Workers' Compensation Court dismissed Martelli's petition for total disability benefits after Martelli failed to appeal the Employment Relations Division's final order within 10 working days of mailing. Because the interplay between the issue before the court and the issue previously litigated before the Division would have required relitigation of the issue of Martelli's disability that was decided by the Division, rehearing of the issue by the court was barred by collateral estoppel and jurisdiction by the court was properly declined. Martelli v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 258 M 166, 852 P2d 579, 50 St. Rep. 479 (1993).

Prior Adjudication of Common-Law Conversion as Collaterally Estopping Subsequent Claim of Statutory Conversion: Boyds contended that a previous action for common-law conversion did not collaterally estop subsequent litigation on a theory of statutory conversion. However, the prior litigation determined that Boyds had no interest in or right to checks deposited by the bank into the account of third-party defendants and that because the checks were correctly deposited, no conversion occurred. Because the subsequent cause depended on the same question of conversion that had already been determined, relitigation was properly barred by estoppel. Boyd v. First Interstate Bank of Kalispell, 253 M 214, 833 P2d 149, 49 St. Rep. 459 (1992), distinguishing Stapleton v. First Sec. Bank, 207 M 248, 675 P2d 83 (1983).

Principles of Estoppel Applicable to Employee Benefit Plans: Estoppel is available against a party when that party has made a knowing false representation or concealment of material facts to a party ignorant of the real facts with the intention that the other party should rely on the representation and the other party actually and detrimentally relies on the representation. The principles of equitable estoppel therefore apply to employee benefit plans. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992), following Dockray v. Phelps Dodge Corp., 801 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1986).

Applicability of Judicial Estoppel to Position Contrary to Earlier Pleadings: Just as judicial estoppel applies against a party who seeks to take a position contrary to an earlier sworn affidavit, so too does the doctrine equally apply to a party who seeks to take a position contrary to his pleadings in an earlier judicial proceeding. Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992), citing Rowland v. Klies, 223 M 360, 726 P2d 310 (1986), and Fey v. A.A. Oil Corp., 129 M 300, 285 P2d 578 (1955). See also Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994), and Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Estoppel Barring Issue of Teacher and Union Pursuing Separate Claims in Separate Forums: A terminated tenured union teacher filed an appeal under 20-3-210 at the same time the teacher's union filed a grievance alleging violation of the collective bargaining agreement. Unsatisfied with results at prior steps of the grievance procedure, the union requested arbitration, to which the school district refused to submit. Instead, the school district petitioned for an injunction to compel the union and the teacher to elect one forum in which to pursue their legal claims. The District Court denied the injunction, allowing both forums to proceed, and the school district did not appeal. Because these circumstances fulfilled the elements of the doctrine of collateral estoppel, namely that the issue had been decided in a prior adjudication, a final judgment was issued. Because the party against whom the plea was asserted was a party in the prior adjudication, the school district was estopped from further litigation on the issue of separate forums. Colstrip Faculty Ass'n, MEA/NEA v. Trustees, School District No. 19, 251 M 309, 824 P2d 1008, 49 St. Rep. 43 (1992).

Consent Agreements Not Issue Preclusive — Collateral Estoppel Inappropriate: Consent agreements do not generally have an issue preclusive effect on future litigants unless that is the intent of the parties. When an agreement lacked evidence of an intent to preclude future litigation on the issues, the requisite elements of collateral estoppel were not present and application of the doctrine was inappropriate. Linder v. Missoula County, 251 M 292, 824 P2d 1004, 49 St. Rep. 26 (1992).

No Adverse Possession of Royalty Interest by Color of Title Found — Estoppel Applied: Defendants in an action to quiet title to a royalty interest argued that they held color of title to the interest by virtue of an invalid tax deed and subsequent conveyances. However, defendants also argued that the reservation of a royalty interest by Rosebud County, their ultimate grantor, was invalid. Citing Russell v. Texas Co., 238 F2d 636 (1956), the Supreme Court held that the defendants could not attack a royalty reservation in a title under and through which defendants claimed adverse possession by color of title. The court held that defendants were estopped from attacking Rosebud County's royalty reservation and that because defendants' grant expressly subjects them to the county's reservation of a royalty interest, defendants had no color of title to their royalty. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 251 M 128, 822 P2d 1074, 48 St. Rep. 1124 (1991).

Element of Identity of Issues Not Present on Question of Collateral Estoppel — Partial Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Anderson sought judicial review of the seizure and suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403, which limits review to three underlying issues. The District Court's findings on these issues served as the bases for making the ultimate determination of whether Anderson was entitled to a license or whether his license was subject to suspension. After the District Court found that Anderson was entitled to a license, Anderson moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the state's civil liability based on the doctrine of collateral estoppel. However, the question of liability was never considered as part of the judicial review proceeding, so denial of the partial summary judgment motion was proper on the grounds that the crucial estoppel element of identity of issues did not exist. Anderson v. St., 250 M 18, 817 P2d 699, 48 St. Rep. 871 (1991), distinguished in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Counterclaims Entered After Judgment Not Barred by Estoppel: A judgment can bar counterclaims in existence at the time the judgment was entered, but it cannot bar claims that arose after its entry. Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991).

Issues Fully Litigated in Federal Court — State Court Action Barred by Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel: When the same facts and issues formed the basis of both a federal and a state court case and the case was fully litigated and final judgment was entered in federal court, dismissal by summary judgment in state court was appropriate based on the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Finch, 246 M 359, 805 P2d 1331, 47 St. Rep. 2154 (1990).

Identity of Class Action Parties Same for Purposes of Collateral Estoppel: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued the state and an assistant state fire inspector for negligence in failing to discover construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, claiming that the inspector's negligence ultimately resulted in a fire that destroyed part of the condominiums. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing the state and the inspector. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly applied collateral estoppel against the plaintiffs based on previous litigation involving structural defects in the same property. The Supreme Court found that the District Court took judicial notice of the previous litigation, that the construction of the fireplaces was an issue in that previous litigation as shown by the claims in the complaint in that litigation, and that the plaintiffs in the present case knew or should have known of the defects in the fireplaces. In order to apply collateral estoppel there must be, inter alia, an identity of parties between the present case and the previous case. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs, suing as a class in the present case, were the same as the plaintiffs in the previous case, thus fulfilling the requirements for the application of collateral estoppel. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Summary Judgment as Final Judgment on Merits for Purposes of Collateral Estoppel: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued the state and an assistant state fire inspector for negligence in failing to discover construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, claiming that the inspector's negligence ultimately resulted in a fire that destroyed part of the condominiums. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing the state and the inspector. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly applied collateral estoppel against the plaintiffs based on previous litigation involving structural defects in the same property. The Supreme Court found that the District Court took judicial notice of the previous litigation, that the construction of the fireplaces was an issue in that previous litigation, and that the plaintiffs in the present case knew or should have known of the defects in the fireplaces. In order to apply collateral estoppel there must be, inter alia, a final judgment on the merits in a previous case. The summary judgment to which the plaintiffs in the present case were a party, dismissing other defendants in that previous case, was a final judgment on the merits of the case. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Failure to Adequately Disclose Potential Lawsuit in Bankruptcy Disclosure Statement: The plaintiffs' suit against the bank for tortious interference with their business affairs was dismissed by the lower court on the grounds that the plaintiffs were equitably estopped from bringing the action. The Supreme Court affirmed on the grounds that in a previous bankruptcy proceeding, the plaintiffs did not adequately disclose their potential action against the bank. The court further stated that the bank had agreed to a plan of reorganization containing no reference to the potential suit and it would not be fair to let the plaintiffs bring an action when the bank may not have agreed to the reorganization plan if the plan had disclosed the plaintiffs' intent to seek recovery from the bank. Cleasby v. Sec. Fed. Sav. Bank, 243 M 306, 794 P2d 697, 47 St. Rep. 1247 (1990).

Ex-Wife Not Named in Foreclosure Action Against Husband: In a prior suit, the defendant had brought a foreclosure action against the plaintiff's ex-husband but did not name the plaintiff as a party. In the first action, the court had allowed the foreclosure on the basis that an equitable mortgage existed. In the second suit, the defendant argued that the plaintiff's rights in the property had been extinguished on the basis that the original sales agreement was a contract for deed rather than an equitable mortgage. The Supreme Court ruled that the defendant was collaterally estopped from arguing that a contract for deed existed when in the first suit, a final judicial decision held that the agreement constituted an equitable mortgage. Smith v. Schweigert, 241 M 54, 785 P2d 195, 47 St. Rep. 77 (1990).

Defendants Collaterally Estopped From Asserting Counterclaim When Original and Exclusive Jurisdiction With Federal Courts: The land bank, pursuant to a foreclosure order obtained in federal bankruptcy proceedings, sued the defendants in state court for unlawful detainer. The defendants counterclaimed, alleging fraud and bad faith. The Supreme Court ruled that the defendants were collaterally estopped from bringing their counterclaims because the federal courts had exclusive and original jurisdiction over the issues presented by the defendants. Fed. Land Bank v. Reilly, 240 M 147, 783 P2d 917, 46 St. Rep. 2011 (1989).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Defendant, who was successful in having an action dismissed on a Rule 12(b) motion, failed to file a notice of entry of judgment. The plaintiffs' 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal did not run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Jury Instructions — Equity Issues in Discretion of District Court: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The District Court refused the instructions, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of equitable issues rests solely within the discretion of the District Court. Equity aids the vigilant. The plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Paternity Contested After Adjudication of Marital Dissolution — Relitigation Barred by Collateral Estoppel: When paternity was contested in response to an action to collect past child support payments, the District Court properly ruled that the issue of paternity had previously been adjudicated during the marriage dissolution proceeding and that relitigation of the issue was barred by collateral estoppel. In re Marriage of Holland, 224 M 414, 730 P2d 410, 43 St. Rep. 2293 (1986).

Unfair Labor Practices — Due Process — Collateral Estoppel: In an action charging unfair labor practices, an employee was collaterally estopped from relitigating the issue of whether his due process rights were violated by the 3-year delay between the filing of his charges and the administrative hearing on the charges. The issue was previously decided, a final judgment was rendered, and the party against whom the claim was advanced remained the same or was privy of the earlier party. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

Applicability of Collateral Estoppel to Judgment Made in Another State: Aetna Life Insurance Company (Aetna) contended that the Montana District Court erred in failing to give collateral estoppel effect to a South Dakota District Court judgment. Aetna asserted that the South Dakota decision, holding that Aetna was not guilty of fraud, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana and conclusively defeated the fraud allegations. The Montana District Court apparently declined full faith and credit because that decision was on appeal to the South Dakota Supreme Court at the time of the Montana trial. The Montana Supreme Court found that this approach ignored the fact that in South Dakota a judgment on appeal can have collateral estoppel or res judicata effect; therefore, the judgment was entitled to the same effect in Montana, since the requirements for applicability of collateral estoppel outlined in Aetna Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277, 41 St. Rep. 40 (1984), were met. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. McElvain, 221 M 138, 717 P2d 1081, 43 St. Rep. 697 (1986).

Prohibition on Raising for First Time on Appeal: The affirmative defense of estoppel could not be raised by defendant for the first time on appeal. Gebert Logging, Inc. v. Palin, 220 M 405, 716 P2d 200, 43 St. Rep. 481 (1986).

Siting Act Decision Not Estoppel for PSC Ratemaking Decision: In 1973, Montana Power Co. (MPC) filed an application for a certificate of environmental compatibility and public need for Colstrip Units 3 and 4 under the Montana Major Facility Siting Act. In granting the certificate, the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Board of Environmental Review) found that there was a need for the energy which would be produced and that the units would serve the public interest, convenience, and necessity. After Unit 3 was completed, MPC filed an application with the Public Service Commission (PSC) to increase electric rates to reflect Unit 3 in its rate base. At the rate hearing, the PSC took evidence regarding whether Unit 3 was "used and useful". MPC moved to strike this testimony, contending the PSC was precluded from considering this by the certificate of need issued under the Siting Act. MPC filed an application for original jurisdiction and declaratory judgment or other appropriate relief with the Supreme Court. The PSC later concluded Unit 3 was not used and useful and could not be included in the rate base. MPC argued that the PSC was collaterally estopped from considering whether Unit 3 was "used and useful". The court held that the need issue determined in the siting process was not identical to the used and useful issue, therefore collateral estoppel was not applicable. MPC also argued that because of the certificate of need, the state was promissorily estopped from excluding Unit 3 from the rate base. MPC contended that issuance of a certificate of need under the Siting Act established a contractual relationship between the state and MPC. The court held that issuance of a certificate by a governmental authority to engage in conduct that would be improper without a certificate does not create a contractual relationship between the state and the licensee. Neither the Siting Act nor the certificate of need contemplate a promise that a facility will be included in a utility's rate base. Promissory estoppel was also inapplicable. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 214 M 82, 692 P2d 432, 41 St. Rep. 2332 (1984).

No Estoppel Where Defendants Admitted Fact That They Claimed Plaintiff Was Estopped From Asserting: In June 1979, plaintiff filed a complaint for damages alleging that defendants, in July 1977, negligently caused herbicides to be sprayed in a springwater ditch leading to plaintiff's pond and that the herbicides killed 32,411 rainbow trout which plaintiff was raising in his pond for commercial resale. In his complaint, plaintiff alleged an economic loss of $17,139.60. In 1978, plaintiff had submitted an itemized claim to defendants for $5,000. In June 1981, plaintiff filed requests for admission under Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants failed to respond for 1 ½ years, so the plaintiff's allegations were deemed admitted. One of those allegations was that plaintiff sustained $15,941 in damages. The District Court denied defendants' argument that plaintiff was estopped by reason of the 1978 claim from asserting damages of more than $5,000. The Supreme Court affirmed. Detert v. Lake County, 207 M 460, 674 P2d 1097, 41 St. Rep. 76 (1984).

Criminal Conviction — Collateral Estoppel to Raising Same Issue in Civil Action: Where the defendant pet shop owner was convicted of arson in setting his shop afire and the plaintiff insurer of surrounding businesses later brought a civil action, hoping to prove that the defendant owner was negligent in causing the fire, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant insurance company of the owner, holding that the issue of the manner in which the fire was caused (i.e., with criminal intent) had already been conclusively determined. Under the rationale of Teitelbaum Furs, Inc. v. Dominion Ins. Co., 25 Cal. Rptr. 559, 375 P2d 439 (1962), the doctrine of collateral estoppel applies to prevent the relitigation of the issue of whether the defendant owner negligently or intentionally caused the fire. Because the plaintiff insurance company was in privity with the defendant owner in the criminal action, the plaintiff is barred from relitigating that issue. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277, 41 St. Rep. 40 (1984), followed, with regard to test for applicability of collateral estoppel, in Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991), and Lane v. Farmers Union Ins., 1999 MT 252, 296 M 267, 989 P2d 309, 56 St. Rep. 990 (1999), and also followed in Estate of Eide v. Tabbert, 272 M 180, 900 P2d 292, 52 St. Rep. 689 (1995).

Estoppel by Judgment — Test: Plaintiff's suit against the Myllymakis failed because of a complete lack of proof on his part. He sued Chamberlain for the same alleged wrongs to the same property during the same time period. The suit was barred by estoppel by judgment. That Chamberlain was not a party to the Myllymaki suit did not preclude application of the bar, as strict mutuality of parties is no longer a necessity in such situations. The more relevant considerations are whether: (1) the party adversely affected by estoppel has had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the critical issues; (2) the assertion of estoppel by a stranger to the original judgment would create analagous results in the latter case; (3) the party affected by estoppel has sound reasons why he or she should not be bound by the previous judgment; (4) the previous judgment was the result of thorough litigation; and (5) there was an appeal from the original judgment. Beckman v. Chamberlain, 673 P2d 480, 40 St. Rep. 2044 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports), followed in Lindey's, Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 317 (1994).

Raising Statute of Limitations and Estoppel in Motion — When Allowed: The affirmative defenses of the Statute of Limitations and estoppel by judgment may be raised in a motion to dismiss rather than in the answer when the complaint on its face shows that the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations and the judgment relied on for the estoppel by judgment defense was made in the same court that is asked to pass on the motion. Beckman v. Chamberlain, 673 P2d 480, 40 St. Rep. 2044 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Defendant Not Judicially Estopped to Contest Facts on Appeal — Beneficial Use of Water: When the defendants, by cross-appeal in a water rights action, argued that there was insufficient evidence to support the District Court's finding of the beneficial use by the plaintiffs of 500 miner's inches of water a year, the Supreme Court held that the defendants were not estopped from raising that argument by virtue of statements in their pleadings and motions indicating recognition of plaintiffs' right to the water. Upon a thorough examination of all the pleadings and statements of attorneys at trial, the court held that the issue of the plaintiffs' beneficial use had been an issue throughout the trial, that the defendants had never changed their position in this regard, and that in any event, the plaintiffs' right to the water could not be created by an admission of the defendants but only by the plaintiffs' sustaining their burden of proof upon the issue at trial. Grimsley v. Estate of Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85, 40 St. Rep. 1585 (1983).

Evidence of Estoppel Admitted Without Objection — Pleading Unnecessary: Although estoppel is an affirmative defense and thus should be specially pleaded, if evidence of estoppel is admitted without objection, pleading is not necessary. Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Proof Allowed on Affirmative Defense Not Pleaded: In a quiet title action, defendant filed a general denial as well as a cross-claim. Plaintiff replied to the cross-claim. This rule prevented defendant from pleading further and asserting the affirmative defense of estoppel. He was entitled to present evidence on that issue, because where there has been no opportunity to allege estoppel, it may be put into evidence as if alleged. Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Estoppel Inapplicable Where Claimant Has Knowledge: In an appeal from a summary judgment decreeing that a life estate claimed by appellant was void, the Supreme Court held that appellants were not barred by equitable estoppel from claiming a life estate because respondent asserting estoppel had sufficient knowledge and access to knowledge of facts underlying the contract that created the life estate. Harbeck v. Orr, 192 M 243, 627 P2d 1217, 38 St. Rep. 668 (1981).

RELEASE

Absence of Evidence of Rescission, Release, Waiver, or Accord and Satisfaction of Contract — Reversal Warranted: Plaintiffs owned shares in defendant's corporation and sought to sell the shares back to the corporation. The corporation sent a letter offering to purchase the shares for $64,933.60, and plaintiffs were instructed that to accept the offer, they were to sign the back of the stock certificate and mail it to the corporation. Plaintiffs did so, but included with the certificate a letter stating that by accepting the offer, plaintiffs reserved their rights under federal and state law. The corporation found the language unacceptable and declined to purchase the shares, instead returning the certificate to plaintiffs. Concerned about possessing a signed stock certificate, plaintiffs ultimately visited the corporation and surrendered the endorsed certificate in exchange for a new one. Plaintiffs then brought a breach of contract suit claiming $64,933.60 in damages, asserting that the corporation had breached its offer to repurchase the stock. The corporation denied that a contract offer existed, arguing that plaintiffs' reply was not an acceptance but rather a counteroffer, and asserted that even if a contract did exist, plaintiffs had waived their rights under it by forfeiting the endorsed certificate in favor of a new one and by failing to immediately assert their rights under the contract. A jury found that the corporation had breached its contract, causing damages in the amount of $64,933.60, but then entered a verdict for the corporation on grounds that the corporation had proved at least one of its affirmative defenses of rescission, release, waiver, or accord and satisfaction. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that only in rare cases should a jury verdict be set aside but reversed the verdict nevertheless on grounds that, even drawing all legitimate inferences in favor of the corporation, there was a complete absence of probative evidence supporting any of the corporation's affirmative defenses. The case was remanded for entry of judgment of $64,933.60 in favor of plaintiffs. Benson v. Diverse Computer Corp., 2004 MT 114, 321 M 140, 89 P3d 981 (2004), followed in Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Misinterpretation of Testimony Regarding Alleged Relinquishment of Claim — Reversible Error: Kane sued Morgan to recover the costs of two wells that Kane drilled on Morgan's property for which payment was not made. At one point in his testimony, Kane stated that he charged Morgan for the first 150 feet of drilling, but gave Morgan the rest of the 400-foot hole, and then said, "Yeah, I give it to him. I think I'd give it all to him." The District Court interpreted the statement as a relinquishment by Kane for payment of the entire well and compensated Kane only for the cost of the other well. Kane appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828 (2000), to determine if the finding was clearly erroneous: (1) whether the finding was supported by substantial evidence in the record; (2) whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if the first two factors are met, the Supreme Court is still left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake was made. In this case, it was held that the District Court committed a mistake and misinterpreted Kane's testimony, so the Supreme Court reversed. Neither party interpreted the remark as a gift by Kane of the entire well. The comment was not followed up by either party during direct or cross-examination. Counsel for Morgan continued questioning both Kane and other witnesses as if Kane had not relinquished his claim, nor did Morgan assert relinquishment in the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Kane v. Morgan, 2001 MT 182, 306 M 207, 32 P3d 747 (2001).

Materiality of Claim of Failure of Consideration to Contract Required Before Rescission Available as Remedy — Partial Failure of Consideration — Meltdown of Ice Cream Distributorship Agreement: Under Johnson v. Meiers, 118 M 258, 164 P2d 1012 (1946), a breach that goes to only part of the consideration, that is incidental and subordinate to the main purpose of the contract, and that may be compensated in damages does not warrant rescission. The injured party is still bound to perform that party's part of the contract, and the only remedy for the breach consists of the damages suffered from the breach. By contrast, under Van Hook v. Baum, 245 M 407, 800 P2d 151, 47 St. Rep. 1883 (1990), a party may rescind if, through the fault of the other party, consideration fails in whole or in part. In clarifying the disparate holdings, the Supreme Court noted that the term "failure of consideration", as either a claim or an affirmative defense, does not relate to the absence of consideration or whether there is good consideration for the formation of a valid, enforceable contract, but rather the term pertains to the failure of one party's performance, which then suspends or excuses the performance of the other party pursuant to the terms of a valid contract. Failure of consideration is generally synonymous with a material breach of performance of a contract, rather than whether a contract was enforceable because of the absence of the essential element of consideration. Thus, a claim or affirmative defense of failure of consideration that gives rise to the equitable remedy of rescission requires a showing by the claiming party that the other party's failure to perform was, in fact, material to the contract, and whether consideration was sufficient or good is immaterial. To reconcile this holding with 28-2-1711, the court went on to hold that failure of part of a promised performance may warrant rescission, but only if the claiming party proves that the deficient part of the other party's performance was material to the contract. If the failure to perform was not material, rescission is not an available remedy, performance cannot be excused, and the claiming party "may only be entitled to money damages for breach". Here, the District Court erred when it did not determine whether Norwood's failure to assign an ice cream distributor agreement to Service Distributing, Inc. (SDI), was material to the transaction as a whole. Absent that finding, SDI could not as a matter of law rescind the contract and be excused from further performance of its obligation to Norwood, so the case was remanded to determine whether a material breach occurred. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000), followed in Eschenbacher v. Anderson, 2001 MT 206, 306 M 321, 34 P3d 87 (2001). See also Flaig v. Gramm, 1999 MT 181, 295 M 297, 983 P2d 396, 56 St. Rep. 710 (1999).

Exceptions to Requirement for Matching Terms in Offer Made Under Right of First Refusal: A right of first refusal does not give the rightholder the power to compel an unwilling owner to sell, but merely requires the owner, when and if a decision is made to sell, to offer the property first to the rightholder at the stipulated price. The preemptive right ripens into an option when the owner elects to sell, at which point the owner has the contractual obligation to offer the property to the optionee on the same terms and conditions as the offer made to the owner by a third party. (See 77 Am. Jur. 2d Vendor Purchaser § 40 (1997).) In order that each party to the contract receives the benefit bargained for, under Miller v. LeSea Broadcasting, Inc., 87 F3d 224 (7th Cir. 1996), three exceptions to the requirement for the exact matching of terms have been recognized: (1) the grantor of the option can waive exact matching; (2) proper names need not be matched; and (3) the grantor of the option may not act in bad faith, including procuring from the third party terms that the grantor knows are unacceptable to the optionee for the purpose of discouraging exercise of the right of first refusal. As long as the conditions of the sale are commercially reasonable, imposed in good faith, and not specifically designed to defeat the right of first refusal, the optionee is obliged to match the offer if the right is to be exercised. Here, although attorneys for the parties engaged in discussions concerning whether poison pill provisions included in an offer were an attempt to dissuade exercise of the right of first refusal, the discussions were not found to impact the effective exercise of the right, so the District Court's conclusion that the right had been properly exercised was not in error. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999). See also Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990), and Lee v. Shaw, 251 M 118, 822 P2d 1061 (1992).

Involuntary Satisfaction of Judgment — Request for Stay of Execution Not Required: Following entry and satisfaction of judgment in District Court, the parties were aware of a contemplated appeal, but no stay of execution was requested or supersedeas bond posted. After plaintiff acquired title to the disputed property pursuant to the judgment, defendant filed a notice of appeal and lis pendens, effectively preserving the status quo pending appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss, contending that by voluntarily satisfying the judgment, defendants waived their right to appeal. Applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996), the Supreme Court held that the parties' course of conduct illustrated the involuntary, rather than voluntary nature of the satisfaction of judgment. Because satisfaction was involuntary, the right to appeal was not waived. Further, under former Rule 7, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a party may request a stay of execution, but the request is not mandatory, even though a party choosing not to seek a stay runs the risk of having the appeal become moot. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was denied. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Mutual Mistake of Fact Sufficient to Set Aside Release in FELA Action: A release in an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, may be set aside on the basis of mutual mistake of fact in executing the release. A mutual mistake of fact is sufficient to avoid a release only when the mistake goes to the nature of the injury and the mistaken belief is held by both parties. In the present case, Bevacqua signed releases purporting to settle all injury claims, but was lulled into signing because of repeated assurances by doctors who examined him at the employer's request, assured him that nothing was wrong, and authorized him to return to work. Under FELA, this mutual mistake of fact was sufficient to set aside the releases. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Callen v. Pa. RR Co., 332 US 625, 92 L Ed 242, 68 S Ct 296 (1948), and Counts v. Burlington N. RR Co., 952 F2d 1136 (9th Cir. 1991), and followed in Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Conduct Constituting Waiver of Right of First Refusal to Purchase Property: After a determination by the Supreme Court in Lee v. Shaw, 251 M 118, 822 P2d 1061 (1992), that the Lees' lease-management agreement contained a valid right of first refusal to purchase ranch property, notification of intent to sell was given and extensive sale negotiations were begun to finalize purchase of the ranch. Although none of the various proposed contracts was signed by all of the parties, an agreement was reached to complete the sale on a specified closing date, thus triggering the running of the preemptive right to purchase, which was set by the agreement at 45 days. However, the Lees failed to show up for the closing, despite an extension of the closing date. The District Court properly determined that the Lees' actions constituted an intentional relinquishment of their right of first refusal and thus a waiver of that right. In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993).

Release of Claims for Defective Condominiums Upheld: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by a fully performed release executed by the association on behalf of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed that the release did not include undisclosed defects and that it was obtained by fraud. The Supreme Court held that the language of the release was broad enough to include the claims against the defendants and that any cause of action for fraud was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Plaintiff's Actions Constituting Waiver and Release of Claim for Past Salary: The plaintiff claimed that he was owed additional money in the form of conversion compensation for a period of time that had occurred 17 years prior to his filing a claim. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's signing of 19 1-year contracts without complaint and his acceptance of a retirement agreement containing a promise not to pursue any past wage grievances constituted a waiver and release. Sperry v. Mont. St. Univ., 239 M 25, 778 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1482 (1989), followed in In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993), with regard to waiver of the right of first refusal to purchase property.

Challenge of Validity of Release on Basis of Unconscionability — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff signed a release for personal injuries with an insurance company in exchange for $8,900. Plaintiff later sued insureds, who were granted summary judgment after pleading the affirmative defense of release. However, a release is governed by contract law and may be rescinded for the same reasons that allow rescission of a contract. Therefore, the validity of a release may be challenged on the basis of unconscionability. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment after finding the release was unconscionable based on: (1) plaintiff's dire financial situation, lack of education and legal advice, and vulnerability; (2) substantial uncertainty as to the extent of injury and future prognosis at the time of settlement; and (3) haste in executing the release. Taken together, the circumstances raised an issue of fact whether justice was done, precluding summary judgment. Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Cashing of Check Evidence of Full Satisfaction of Claim: In settlement of a personal injury claim, plaintiff cashed defendant's check, which action constituted a full satisfaction of the claim. Despite plaintiff's subsequent contention that he did not intend to fully and finally release the claim, the trial court found that the check was tendered to plaintiff under such circumstances that he was bound to know it was offered in full settlement of the claim, resulting in an accord and satisfaction between the parties and a discharge of plaintiff's whole claim. A disputed, unliquidated obligation may be extinguished if the obligated party offers to exchange an amount different from or less than the obligation in full settlement of the obligation and if the party owed the obligation agrees to accept and does accept the amount offered in full settlement of the obligation. Boyer v. Ettelman, 235 M 323, 767 P2d 324, 46 St. Rep. 21 (1989), followed in Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Separate Suits Against Copartner and Bank — Settlement With One — No Release of Other: Bank depositor sued his bank and his partner in separate actions after the partner induced the bank to change a signature card requiring both partners' signatures so that defendant partner could make withdrawals on his signature alone. Depositor did not release his claim against the bank when he settled with his partner because: (1) the claims against the two were not based entirely on the same conduct; (2) assuming the two were joint tortfeasors, any release of one might specifically exclude the other; and (3) nothing in the record indicated either a release or nonrelease of the bank. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Former Rule 8(d). Effect of failure to deny

Failure to State Legal Defense in Answer — Judgment on Pleadings Proper: Plaintiff filed an action for damages for breach of contract and nonpayment of an account. Defendant filed a response, after which plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings. The District Court granted the motion, and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed after holding that defendant failed either to deny any of the material allegations in the complaint or to allege any affirmative defense to defeat the action. Although pleadings are to be taken in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, defendant's failure to state a legal defense warranted judgment on the pleadings. Neil Consultants, Inc. v. Lindeman, 2006 MT 80, 331 M 514, 134 P3d 43 (2006).

Failure to File Timely Reply to Counterclaim — Default Judgment Proper: The District Court directed plaintiff to respond to a counterclaim within 10 days. Plaintiff failed to comply within the designated time, so default judgment was entered against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed on grounds that the default judgment should be set aside under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed. As an attorney, plaintiff was sufficiently literate and intelligent to understand the document presented by opposing counsel and to respond accordingly. Any mistake complained of by plaintiff did not rise to a level warranting setting aside of the default judgment. Plaintiff did not meet the burden of proof under Rule 60(b) to set aside the judgment and did not establish any abuse of discretion by the trial court, so the default judgment was affirmed. Tschida v. Rowe, 2003 MT 192, 316 M 503, 74 P3d 1043 (2003).

Power of Trial Court on Remand — No Provision Regarding Effect of Failure to Deny in Rules of Appellate Procedure: In 1993, Brown filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, arguing that prison officials had miscalculated his parole eligibility date. The Supreme Court denied that petition. In 1996, Brown filed a 42 U.S.C. 1983 complaint in District Court seeking to address alleged deprivations of his rights by prison officials under federal law, but the complaint was dismissed for failure to state a claim. The District Court concluded that the issues raised in the complaint were the same as those raised in the 1993 writ and were thus barred by collateral estoppel. Brown appealed, and in an unpublished opinion (Brown v. St., No. 96-651), the Supreme Court remanded, concluding that the District Court had mischaracterized the issues in the 1993 writ and that three of the claims were not barred by collateral estoppel. On remand, after an unexplained delay of 4 years, the District Court dismissed Brown's remaining claims, holding that they were not cognizable under federal law. Brown appealed again, arguing that the District Court erred by granting judgment to the state without first holding a hearing and asserting that under this rule, the state's failure to respond to the issue in its brief constituted an admission that Brown was correct on the issue. However, Brown misapplied this rule to these proceedings. The Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) do not contain a similar provision regarding the effect of failure to deny. Further, the remand order did not require the District Court to hold a hearing. On remand, the trial court is free to make any order or decision in further progress of the case that is not inconsistent with the appellate court's decision. The District Court was affirmed. Brown v. St., 2002 MT 58, 309 M 106, 46 P3d 42 (2002).

Division of Marital Estate — Contention of Admission by Failure to Answer "Counterpetition": Where petitioner in an action for dissolution of marriage asked for an equitable apportionment of the marital estate and spouse in "counterpetition" asked for an award of 50% of the marital estate, petitioner had no duty to answer the "counterpetition" because entire estate was before the court for equitable distribution; thus lack of response by petitioner to "counterpetition" is not an admission by failure to deny under this rule. Knudson v. Knudson, 186 M 8, 606 P2d 130 (1980).

Admissions — No Further Proof Necessary: No further proof of heirship was required and summary judgment was proper where portion of paragraph in complaint alleging heirship was admitted in answer. Sikora v. Sikora, 160 M 27, 499 P2d 808 (1972).

No Reply to Affirmative Defenses Required: The stipulation in this rule that averments in answer to which no responsive pleading is required are denied, read in conjunction with Rule 7(a), does not compel the plaintiff to reply to an answer averring the affirmative defense of a release. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Unanswered Affirmative Defenses — Effect: Defendant's contention that an unanswered affirmative defense is admitted was erroneous. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Surreply as Superfluous Pleading — No Admission Made: Where plaintiff in a quiet title action in his reply set up three affirmative defenses, and defendant filed a surreply denying two of such defenses but not the third, that fact was immaterial since all allegations of new matter in a reply are to be considered controverted by the adverse party. Sherburne Mercantile Co. v. Bonds, 115 M 464, 145 P2d 827 (1944).

Reply to New Matter in Answer Not Required: An allegation of new matter in the answer, to which a reply is not required, is considered controverted. A reply is required only to allegations constituting a counterclaim. Brophy v. Downey, 26 M 252, 67 P 312 (1902).

Judgment on the Pleadings Held Proper: Judgment on the pleadings is proper when the complaint is sufficient, none of its material allegations are denied, and no affirmative matter is alleged to defeat the action. Mont. Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Milling Co., 23 M 311, 58 P 870 (1899).

Former Rule 8(e). Pleading to be concise and direct — consistency

Form of Pleading 643
Alternate or Inconsistent Defenses 645

FORM OF PLEADING

Error in Allowing Amendment of Pleadings in Parental Rights Termination Case to Include New Theory — Lack of Notice Violative of Due Process Rights: During a parental rights termination hearing, the District Court allowed the state to amend the pleadings to include a new theory that the mother had abandoned her children. The mother's counsel objected for lack of notice. The state asserted that although abandonment may not have been included in the original pleadings as a separate ground for termination, there were facts in the original petition that supported a claim for abandonment and that the mother was thus on notice that the state intended to present evidence that would support a theory of abandonment. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fundamental liberty interest associated with parental rights must be protected with fundamentally fair procedures, including the due process requirement that a parent receive notice and be allowed the opportunity to be heard. Generally, a District Court cannot grant leave to amend the pleadings arbitrarily or perfunctorily, and although there are cases when the Supreme Court will allow a party to amend pleadings in order for a case to proceed efficiently on the merits, this was not one of those cases. The termination petition as a whole did not provide the mother with sufficient notice on the charge of abandonment. Although some of the facts may have been applicable to abandonment, the mother should not have been required to glean from those facts which claims the state could bring. Rather, the state was required to articulate the claims that it expected to raise, and allowing amendment of the pleadings during the hearing to include a theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Satisfaction of Elements of Estoppel as Question of Proof, Not Pleading: Poeppel asserted in District Court that he was misled by a county representative as to the proper time to file a grievance and that this act estopped the county from arguing that the request for a grievance was untimely. The county argued on appeal that the claim of estoppel was properly dismissed because Poeppel's complaint failed to allege the six elements of estoppel set forth in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991). The question then became whether those elements must be alleged in the complaint or are factual issues of proof. Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires particularity in pleading certain specified matters, not including estoppel, which is governed by the requirement in this rule, which states that pleadings must be simple, concise, and direct. The allegations in Poeppel's complaint, sparse and artless as they were, nevertheless put the county on notice so that a responsive pleading could be prepared. Whether Poeppel could satisfy the elements of estoppel was a question of proof, not pleadings, and the District Court erred in dismissing the grievance for failure to state a claim. The Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether the complaint was timely because resolution of that issue hinged upon whether Poeppel could prove the claim of estoppel at trial. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Poeppel v. Flathead County, 1999 MT 130, 294 M 487, 982 P2d 1007, 56 St. Rep. 525 (1999), following Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Failure to Replead in Accordance With Rules — Dismissal With Prejudice Warranted — Exhaustion of All Sanctions Not Required: After a contract action against Nystroms was dismissed, Nystroms brought an action against the plaintiffs and their counsel, consisting of 76 paragraphs in 26 pages, alleging malicious fraudulent prosecution, intentional abuse of process, and unlawful intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court determined that the complaint was vindictive, argumentative, and repetitive and directed Nystroms to replead in accordance to Rules 8 and 12, M.R.Civ.P. Nystroms then filed an amended complaint of 130 paragraphs in 43 pages including previous allegations and adding allegations of interference with business relations and conspiracy. The District Court dismissed with prejudice under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to comply with the court's order. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that even though there may have been other less severe remedies available to the District Court, that court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. The Nystroms' counsel had warning that failure to replead in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure could result in dismissal. The District Court could have reasonably concluded that there was no other adequate remedy available to the District Court and the defendant under the circumstances. Nystrom v. Melcher, 262 M 151, 864 P2d 754, 50 St. Rep. 1488 (1993).

Controverting Admissions Not Allowed in Pleadings: It is well settled that parties are bound by and estopped from controverting admissions in their pleadings. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992). See also Grimsley v. Spencer, 206 M 184, 670 P2d 85 (1983), Fey v. A.A. Oil Corp., 129 M 300, 285 P2d 578 (1955), and In re Baker, 2010 MT 124, 356 Mont. 363, 234 P.3d 70.

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Summary Judgment Proper on Unsupported Claims of Economic Advantage, Bad Faith, Civil Conspiracy, and Punitive Damages: Plaintiff mining company by amended complaint brought claims of economic advantage, bad faith, civil conspiracy, and punitive damages. Defendant mining company filed a motion for a more definitive statement. In response, plaintiff filed a 35-page brief with 43 attached exhibits but again neglected to address defendant's request for specificity or counter defendant's legal arguments. Summary judgment was proper after a finding that plaintiff: (1) repeatedly failed to provide, with particularity, factual support for its allegations of fraud; (2) repeatedly failed to provide the District Court with a simple, concise, and direct pleading; and (3) failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, relying instead on lengthy but unsupported allegations. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Pleaded: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Form of Pleading — Partition of Property: No particular form of pleading is necessary to seek partition of property in a divorce proceeding, and where plaintiff prayed that the court settle and adjust the property rights of the parties, including partition or sale of the property if necessary, and both sides briefed and argued the issue, there was sufficient notice to defendant and partition was proper. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 156 M 469, 482 P2d 140 (1971).

Action for Fraud — Statement of Facts Required: In an action involving fraud, the complaint must set forth the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language, the use of such extravagant terms as "fraud", "conspiracy", and the like, unaccompanied by a statement of the facts upon which the charges of wrongdoing rest, being useless as a pleading. Min. Sec. Co. v. Wall, 99 M 596, 45 P2d 302 (1935).

Skill Required in Drafting Pleadings: The provision that the complaint must contain a statement of the cause of action relied upon in "ordinary and concise language" must not be understood as dispensing with all care and skill in framing the statement, but calls for an intelligent and accurate use of language by the pleader. Custer v. Missoula Pub. Serv. Co., 91 M 136, 6 P2d 131 (1931).

Inferences Considered Averred: In a personal injury action plaintiff need do no more in alleging the facts than set them forth in ordinary and concise language, and whatever is necessarily implied in or reasonably to be inferred from an allegation is to be taken as directly averred. Johnson v. Herring, 89 M 156, 295 P 1100 (1931).

Ultimate Facts to Be Alleged: In pleadings, only the ultimate facts and not the evidence to support those facts should be set forth in ordinary and concise language. First St. Bank v. Mussigbrod, 83 M 68, 271 P 695 (1928).

Definiteness of Complaint — Applicable Test: A complaint, to be proof against a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), ought at least to be sufficiently definite and certain to be on its face a bar to another suit on the same cause of action. Smallhorn v. Freeman, 61 M 137, 201 P 567 (1921).

Clear Language Required — Purpose of Rule: The rule under which the facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action must be stated in ordinary and concise language requires the facts to be stated by direct averment, so that the defendant may understand the specific acts of remissness with which he is charged and that the material issues may be framed for trial. Stricklin v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 59 M 367, 197 P 839 (1921).

Damages to Be Clearly Stated: It would not be sufficient for a plaintiff to allege that, as the result of a fraud, he suffered damage "in an appreciable amount", or suffered "material damage", or "substantial damage". Any one of these allegations would render the pleading subject to demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Stillwell v. Rankin, 55 M 130, 174 P 186 (1918).

Complaint for Malpractice Rule Observed: A complaint against a physician and surgeon, for alleged malpractice in the reduction and treatment of a broken leg, contains "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language", where it sets out, in traversable form, the acts or omissions of the defendant upon which the plaintiff seeks recovery, and shows that they occurred through the negligence of the defendant. Stokes v. Long, 52 M 470, 159 P 28 (1916).

Answer — New Matter Covered by Rule: The requirement that a complaint shall contain "a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language", applies to new matter alleged in the answer. Vaughan v. Kujath, 44 M 484, 120 P 1121 (1912).

Cause of Action to Be Stated in Ordinary Language: If the complaint did not contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, in ordinary and concise language, a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) thereto was, under the previous practice, properly sustained. Hosty v. Moulton Water Co., 39 M 310, 102 P 568 (1909).

ALTERNATE OR INCONSISTENT DEFENSES

All Parties in Equity Court Entitled to Have Their Legal Claims and Counterclaims Tried by Jury: Although, in the past, the court has purported to permit a court of equity to rule on all questions in a case, the court has never held that a court sitting in equity may try those issues of fact raised by plaintiff in a legal cause of action. The modern merger of law and equity courts and the liberal joinder provisions of the Rules of Civil Procedure force reevaluation of the traditional justification for permitting an equity court to decide legal issues. Upon timely demand, all parties are entitled to have their legal claims and counterclaims tried by jury. Gray v. Billings, 213 M 6, 689 P2d 268, 41 St. Rep. 1910 (1984). To the extent that Butler Bros. Dev. Co. v. Butler, 111 M 329, 108 P2d 1041 (1941), and its progeny have been interpreted to deny plaintiff a right to jury trial of his legal claims, the cases are overruled.

Optional Claims May Be Raised Alternatively: Holder of note secured by contracts of unconditional guarantee and real estate mortgage may plead alternatively as to theory of recovery with court having authority under the rules to dispense with any claim left unadjudicated. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation v. Cowgill, 143 M 98, 387 P2d 435 (1963).

Claim of Contributory Negligence as Admission of Negligence: In action for injuries sustained by minor bicyclist when struck by defendant's automobile traveling in same direction, where defendant denied negligence and pleaded contributory negligence, as permitted by Montana statute, and trial court repeatedly charged that to recover plaintiff must prove that defendant was negligent in one or more of the particulars alleged, instruction that defense of contributory negligence admits or at least presupposes negligence on defendant's part, though improper, was not misleading. Hazeltine v. Johnson, 92 F2d 866 (9th Cir. 1937).

Admission Not a Defense: Admission of a paragraph of the complaint in a defendant's answer is not, strictly speaking, a defense within the rule relating to pleading inconsistent defenses. State ex rel. Nagle v. Stafford, 97 M 275, 34 P2d 372 (1934); Stagg v. Stagg, 96 M 573, 32 P2d 856 (1934).

Measure of Inconsistency Allowed: Inconsistent defenses may be pleaded, provided they are not so incompatible as to render the one or the other absolutely false. The test of inconsistency of defenses is whether or not the proof of one necessarily disproves the other. When one admits a fact and the other denies it, the admission must prevail over the denial. Stagg v. Stagg, 96 M 573, 32 P2d 856 (1934); Downs v. Nihill, 87 M 145, 286 P 410 (1930).

Defenses to Foreclosure of Assigned Mortgage Allowed: A defendant may set up two or more inconsistent defenses so long as they are not so far inconsistent that, if one be true, the other must necessarily be false. Where defendant in an action for foreclosure of mortgage brought by the assignee thereof alleged payment to the payee bank without knowledge of the assignment of the note and mortgage and believing it to be the owner or that it had authority to receive payment as agent of the assignee, the two allegations were not so repugnant that refusal to compel defendant to elect upon which one of the defenses he would rely was not error. Minn. Loan & Trust Co. v. Busby, 84 M 373, 275 P 761 (1929).

Alternate Defenses — No Election Required: Since a defendant in a civil action may in his answer set forth as many defenses as he has, he may introduce evidence to sustain them, and therefore may not be required to elect in advance upon which of them he will rely. Howard v. Fraser, 83 M 194, 271 P 444 (1928).

Inconsistent Defenses — No Waiver of Proof of Loss: Under the rule of practice that defendant may set up as many defenses as he may have, even though inconsistent, provided they are not so far inconsistent with each other that if the allegations of one are true those of the other must of necessity be false, defendant insurance company's denial of liability on grounds other than failure of proof of loss did not constitute a waiver of notice and proof of loss. Johnson v. Rocky Mtn. Fire Ins. Co., 70 M 411, 226 P 515 (1924).

Inconsistent Defenses Allowed: Although the defendant may interpose inconsistent defenses, they must not be so far inconsistent that if the allegations of one are true, the allegations of the other must of necessity be false. White v. Hagbery, 54 M 593, 172 P 1034 (1918), distinguished in McGrath v. Dubs, 127 M 101, 257 P2d 899 (1953); Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915); Day v. Kelly, 50 M 306, 146 P 930 (1915); O'Donnell v. Butte, 44 M 97, 119 P 281 (1911); Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910). But see Fraser v. Clark, 137 M 362, 352 P2d 681 (1960).

Error to Exclude Evidence on Inconsistent Defenses: Since a defendant may, under this section, interpose illogical or inconsistent defenses, it is error to exclude evidence offered in support thereof. St. Paul Mach. Mfg. Co. v. Bruce, 54 M 549, 172 P 330 (1918).

GENERAL

Buyer's Right to Rely on Contract — Damages Pleaded for Breach: The seller argued on appeal from a verdict for the purchaser in a breach of contract action that the buyer's complaint sought damages due to the buyer's detrimental reliance upon the contract, in that the buyer had obligated himself to resell the calves, which obligation the buyer then was unable to fulfill and for which the buyer was liable. The seller argued that, based upon the buyer's own pleadings, the buyer could not recover because he, the buyer, could not detrimentally rely on the contract; the seller had warned him he could not fulfill the contract. The Supreme Court said that argument was beside the point. Damages were determined ultimately on the simple basis of difference between market prices on the date of delivery and the price on the date of execution, as provided by 30-2-713. Although the trial court's method of resolving damages did not conform precisely to that pleaded in the buyer's complaint, the District Court action was proper because, under Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P., pleadings are to be construed to do substantial justice. The real purpose of the claim as a whole was to be considered and honored. Here the purpose and spirit behind the complaint were recovery for breach of contract, and damages based upon the changes in the market were within the scope of the complaint. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981), followed in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999).

Specificity of Pleadings: Concerning the degree of specificity in plaintiff's pleadings desired by defendants, the Supreme Court does not favor the cutting short of litigation at the initial pleading stage unless a complaint does not state a cause of action under any set of facts. Tobacco River Lumber Co., Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978).

Administrative Proceedings: Pleadings and applications in an administrative matter should be construed as to do substantial justice. W. Bank of Billings v. Mont. St. Banking Bd., 174 M 331, 570 P2d 1115 (1977).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Pleaded: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Demand for Relief: In divorce action where complaint alleged that $2,040 which had been in bank was plaintiff's separate property, that it was placed in her name although she had no interest in it, and that she took the money without plaintiff's consent and prayer was for "such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and equitable in the premises", it was not error for the court to adjudge that plaintiff recover from defendant the amount of $2,040. Rogers v. Rogers, 123 M 52, 209 P2d 998 (1949), distinguished in Chapman v. Chapman, 137 M 544, 354 P2d 184 (1960), explained in Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958).

Defective Complaint — Divorce Action: A complaint in a divorce action which does not set forth the elements of the ground for divorce with sufficient certainty to establish them was not aided by section 93-3801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P.). Hosking v. Hosking, 120 M 437, 186 P2d 503 (1947).

Omitted Allegations Not Implied: Although sections 93-3801 and 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P.), abolished the rigorous rules of the common law requiring the pleading to be construed most unfavorably to the pleader, they did not require such a liberal construction as would read into the pleading a substantial allegation which has been omitted therefrom. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930); Mont. Amusement Sec. Co. v. Goldwyn Distrib. Corp., 56 M 215, 182 P 119 (1919); Conrad Nat'l Bank v. Great N. Ry., 24 M 178, 61 P 1 (1900).

Misjoinder of Actions: Notwithstanding there may be some question as to whether causes of action in tort and in contract have not been improperly joined, the Supreme Court will not too closely scrutinize the complaint to determine this fact, where the case has been tried on its merits and substantial justice appears to have been done. Ivey v. LaFrance Copper Co., 45 M 71, 121 P 1061 (1912).

Common-Law Rule Abolished: The effect of sections 93-3801 and 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P.), was to abolish the rigorous rule of the common law requiring the pleading to be construed most unfavorably to the pleader. Conrad Nat'l Bank v. Great N. Ry., 24 M 178, 61 P 1 (1900); Becker v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 11 M 490, 28 P 1116 (1891); Daniels v. Andes Ins. Co., 2 M 78 (1874).

DEFECTS IN FORM

Participial Phrase — Common-Law Rule Abolished: While the use of the participial phrase in pleading under the common law was not permissible, it does not vitiate a pleading under code pleading. Cook v. Galen, 83 M 334, 272 P 250 (1928).

Technical Defects — No Error Where Defendant Not Misled: Where defendant was not misled by any allegations or lack of allegations in the complaint but was fully prepared to defend the action upon the merits, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff will not be reversed for mere technical defect in the pleading raised by general demurrer (demurrer abolished, Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Davis v. Freisheimer, 68 M 322, 219 P 236 (1923).

Mistakes of Form and Surplusage to Be Disregarded: Under the liberal rule of construction of pleadings provided by sections 93-3801 and 93-3909, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P.), in determining the issues of law presented by a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint or by objection to the introduction of evidence, matters of form as well as allegations which are irrelevant or redundant must be disregarded, and if the pleading warrants recovery in any amount and upon any admissible theory, it will be sustained. Grant v. Nihill, 64 M 420, 210 P 914 (1922).

Omission of Particular Words: Where the subject of denial, on information and belief, is certain specified allegations of the complaint, the omission of the word "thereof", in denying that the defendant has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, is immaterial. The pleading is to be liberally construed. Pengelly v. Peeler, 39 M 26, 101 P 147 (1909).

No Effect on Substance if Intent and Purpose Shown: Mere matters of form or defective statement not affecting the substance will not be held fatal if the pleading as a whole shows its general intent and purpose. Conrad Nat'l Bank v. Great N. Ry., 24 M 178, 61 P 1 (1900).

INFERENCES FROM ALLEGATIONS

Error in Allowing Amendment of Pleadings in Parental Rights Termination Case to Include New Theory — Lack of Notice Violative of Due Process Rights: During a parental rights termination hearing, the District Court allowed the state to amend the pleadings to include a new theory that the mother had abandoned her children. The mother's counsel objected for lack of notice. The state asserted that although abandonment may not have been included in the original pleadings as a separate ground for termination, there were facts in the original petition that supported a claim for abandonment and that the mother was thus on notice that the state intended to present evidence that would support a theory of abandonment. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fundamental liberty interest associated with parental rights must be protected with fundamentally fair procedures, including the due process requirement that a parent receive notice and be allowed the opportunity to be heard. Generally, a District Court cannot grant leave to amend the pleadings arbitrarily or perfunctorily, and although there are cases when the Supreme Court will allow a party to amend pleadings in order for a case to proceed efficiently on the merits, this was not one of those cases. The termination petition as a whole did not provide the mother with sufficient notice on the charge of abandonment. Although some of the facts may have been applicable to abandonment, the mother should not have been required to glean from those facts which claims the state could bring. Rather, the state was required to articulate the claims that it expected to raise, and allowing amendment of the pleadings during the hearing to include a theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Claim and Delivery — Right to Possession Implied: In a claim and delivery action brought to recover partnership property belonging to a partnership which was dissolved by express will of the partners, a complaint alleging the existence of the partnership, the subsequent dissolution, and that the defendants wrongfully acquired possession of the partnership property involved was sufficient to show the plaintiff's right to possession and to state a cause of action. Rykken v. Black, 136 M 464, 348 P2d 998 (1960).

Right and Infringement to Be Shown: The allegations of a complaint must be liberally construed, and a complaint attacked by general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), although defective in many particulars, will be held sufficient if it alleges, directly or by necessary inference, facts showing plaintiff's primary right and its infringement by defendant and is sufficiently certain to enable the latter to prepare his evidence to meet the alleged facts. Miller v. Schrock, 135 M 409, 340 P2d 154 (1959); Johnson v. Johnson, 92 M 512, 15 P2d 842 (1932).

Inferences From Allegations as Directly Averred: Whatever is necessarily implied in or reasonably to be inferred from an allegation is to be taken as directly averred. Hage v. Orton, 119

M 419, 175 P2d 174 (1946); Kelly v. Lowney & Williams, Inc., 113 M 385, 126 P2d 486 (1942); Matteson v. Ackerson, 104 M 239, 66 P2d 797 (1937); Gotzian & Co. v. Norris, 89 M 307, 297 P 489 (1931); Cramer v. Deschler Broom Factory, 79 M 220, 255 P 346 (1927); Ray v. Divers, 72 M 513, 234 P 246 (1925); Connelly Co. v. Schlueter Bros., 69 M 65, 220 P 103 (1923); Grant v. Nihill, 64 M 420, 210 P 914 (1922); Doane v. Marquisee, 63 M 166, 206 P 426 (1922); Buhler v. Loftus, 53 M 546, 165 P 601 (1917); Stokes v. Long, 52 M 470, 159 P 28 (1916); Gauss v. Trump, 48 M 92, 135 P 910 (1913); Daily v. Marshall, 47 M 377, 133 P 681 (1913); Allen v. Bear Creek Coal Co., 43 M 269, 115 P 673 (1911); Silver Bow County v. Davies, 40 M 418, 107 P 81 (1910), distinguished in Smallhorn v. Freeman, 61 M 137, 201 P 567 (1921); Harmon v. Fox, 31 M 324, 78 P 517 (1904).

Pleadings on Default — Every Reasonable Inference Allowed: Leniency is to be exercised in construction of pleadings on default and courts must indulge every reasonable inference to support a cause of action. Lindsey v. Keenan, 118 M 312, 165 P2d 804 (1946).

Failure of Civil Officer to Comply With Request: Under section 93-3801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 8(f), M.R.Civ.P.), providing liberal construction of pleading, whatever is necessarily implied in, or can be reasonably inferred from its allegations was to be treated as directly averred, and when relator in mandamus proceeding alleged in his petition that he asked the County Assessor to enter on an application for registration, the full, true, and assessed valuation of automobile, and such officer "willfully and unlawfully refused" to do so, the averment was tantamount to alleging that the Assessor failed to comply with his request. State ex rel. Sadler v. Evans, 106 M 286, 77 P2d 394 (1938).

Basis for Implication Required: Before the rule that whatever is implied in or reasonably to be inferred from allegations of a pleading is to be taken as directly averred may be invoked, it must appear that sufficient facts are stated to furnish a basis for the implication or inference. Grover v. Hines, 66 M 230, 213 P 250 (1923); Smallhorn v. Freeman, 61 M 137, 201 P 567 (1921).

Necessary but Omitted Facts Not Inferred — Reasonable Inferences Required: This section does not permit the reading into the pleading of a statement of a necessary, substantial fact which has been omitted, so as to make it state a cause of action where none is stated. It does require that whatever is necessarily implied by a statement directly made, or is reasonably to be inferred therefrom, is to be taken as directly averred. Allen v. Bear Creek Coal Co., 43 M 269, 115 P 673 (1911).

Inference of Compliance With Law: An allegation that the chief deputy of a Clerk of the District Court issued jurors' and witnesses' certificates as chief deputy implies that he issued them in the form and under the requirements prescribed by the statute. Silver Bow County v. Davies, 40 M 418, 107 P 81 (1910).

Former Rule 9. Pleading special matters

Adequacy of Pleadings in Libel Suit — Damages: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court dismissal of a libel action and rejected defendant's argument that in Montana specific damages must be pleaded and proven to support a claim for libel per quod and that actual malice must be specifically pleaded to satisfy the requirements of the first amendment of the United States Constitution. The plaintiff's pleadings were found to satisfy the standards set forth in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), adopted by Montana in Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978), as well as the requirements of Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P. Gallagher v. Johnson, 188 M 117, 611 P2d 613 (1980).

Former Rule 9(a). Capacity

Section 1983 Action for Damages and Declaratory and Injunctive Relief — State Agency Held Not a "Person" — Individual or Official Capacity of Individual Defendants Determined — Test for Qualified Immunity in Damages Action — Remington Overruled: Orozco, an inmate in the Montana State Prison, brought a civil action for damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983 against the Department of Corrections and Human Services (now Department of Corrections) and several Department employees for the denial of his due process rights in connection with the denial of his ability to earn good time credits. The Department moved for dismissal for failure to state a claim, based upon 11th amendment immunity. As to the Department, the Supreme Court held, citing Will v. Mich. Dept. of St. Police, 491 US 58 (1989), that because the Department has been created as part of the Executive Branch of state government, suing the Department is the same as suing the State of Montana, which is not a "person" for the purposes of a section 1983 action. In response to Orozco's argument that 2-9-305 required him to join the Department as a party, the Supreme Court noted that there is nothing in the text of that section that requires that the state be joined as a party; the section provides only for the tender of a defense and payment of damages by the state if a state employee is sued. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly dismissed the action for damages against the Department. As to the individual defendants, the Supreme Court held that state employees acting in their official capacities are likewise not "persons" for the purposes of a section 1983 action but that state employees acting in their individual capacities are "persons" within the meaning of section 1983. The Supreme Court noted that Orozco had not clearly indicated the capacities in which the individual defendants were being sued, and so it looked to other provisions of the complaint and to U.S. Supreme Court decisions in order to determine Orozco's intent and held that Orozco intended to sue the individual defendants in their individual capacities. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in holding that the individually named defendants were not "persons" under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for the purposes of the action for damages. The Supreme Court also held that in enacting 53-30-105 (now repealed) mandating rules for the accrual of good time, the state had created a right to good time. The Supreme Court also held that the immunity analysis used in Remington v. Dept. of Corrections and Human Services, 255 M 480, 844 P2d 50 (1992), was incorrect in light of the later decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Sandin v. Connor, 515 US 472 (1995), and overruled Remington, but, on the basis of the Sandin immunity analysis, determined that Orozco's liberty interest in the award of good time credits was not clearly established on the date of Orozco's hearing to reclassify him as a maximum security prisoner who was no longer entitled to earn good time credits. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the Department employees who were sued in their individual capacities were to be given qualified immunity for the purposes of the action for damages but that the District Court improperly dismissed the action for declaratory and injunctive relief and remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of what process was due Orozco before his opportunity to earn good time was revoked and whether he received that process. Orozco v. Day, 281 M 341, 934 P2d 1009, 54 St. Rep. 200 (1997).

Breach of Contract Action for Failure to Properly Embalm Deceased — Agency — Standing to Sue: Maria handled all funeral arrangements for her deceased mother. The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The lower court dismissed the family's claim for breach of contract and also ruled that Maria was not acting as agent for the other family members and that only she would have been able to sue for breach of contract. The Supreme Court held that a cause of action for breach of contract would exist if Maria could show that the breach had so "damaged" the funeral as to constitute a breach of contract entitling Maria to damages. The Supreme Court did affirm the lower court's ruling that Maria was not acting as an agent for the rest of the family in contracting with the mortuary. Therefore, only she could sue on the contract. Contreraz v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Extended to Negligent Handling of Dead Bodies — Standing to Sue: The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The Supreme Court, in reversing the District Court, held that one who negligently handles a dead body is liable to the family for emotional distress and that the test for emotional distress is that established in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995). The Supreme Court also held that the children and the grandchildren of the deceased had standing to sue based on a factual showing of their closeness to the deceased and that having seen the stain was not a prerequisite to their right to sue. Contreraz v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

Failure of Limited Partners to Request General Partner to Initiate Suit: The limited partners sued the bank, alleging that the bank had forced the general partner to breach his fiduciary duty to the limited partners. The lower court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, holding that the plaintiffs had not alleged that they were suing in a derivative capacity and that they had failed to set forth with particularity their efforts to obtain action by the general partner. The Supreme Court ruled that under this rule, the plaintiffs did not need to allege that they were suing in a derivative capacity. The court also held that although Rule 23.1, M.R.Civ.P., and 35-12-1403 require the plaintiffs to set out with particularity their efforts to get the general partner to take action, the lower court should have given the plaintiffs a chance to amend their complaint. Larson v. First Interstate Bank, 241 M 350, 786 P2d 1176, 47 St. Rep. 344 (1990).

Injunctive Relief Granted to Persons Not Specifically Named as Plaintiffs — Representative Capacity Not Challenged: The District Court did not exceed its personal jurisdiction by granting injunctive relief to persons other than those specifically named as plaintiffs in the complaint when the voluntary trade organization, as plaintiff, alleged that it was representing persons holding liquor licenses in Montana and the state, as defendant, did not challenge the adequacy of the association's representative capacity under Rule 9(a), M.R.Civ.P. (see Title 25, ch. 20). Mont Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Failure to Raise Issue of Capacity by Negative Averment — Defense Waived: Failure of a party to raise the issue of capacity by specific negative averment in the responsive pleading or in a motion before the pleadings results in a waiver of that defense. Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Abbott, 223 M 405, 726 P2d 824, 43 St. Rep. 1829 (1986), citing Summers v. Interstate Tractor & Equip. Co., 466 F2d 42 (9th Cir. 1972).

Standing to Sue Government in General — Annexation Proceedings in Particular: Before one has standing to sue a governmental entity, there must be a case or controversy. The plaintiff must clearly allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property or civil right, and the injury must be distinguishable from injury to the public in general, though it need not be exclusive to the plaintiff. In an annexation protest, annexation is a political matter exclusively for legislative control, absent a constitutional prohibition. The annexation must be void ab initio, and the challenger must be a property owner who would suffer a tax increase. The available remedy is an injunction, not monetary damages. A count of petition signatures for only one of many annexed areas, by a plaintiff who used his own criteria for the count, is insufficient to support a claim that the government entity inaccurately counted the signatures. Since plaintiff here had no standing to directly attack the annexation, he could not collaterally attack it by attempting to show negligence. O'Donnell Fire Serv. & Equip. Co. v. Billings, 219 M 317, 711 P2d 822, 42 St. Rep. 2051 (1985), followed in Knudsen v. Ereaux, 275 M 146, 911 P2d 835, 53 St. Rep. 83 (1996), and Lohmeier v. Gallatin County, 2006 MT 88, 332 M 39, 135 P3d 775 (2006).

Foreign Administrator: The question of the right of a foreign administrator to maintain an action in the courts of this state in his representative capacity goes to the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action and not to plaintiff's legal capacity to sue. Lefebure v. Baker, 69 M 193, 220 P 1111 (1923).

Corporate Capacity Need Not Be Pleaded: When a corporation brings an action at law in its corporate name it need not affirmatively allege in its complaint that it is a corporation in order to state a cause of action. NW. Hardware & Steel Co. v. Winnett, 67 M 545, 216 P 568 (1923).

Taxpayer's Action — Standing to Sue: Want of authority in a taxpayer to maintain a contest of a county seat election forms no ground of special demurrer, and has nothing to do with lack of "legal capacity to sue", meaning that plaintiff shall be free from such general disability as infancy or insanity. Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916).

Former Rule 9(b). Fraud, mistake, condition of the mind

Fraudulent Misrepresentation Not Pleaded With Particularity: Plaintiff banks brought an action against an accounting firm for professional negligence, negligent misrepresentation, and fraudulent misrepresentation. The Supreme Court agreed that the word "fraud" did not have to be used in the complaint but that the plaintiffs' general allegations were insufficient to put the defendant on notice that it would have to defend against a claim of fraud. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in failing to rule on the plaintiffs' claimed oral motion to amend the complaint because it was unclear that the plaintiffs' counsel ever made an oral motion to amend. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

No Breach of Duty to Defend When Claim Excluded Under Policy's Breach of Contract Provision: Plaintiff town entered a contract with a drilling company. The mayor allegedly instructed the company to perform work beyond the scope of the contract and said the town would pay for the work. When the town refused to pay, the company sued for breach of contract. The town then contacted defendant insurer, requesting a defense and indemnification, but the insurer refused coverage. The District Court held that the insurer did not have a duty to defend or indemnify. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The policy contained exclusions for nonmonetary damages, punitive damages, breach of contract, and liability based on estimated probable costs or faulty bid specifications. The complaint against the town alleged breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, and constructive fraud. Despite the town's assertion that legal theories and conclusory language in the complaint formed the basis for coverage, the basis for coverage is the acts giving rise to the complaint, and in this case the actions of the mayor were all grounded in contract and thus fell within the policy exclusions, so the insurer had no duty to defend. Additionally, the company's constructive fraud complaint failed to state fraudulent circumstances with particularity and thus was inadequately pleaded, so the insurer had no duty to defend the claim. Geraldine v. Mont. Municipal Ins. Authority, 2008 MT 411, 347 M 267, 198 P3d 796 (2008).

Fraudulently Obtained Independent Contractor Exemption First Raised in Opposition to Affirmative Defense and Motion for Summary Judgment: A worker fell from a carport roof that she was painting and sued the contractor who hired her and the people who hired the contractor to paint the house, claiming failure to provide a safe workplace and workers' compensation insurance. The defendants who hired the contractor pleaded the affirmative defense that the worker was an independent contractor, and the worker responded that the approved application for an independent contractor exemption was fraudulently obtained. Although this rule requires a claim of fraud to be pleaded with particularity, in this case, evidence of fraud raised by the worker in her brief in opposition to summary judgment was properly before the court and should have been considered in the summary judgment proceeding. Gonzales v. Walchuk, 2002 MT 262, 312 M 240, 59 P3d 377 (2002).

Constructive Fraud Pleading — "Inartful" Pleading Held Sufficient — Relationship Between Rule 8(a) and This Rule: Berg was sued by the State Fund in a complaint that pleaded constructive fraud in three paragraphs that incorporated previous counts of the complaint by reference. Berg alleged that the constructive fraud count did not comply with the requirements of this rule that all of the elements of the constructive fraud claim be pleaded with "particularity" because all of the elements of constructive fraud were not pleaded. The Supreme Court held that the "particularity" requirements of this rule do not negate, and must be read in conjunction with, the provisions of Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P., requiring a short and plain statement. The Supreme Court noted that Berg was able to sufficiently understand the state's pleading, that he made a responsive pleading denying the allegation of constructive fraud, that the State Fund pleading must be understood in its context of the facts of the case, and that there were no contradictory statements or statements made "on information and belief" in any of the State Fund's statements in its complaint. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

General Assertions Inadequate to Prove Fraud: Defendants, who were subject to repossession of their truck, alleged by affidavit that changes discovered in the truck indicated that it had been tampered with, despite the seller's contention that the truck was new when defendants purchased it, indicating fraud. However, the affidavits: (1) were dated almost 3 years after the truck was purchased and after defendants had driven the truck over 300,000 miles; (2) did not state when the observations were made; (3) stated no opinion as to who created the alleged defects or when they were created; and (4) did not demonstrate that plaintiff knew or should have known of the claimed defects. Defendants' general assertion that because they did not tamper with the truck, it must have been tampered with by the sellers did not satisfy defendants' obligation to prove their claim of fraud with particularity. Defendant's admission that he had the truck inspected within a few days after purchase precluded a claim that defendants were ignorant of the falsity of the representation. These factors, absent a specific proof of damages to support the allegation that the truck had been wrecked and rebuilt, precluded a finding of fraud, and the District Court did not err in so finding. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Presentation of Counterclaims Allowed — Evidence of Fraud Properly Disallowed: Defendants contended District Court error in disallowing evidence in a fraud action that the truck that they had purchased was not new despite the seller's claim that it was new. However, defendants were allowed to try to the jury their counterclaims concerning warranties, modification to and breach of contract, and odometer tampering, but failed to provide any evidence of damages resulting from their claim. Refusal by the trial court to allow evidence that the truck was not new was not in error. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Contradictory, Unsupported Allegations — Summary Dismissal Proper: The District Court properly granted a motion for summary dismissal for failure to state a claim when allegations of fraud were found to be contradictory, not sufficiently particular, and unsupported by fact. Allegations of fraud cannot ordinarily be based on "information and belief" except as to matters that are particularly within the opposing party's knowledge, and the allegations must be accompanied by a statement of facts upon which the belief is founded. C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 262 M 321, 864 P2d 1253, 50 St. Rep. 1577 (1993), distinguished in State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996). See also Fossen v. Fossen, 2013 MT 299, 372 Mont. 175, 311 P.3d 743.

Failure to Keep Promise to Pay Medical Bills if Injured Person Travels to Exam — No Fraud: The District Court properly granted the church summary judgment on issues of fraud and misrepresentation in an action arising after plaintiff fell and was injured on church property. Plaintiff claimed that the church agreed in writing to pay medical bills if plaintiff would travel to Salt Lake City for a medical exam. Plaintiff did so, and the church failed to pay. The promise to pay money in the future was not a representation, the first element of a prima facie case for fraud or misrepresentation. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640, 50 St. Rep. 535 (1993).

Nine Elements of Fraud to Be Stated With Particularity: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's dismissal of the Martins' claim for fraud because the Martins did not state with particularity the facts in support of all nine elements of fraud. Martin v. Dorn Equip. Co., Inc., 250 M 422, 821 P2d 1025, 48 St. Rep. 978 (1991).

Corporate Fraud Not Shown With Particularity: Claim of plaintiff who asserted fraud in sale of his interest in a corporation was summarily dismissed upon his failure to produce documentation showing any misrepresentation or to allege fraud with particularity. Pipinich v. Battershell, 232 M 507, 759 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 1237 (1988).

Summary Judgment Proper on Unsupported Claims of Economic Advantage, Bad Faith, Civil Conspiracy, and Punitive Damages: Plaintiff mining company by amended complaint brought claims of economic advantage, bad faith, civil conspiracy, and punitive damages. Defendant mining company filed a motion for a more definitive statement. In response, plaintiff filed a 35-page brief with 43 attached exhibits but again neglected to address defendant's request for specificity or counter defendant's legal arguments. Summary judgment was proper after a finding that plaintiff: (1) repeatedly failed to provide, with particularity, factual support for its allegations of fraud; (2) repeatedly failed to provide the District Court with a simple, concise, and direct pleading; and (3) failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, relying instead on lengthy but unsupported allegations. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988).

Alleged Oral Covenant Not to Compete: The sellers and buyers of a grocery business discussed a noncompetition agreement but excluded such a provision from the written contract. The trial court found that this omission was not induced by the sellers' fraud. Even if the alleged noncompetition agreement had been entered in the contract, it could not be enforced because, although the two businesses are only 7 miles apart, they are in different counties and therefore not within the permissible exceptions for contracts in restraint of competition. Lar-Con Corp. v. Murman Properties, Ltd., 188 M 183, 612 P2d 676 (1980).

Elements of Fraud — Exception to Parol Evidence Rule: In order to establish an exception to the parol evidence rule, the elements of fraud must be stated with particularity: (1) a representation; (2) its falsity; (3) its materiality; (4) the speaker's knowledge of its falsity or ignorance of its truth; (5) the intent that it should be acted upon in the manner contemplated; (6) the hearer's ignorance of its falsity; (7) the hearer's reliance upon its truth; (8) the right of the hearer to rely thereon; and (9) the hearer's consequent and proximate injury or damage. Kinjerski v. Lamey, 185 M 111, 604 P2d 782 (1979).

Detail Necessary in Pleading: The most basic consideration in making a judgment as to the sufficiency of a pleading is the determination of how much detail is necessary to give adequate notice to an adverse party and enable him to prepare a responsive pleading. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979), followed in Irving v. School District No. 1-1A, 248 M 460, 813 P2d 417, 48 St. Rep. 512 (1991), State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996), and Poeppel v. Flathead County, 1999 MT 130, 294 M 487, 982 P2d 1007, 56 St. Rep. 525 (1999).

Amended Contract for Deed — Failure to Plead Fraud Specifically: When sellers of land argued that the buyers misled them as to the effect of an escrow agreement and warranty deed, estoppel had no application since the court found that sellers possessed a copy of the instruments for a considerable length of time and had ample opportunity to examine them. Furthermore, since sellers failed to plead fraud by amending their pleadings, they were not entitled to present parol evidence to show that these instruments constituted an acceptance of the land under the doctrine of estoppel. Tschache v. Barclay, 172 M 415, 564 P2d 1299 (1977).

Allegation of Fraud Ignored: Allegation that plaintiff's title to motor vehicle in claim and delivery action was ignored when that defense was not set forth as an affirmative defense or with particularity. Interstate Mfg. Co. v. Interstate Prod., 146 M 449, 408 P2d 478 (1965).

Constructive Fraud — Not Stated With Particularity: Because sufficient allegations of facts regarding "constructive fraud" were not pleaded with particularity, the complaint failed to state a claim for relief as a derivative action. Brooks v. Brooks Pontiac, Inc., 143 M 256, 389 P2d 185 (1964).

Fraud Alleged — Jury Issue: Where plaintiff in his reply alleged that the release pleaded by defendant's answer was procured through fraud, raising an issue of fact concerning a voidable release, an issue was raised that should have gone to the jury under proper instruction. Westfall v. Motors Ins. Corp., 140 M 564, 374 P2d 96 (1962).

Former Rule 9(c). Conditions precedent

GENERAL

Lease Agreement — No Condition Precedent: Lease terminable by either party upon 10 days' notice does not impose a condition precedent, performance of which must be alleged in plaintiff's complaint, but a condition subsequent which terminates the obligations of the parties to the lease. McEwen v. Big Sky of Mont., 169 M 141, 545 P2d 665 (1976).

General Denial Insufficient — Matter Considered Admitted: In action by materialman against general contractor for material supplied subcontractor, contractor could not make affirmative defense that statutory notice was not given under materialmen's statute after materialman alleged that he had complied with all conditions precedent to bringing suit and contractor entered general denial. General denial of allegation that all conditions precedent were performed did not put matter in issue and would be treated as admission that they were performed. Treasure St. Indus., Inc. v. Leigland, 151 M 288, 443 P2d 22 (1968), followed in Mattson v. Julian, 209 M 48, 678 P2d 654, 41 St. Rep. 544 (1984).

Prevention of Performance: One who prevents or makes impossible the performance or happening of a condition precedent upon which his liability by the terms of a contract is made to depend cannot avail himself of its nonperformance. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943), distinguished in Mitchell v. Carlson, 132 M 1, 313 P2d 717 (1957).

Required Time Lapse Not Condition Precedent: The lapse of 60 days required by a contract before beginning action was not a condition precedent which plaintiff could perform before commencing suit, and the general allegation that plaintiff had performed all conditions precedent to be performed by her under the contract, did not supply the necessary allegation that the period had elapsed before filing complaint. Smith v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 61 M 441, 202 P 751 (1921).

Insurance Policy — Compliance as Sufficient Allegation of Performance: A complaint in an action on a fire policy sufficiently alleges performance of a condition precedent in the policy, requiring loss to be ascertained by arbitrators in case of disagreement, when it alleges generally that plaintiff has duly performed all the conditions of the policy on his part. Ackley v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 25 M 272, 64 P 665 (1901).

PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT

Foreclosure of Lien — Allegations as Sufficient: Allegations in a complaint seeking foreclosure of mechanics' and materialmen's lien (now construction lien) relative to performance by plaintiff of the requirements of a building contract, to the effect that plaintiff carried on the work in "accordance with" the directions of defendant and "pursuant to the terms" of the construction contract, were proper under section 93-3807, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 9(c), M.R.Civ.P.), and not open to the objection that they were mere conclusions of law, and the complaint was sufficient to state a cause of action. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

Conditions Precedent — General Allegations as Sufficient: In declaring upon a contract containing conditions precedent, a party may, under section 93-3807, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 9(c), M.R.Civ.P.), allege generally that he has performed all the conditions on his part, provided he couch the allegations in the terms of the statute or in terms equivalent thereto. Enterprise Sheet Metal Works v. Schendel, 55 M 42, 173 P 1059 (1918).

Performance of Contract — Allegation as Sufficient: An allegation that the plaintiff actually completed all of the work and labor to be by him performed under his contract, and did all of the things to be by him performed under said contract, and did all of the things in said contract of him required to be done, is a sufficient allegation of performance of the contract. Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

Former Rule 9(d). Official document, act, ordinance or statute

Municipal Ordinance: One who bases his action against a city upon an ordinance must plead it, either by giving the date of passage and the title thereof, or by setting out in haec verba the whole or so much of it as relates to the action, or by giving the substance of its contents, so stated as to enable the court to judge from the provision of the ordinance itself. Dineen v. Butte, 83 M 370, 272 P 243 (1928).

Former Rule 9(f). Time and place

Specific Allegations in Pleading: Specificity in pleading time and place are not required but when specific allegations are made, they are material. Whether or not specificity is required is to be determined under the general rules as to pleadings. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Former Rule 9(g). Special damage

No Obligation to Extinguish Lien Until Debt Fully Satisfied — Summary Dismissal of Action for Slander of Title Proper: Following a business default, defendant sought to enforce a lease agreement and received a judgment in Justice's Court for $7,156.56, including interest. In an effort to satisfy the judgment, plaintiff's wife paid $7,121.14. Plaintiff later attempted to refinance the disputed property and found that defendant's lien had not been extinguished, so plaintiff requested a partial satisfaction of judgment to his wife and release of the lien on the judgment. When defendant refused to release the lien, plaintiff sued for slander of title. Slander of title is an action in which one maliciously publishes false matter that brings into question or disparages the title to property, thereby causing special damages to the owner. Defendant was under no obligation to extinguish the lien until the judgment was fully satisfied. Because the wife's payment was $35.42 short of completely satisfying the judgment, defendant could not be said to have maliciously published false matter regarding the lien, so slander of title was not proved, and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Pryor v. Babcock Bldg. Corp., 2002 MT 68, 309 M 222, 45 P3d 35 (2002). See also First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), and Felska v. Goulding, 238 M 224, 776 P2d 530 (1989).

Specificity of Pleadings: Concerning the degree of specificity in plaintiff's pleadings desired by defendants, the Supreme Court does not favor the short-circuiting of litigation at the initial pleading stage unless a complaint does not state a cause of action under any set of facts. Tobacco River Lumber Co., Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978).

Special Damages Not Pleaded: Because items of special damages were not specifically pleaded, defendant had no notice that special damages were claimed and the court had no power or authority to award special damages in its default judgment. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Filing of U.C.C. Financing Statement as Not Supporting Slander of Title Against Real Property Action Absent Proof of Special Damages: Claim that bank's filing of a U.C.C. financing statement was a slander of title against real property described in statement, without proof of special damages, was without merit because the so-called "slander" is not actionable, but the resulting special damages are the basis for the action and therefore an averment of special damages was necessary. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976).

Former Rule 10(a). Caption — names of parties

Caption Not an Allegation: The caption of a complaint is not a part of the allegation of the pleading. NW. Hardware & Steel Co. v. Winnett, 67 M 545, 216 P 568 (1923).

Correction of Name of Party: Where defendant answered in abatement for misnomer, alleging its true name, it was error for the court to enter judgment on the merits against defendant, but plaintiff should have amended in accordance with the answer, its truth being conceded, or the action have been abated. When the defendant pleads it, if the plaintiff does not then choose to amend his complaint, and if upon a trial of the issue it be found against the plaintiff, the action must abate. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 29 M 317, 74 P 734 (1903).

Objections to Title Not Basis for Dismissal: Objections to the title or style of the case at bar cannot be considered under a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) which alleges "that said action is not brought under the proper caption or style, nor in the proper name, to wit, in the name of the people of the state of Montana, instead of being brought in the name of the state of Montana", as no such ground of demurrer is known to the statute. People ex rel. Kern v. McIntyre, 10 M 166, 25 P 100 (1890).

Former Rule 10(b). Paragraphs — separate statements

Failure to State Separately — Remedy: The objection that causes of action are not separately stated and numbered cannot be raised by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed), the proper remedy for such a defect being a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain by separately stating the causes of action. Jorud v. Woodside, 63 M 23, 206 P 344 (1922).

Misjoinder of Causes — Dismissal as Remedy: Where two causes of action are improperly united, a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed), and not a motion to separately state and number, is the proper remedy. McLean v. Dickson, 58 M 203, 190 P 924 (1920).

Failure to State Separately — Dismissal Not Remedy: A demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed) cannot be invoked to cure a complaint containing several causes of action, defective because such causes are not separately stated and numbered as required by former statute. Roberts v. Sinnott, 55 M 369, 177 P 252 (1918).

Former Rule 10(c). Adoption by reference — exhibits

Agreement for Payment of Costs of Subdivision Telephone Facilities Containing Contingent Service Refund Not Considered Loan Requiring Payment of Interest — Judgment on Pleadings Affirmed: In 2001, defendant telephone cooperative entered an aid to construction contract whereby plaintiff agreed to pay $85,497.88 to aid defendant in costs incurred in installing, operating, and maintaining telephone facilities for services to plaintiff's subdivision. The contract required defendant to refund all or part of the money following construction if the actual cost per unit was less than estimated and the unit maintained continuous service for 5 years. In 2004, plaintiff demanded that defendant pay interest on the money, asserting that the money was a loan. The District Court held that the money was not a loan, so plaintiff was not entitled to interest. The District Court granted judgment on the pleadings for defendant pursuant to Rule 12(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court properly considered all materials and exhibits referred to in the pleading, and the court did not have to accept the allegation that the money was a loan for purposes of granting judgment because the question was not a factual allegation, but rather a question of law. Defendant's obligation to return money was based on a contingency, and there was no absolute promise to repay, so the transaction did not meet the definition of a loan. Thus, judgment on the pleadings was proper. Firelight Meadows, LLC v. 3 Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2008 MT 202, 344 M 117, 186 P3d 869 (2008), following Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), and distinguished in Conway v. Benefis Health Sys., Inc., 2013 MT 73, 369 Mont. 309, 297 P.3d 1200. See also Nyquist v. Nyquist, 255 M 149, 841 P2d 515 (1992).

Documents Evidencing Amount of Debt Incorporated Into Complaint and Effectively Put in Issue by Answer — Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Cross-Motions Not Proof of Absence of Genuine Issues of Fact: Montana Metal Buildings, Inc. (MMB), constructed a metal building for Shapiro at the Three Forks Airport and later served a notice of claim and construction lien upon Shapiro for $26,889.43. MMB claimed that this amount was owed by Shapiro as the balance due for labor and materials necessary for construction of the building. MMB subsequently sued Shapiro for that amount in foreclosure of the lien, attaching copies of invoices to its complaint. MMB moved for summary judgment on all issues, and Shapiro moved for summary judgment on issues concerning the defectiveness of the lien. The District Court granted summary judgment on all issues for MMB. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment and that genuine issues of fact still existed in that when MMB attached copies of the invoices to its complaint, they became part of the complaint for all purposes. The amounts established by those invoices were effectively put into issue by Shapiro when, in his answer, he asserted that he owed no further payments to MMB. The Supreme Court held that at this point in their proceedings, MMB had the obligation, as the party moving for summary judgment on the issue of the amount owed, to come forward with other evidence in the form of affidavits, discovery documents, or otherwise to overcome Shapiro's denials and establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact. The only affidavit that was submitted by MMB, the Supreme Court noted, addressed the issue of the sufficiency of the property description for the purposes of the lien and did not present evidence as to the amounts owed by Shapiro. Citing Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268 (1993), the Supreme Court pointed out that MMB could not rely on arguments of counsel to overcome the existence of an issue of material fact. The Supreme Court further noted, citing Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), that because the invoices were not submitted or filed by MMB as part of its motion for summary judgment, the invoices are not evidence of what was contained in the invoices but merely allegations of the complaint and were insufficient to overcome Shapiro's denials in his answer. In response to MMB's argument that Shapiro waived any right to object to MMB's evidentiary basis for its motion, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no evidentiary basis for MMB's motion for summary judgment on the issue of the amount of the debt because the invoices were not submitted for the purposes of the motion but only for the purposes of the complaint and had been effectively addressed by Shapiro's answer. Citing Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), the Supreme Court also pointed out that just because both parties have moved for summary judgment does not alone establish the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, particularly when the motions are not on precisely the same issues, and the District Court therefore apparently assumed, incorrectly, that there were no such genuine issues. Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997), followed, with regard to the holding that the fact that both parties have moved for summary judgment does not in itself establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact, in Sands v. W. Yellowstone, 2007 MT 110, 337 M 209, 158 P3d 432 (2007).

Incorporating by Reference Parts of Complaint That Have Been Struck by Summary Judgment: The plaintiff's original 10-count complaint was dismissed by the District Court pursuant to the defendant's summary judgment motion. The plaintiff, addressing only 4 of the 10 counts, moved the court to alter or amend its judgment. The lower court denied the motion, holding that the four counts did not contain any material facts sufficient to support a claim. The Supreme Court reversed the decision, stating that sufficient facts had been set out in the dismissed counts and those facts had been incorporated by reference and were not affected by the dismissal of the other counts. Cummings v. Plains, 242 M 236, 790 P2d 486, 47 St. Rep. 769 (1990).

Effect of Attached Instrument: A security agreement attached to the complaint merely became part of the pleadings, and a deficiency provision was not enforced because it was never specifically pleaded. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), followed in Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997).

Former Rule 11. Signing of pleadings, motions, and other papers — sanctions

No Error in Determining Statements in Former Court Documents Constituted Admissions — Remanded as to Attorney Fees: An ex-wife brought an action for child support alleging that some support was owed for the period from 1993 to 2001. The ex-husband argued that in a previous court action the ex-wife had included statements that no support was owed for the period up to 2001 and that the statements constituted a judicial admission. The trial court held that the earlier statements constituted admissions and that no support was owed and awarded the ex-husband a portion of his attorney fees and costs as sanctions against the ex-wife. The Supreme Court held that the trial court had correctly determined that no support was due but remanded the case with respect to attorney fees and costs because a former settlement agreement between the parties stated that in any subsequent action the prevailing party was entitled to all attorney fees and costs. In re Marriage of Hart, 2011 MT 102, 360 Mont. 308, 258 P.3d 389.

Hearing Not Required if Sanctions Not Warranted: Plaintiff sought sanctions based on alleged false statements by defendant's counsel, but the claim was dismissed without a hearing. Plaintiff contended that it was error to fail to hold a hearing on the issue of sanctions, but the Supreme Court disagreed. The hearing requirement protects a party against whom sanctions are sought, but nothing requires a court to conduct a hearing before deciding, as here, that a party's conduct does not warrant the imposition of sanctions. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009).

Statement Not Made for Improper Purpose — Denial of Sanctions Proper: Plaintiffs contended that defendant should have been sanctioned for stating that plaintiffs' attorneys had "shopped around" for plaintiffs in order to bring a complaint against defendant. The District Court denied sanctions, and on appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court's determination that defendant's statement was reasonable was not clearly erroneous. Defendant had obtained a copy of a proposed District Court complaint that did not name plaintiffs. The draft complaint had been circulated among an unspecified group of people, and the names of plaintiffs were later inserted into an identical complaint form. Under the circumstances, defendant's statement was reasonable, and denial of sanctions against defendant was affirmed. Park County Concerned Citizens v. DePuy, 2008 MT 246, 344 M 504, 190 P3d 293 (2008).

Failure to Hold Hearing Before Award of Sanctions — Remand: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs against plaintiff for bringing a frivolous suit. However, the court did not adequately set forth its findings and conclusions or set forth its reasons for an award of fees, nor did the court hold a hearing before granting sanctions as required in Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. Thus, the case was remanded for a hearing and for further proceedings on the reasonableness of attorney fees and costs. Good Schools Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula County Pub. School Dist. No. 1, 2008 MT 231, 344 M 374, 188 P3d 1013 (2008), following Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666 (1988), Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), and Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs Allowed Both for Sanction and as Statutory Fees — Conditions of Dual Award: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants as a sanction for plaintiffs' violation of this rule. Defendants also prevailed on a ditch encroachment claim against plaintiffs and were thus entitled to attorney fees and costs as the prevailing party pursuant to 70-17-112. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, the conduct being punished was distinct under each respective authority, so the District Court was allowed to award attorney fees and costs both for a violation of this rule and pursuant to the statute. However, if attorney fees and costs are awarded as a sanction under this rule, the District Court must ensure that the conduct being sanctioned is not the same conduct for which attorney fees and costs are awarded under the statute because litigants are not entitled to duplicate awards for the same conduct. Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Remand for Determination of Appropriate Findings and Damages Related to Ditch Rights — Sanctions Dismissed Absent Specific Findings of Sanctionable Conduct: The parties entered a settlement agreement in 1998 regarding use and maintenance of a ditch that crossed plaintiffs' property and conveyed irrigation water to defendants' property. In 2002, plaintiffs alleged breach of the agreement, nuisance, and trespass. Defendants counterclaimed, alleging breach of the agreement, interference with water rights and easements, and nuisance. The District Court found that plaintiffs' claims were without merit and awarded sanctions against plaintiffs pursuant to this rule. The court also found that all the counterclaims were unfounded and dismissed the counterclaims with prejudice. Plaintiffs appealed, and defendants cross-appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that the findings of fact regarding plaintiffs' claims were supported by substantial credible evidence and not clearly erroneous, so the trial court's holding that defendants did not breach the agreement was affirmed. Dismissal of defendants' counterclaims, however, was not affirmed. Although claims of plaintiffs' physical interference were not supported by the evidence, under Kephart v. Portmann, 259 M 232, 855 P2d 120 (1993), plaintiffs' filing of the lawsuit and forcing defendants into court to defend their established rights constituted an impairment of defendants' acknowledged ditch rights under 70-17-112, so the Supreme Court remanded for a determination of defendants' damages, if any. In addition, the District Court failed to set out specific findings concerning whether plaintiffs breached the settlement agreement, so evaluation of the counterclaims was not possible, and the Supreme Court directed the District Court to enter appropriate findings on remand. Last, the District Court failed to set out specific findings concerning plaintiffs' acts warranting sanctions, stating only that plaintiffs' case was so strongly without merit that it was frivolous. Without more specific findings as to why sanctions were assessed, the Supreme Court vacated the award and directed the District Court on remand to enter specific findings of fact in support of its determination that plaintiffs violated Rule 11 and, if so, as to the appropriateness of the choice of sanction imposed (see Akin v. Q-L Investments, Inc., 959 F2d 521 (5th Cir. 1992)). Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Standard of Review of Rule 11 Sanctions — D'Agostino Clarified: Clarifying and restating the standard set forth in D'Agostino v. Swanson, 240 M 435, 784 P2d 919 (1990), Brandt v. Sande, 2000 MT 98, 299 M 256, 1 P3d 929 (2000), and other cases citing a different standard of review, the Supreme Court held that the standard of review of a District Court's decision to grant or deny sanctions under this rule is as follows: (1) any District Court determination that a pleading, motion, or other paper violated the rule will be reviewed de novo; (2) the District Court's findings of fact underlying a determination under (1) are reviewed for clear error; and (3) if the District Court determines that this rule was violated, the court's choice of sanction is reviewed for abuse of discretion. Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007), followed in Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Party Required to Defend Against Discovery Abuses — Award of Attorney Fees and Costs as Sanctions: The District Court concluded that plaintiffs' discovery abuses warranted sanctions under this rule, and awarded defendant costs and attorney fees without holding a hearing on the issue. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that there was no adequate basis for the award and that it was error to grant sanctions without a hearing. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court had scheduled and rescheduled a hearing, but plaintiffs ultimately withdrew their objection to the award of attorney fees and stipulated that the hearing should be vacated, that the amount of attorney fees was reasonable, and that plaintiffs agreed to waive their right to object to the lack of a hearing regarding the award of fees and costs. Based upon the stipulation, plaintiffs waived the right to a hearing on the award. Additionally, the reasons stated by the court for sanctions were more than adequate to impose sanctions for discovery abuses, and it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to award sanctions against plaintiffs. Stipe v. First Interstate Bank of Polson, 2005 MT 295, 329 M 320, 125 P3d 591 (2005).

Discretion of District Court to Grant Enlargement of Time to Respond to Motion: The wife filed a motion to enforce the pension provisions of a dissolution decree, and the husband moved for an enlargement of time nearly a month later. The District Court declined to grant the enlargement because there was nothing to indicate that the husband's failure to respond within the required 10 days was the result of excusable neglect. On appeal, the husband contended that under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, he was entitled to an enlargement of time in order to reply to the motion to enforce. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed. Parties are not entitled to an enlargement of time; rather, the granting of an enlargement of time is within the discretion of the District Court, which in this case found the husband's arguments unpersuasive. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Improper Filing of Pro Se Motion Considered Direct Contempt — Community Service Penalty Affirmed: Christian's attorney notified him of the intent to withdraw as counsel of record, and Christian subsequently filed a motion to set trial in District Court, with the attorney's name as counsel and signing the motion himself. The court held Christian in contempt for signing the motion pro se in violation of this rule and sentenced Christian to 1,000 hours of community service. Christian petitioned the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari, contesting the contempt order and the sentence. The Supreme Court noted that its review was limited to questions regarding jurisdiction and whether there was sufficient evidence to support the contempt finding. Christian argued that his conduct was at most an indirect contempt and that, as such, procedural due process was violated because there was no charging document filed against him. The Supreme Court disagreed. The offending document was within the immediate view and presence of the District Court and thus constituted direct contempt. The document was contemptuous on its face because Christian was acting as counsel without authority. The sentence was also affirmed. The District Court had considered requiring pro bono service and also noted that jail time was possible, but concluded that extensive community service was the appropriate penalty to dissuade Christian from similar future behavior. Christian's writ of certiorari was denied. Christian v. District Court, 2004 MT 1, 319 M 162, 83 P3d 811 (2004).

Party's Action on Remand Urging Reversal of Supreme Court Decision Insufficient to Warrant Sanctions: Following remand of Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001), plaintiff urged the District Court to reverse the Supreme Court's decision that an encumbrance on a lot was a clerical mistake and to deny defendants' costs of the appeal. The District Court improperly issued new findings of fact, in contravention of the law of the case, and denied defendants' appellate costs even though they were the prevailing party. Defendants appealed, asserting that plaintiff should be sanctioned pursuant to this rule for the actions taken on remand. The Supreme Court held that the actions on remand were neither frivolous nor brought for an improper purpose and declined to impose sanctions. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Sanctions Appropriate in Easement Case When Aerial Photographs Established Long-Time Presence of Road: Aerial photographs clearly showed that a road existed in exactly the same location since 1979, yet defendant proceeded with an easement case, contending that the road did not exist in 1985. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it assessed fees and costs against defendant because the contention was not well grounded in fact and defendant's arguments unreasonably and vexatiously multiplied the proceedings. Ponderosa Pines Ranch, Inc. v. Hevner, 2002 MT 184, 311 M 82, 53 P3d 381 (2002).

Inadvertent Use of Previous Cause Number on New Complaint Considered Technical, Nonprejudicial Defect: One day before expiration of the statute of limitations, the Lundquists filed a pro se complaint against Shook, Hamilton, and McBeth for fraudulent transfer of property, but in preparing the complaint, the Lundquists used a template from a prior fraudulent transfer case involving Shook, Hamilton, and Pederson and included the same cause number from the prior case. The Lundquists' former counsel notified the District Court that he was not representing the Lundquists in the case involving McBeth. One day prior to service of process on McBeth, the District Court ordered the Clerk of the District Court to withdraw the Lundquists' complaint on grounds that the complaint was filed in the same cause of action previously pending, and the Lundquists did not obtain the court's consent to amend prior pleadings and have their attorney of record sign the complaint against McBeth. The Lundquists then moved to have the court assign a new cause number to the complaint and allow amendment of the complaint to retain the original filing date. The court denied the motion, holding that if a new complaint was to be filed and a new cause number assigned, it would be considered filed as of the date on which it was presented for filing and not the date on which it was originally attempted to be filed. Thus, a new complaint was filed with a new cause number and filing date, but the new complaint was filed after expiration of the statute of limitations for fraudulent conveyance actions, so the District Court granted McBeth's dismissal motion because the complaint was not timely filed. The Lundquists appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. In filing the new complaint, the Lundquists had notified the court that they intended to proceed against McBeth in an action that was independent of the transfer litigated in the previous cause, and their use of the cause number from the previous action was inadvertent and a technical rather than fundamental defect. The Lundquists did not need the District Court's permission to file a new complaint, nor did the new pro se complaint require their attorney's signature. Because the Lundquists named McBeth in the complaint, filed the complaint prior to the expiration of the fraudulent transfer statute of limitations, and served McBeth with a copy of the complaint, McBeth was not prejudiced by the technical defect and the District Court should not have ordered the complaint withdrawn. Lundquist v. McBeth, 2001 MT 311, 308 M 1, 38 P3d 831 (2001).

Failure to Respond to Arbitration Request — Motion to Compel Arbitration Not Considered Frivolous or Abusive: An employer failed to timely respond to an employee's request for arbitration, and subsequently moved to compel arbitration. When the District Court denied the employer's motion to compel, the employee sought attorney fees and costs pursuant to this rule, contending that the employer's lack of response and motion to compel arbitration created an unnecessary delay and needlessly increased the costs of litigation. The District Court denied the request for fees and costs, and the employee appealed. The Supreme Court found nothing in the record suggesting that the employer's motion to compel was frivolous or amounted to abusive litigation tactics. Although the employer's indifference did suffice to waive the right to compel arbitration, it did not rise to the level of conduct interposed for an improper purpose as required for sanctions under this rule, so denial of attorney fees and costs was affirmed. Firestone v. Oasis Telecommunications, Data & Records, Inc., 2001 MT 297, 307 M 469, 38 P3d 796 (2001).

Adequate Grounds for Assessment of Mandatory Sanctions for Groundless Complaint — Time for Filing Motion for Sanctions: When a husband found out about his ex-wife's mortgage and security interest on the ranch property that was to be sold as part of a marriage dissolution, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch operations and meet his obligations. The husband subsequently filed suit against the ex-wife, the bank, and the bank president, who was the ex-wife's son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment and awarded sanctions to the ex-wife and the bank because the husband's complaint was groundless and was not pursued in good faith and because the husband's conduct was not reasonable under the circumstances. The husband appealed, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the District Court's findings were not clearly erroneous and that the award of sanctions was not an abuse of discretion. The District Court's rationale for finding a violation of this rule applied equally to the ex-wife and the bank, and once the court found the violation, imposition of sanctions was mandatory. The type of sanction imposed for a violation of this rule is uniquely within the discretion of the District Court. Further, the time when sanctions are to be imposed rests in the discretion of the trial judge, and a motion under this rule is not barred if it is filed after a dismissal order or after entry of judgment. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Sanctions Correctly Denied When Answer Seemed "Reasonable" Under Circumstances — Selective Enforcement Ultimately Relied Upon as Defense: Youngwirth was sued by the architectural committee of his subdivision to enforce restrictive covenants against him prohibiting him from having four dwelling units on his property. Youngwirth answered the complaint with a denial that he had four dwelling units on the property. When the committee sought sanctions for Youngwirth's denial of a claim that seemed so obviously true, the District Court denied the requested sanctions. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that by the time of trial, Youngwirth's defense had been distilled down to a claim of selective enforcement of the covenants against him and that the District Court held that even though the plaintiff prevailed, the "defendant's defense was reasonable". Madison Addition Architectural Comm. v. Youngwirth, 2000 MT 293, 302 M 302, 15 P3d 1175, 57 St. Rep. 1244 (2000).

Imposition of Liability as Matter of Law as Sanction for Discovery Abuse: Following extensive discovery requests, plaintiffs moved to compel discovery and for sanctions. The District Court imposed liability as a matter of law upon defendants as a sanction for discovery abuse. The court based its decision on findings that defendants: (1) misrepresented their corporate ownership and control; (2) falsely represented in briefs and at hearing that all pertinent documents had been provided; (3) knowingly withheld and concealed significant information; (4) falsely represented their involvement with equipment design and construction standards; and (5) falsely represented that certain investigation documents had been prepared for purposes of litigation. Citing In re Adoption of R.D.T., 239 M 33, 778 P2d 416 (1989), defendants contended on appeal that the court's use of deposition testimony solicited subsequent to defendants' discovery responses invoked the wisdom of hindsight, resulting in a Kafkaesque nightmare. After examining the record and noting sufficient evidence supporting the District Court's findings of defendants' repeated and willful concealment and misrepresentation of facts during discovery, the Supreme Court held that defendants had misconstrued both R.D.T. and Franz Kafka, noting that if anyone in the case were guilty of creating a nightmare, it was defendants through their refusal to comply with rules of discovery and civil procedure and to disclose information necessary for the proper presentation of plaintiffs' case. Imposition of liability as a matter of law as a sanction for discovery abuses was affirmed. Bulen v. Navajo Refining Co., Inc., 2000 MT 222, 301 M 195, 9 P3d 607, 57 St. Rep. 912 (2000), following First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384 (1986).

Sanctions Not Applied Absent Finding of Bad Faith in State Timber Sale: Plaintiff sought sanctions against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under this rule for requesting an injunction bond pursuant to 77-1-110 in relation to plaintiff's attempt to halt a timber sale. The District Court found that an injunction bond was not required, but also denied sanctions. On appeal, plaintiff contended that sanctions should apply because the DNRC's actions were intended solely to harass and cause needless increase in the cost of litigation. The Supreme Court agreed that the DNRC could not be said to have acted in bad faith by seeking to have a bond posted, so the District Court did not err in declining to impose sanctions under this rule. Friends of the Wild Swan v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2000 MT 209, 301 M 1, 6 P3d 972, 57 St. Rep. 816 (2000).

No Error in Failure to Hold Hearing on Sanctions Absent Objection: The District Court found that plaintiff's attorney filed a complaint without conducting an investigation into the facts and imposed sanctions under this rule, but neglected to hold a hearing before doing so. Plaintiff contended that sanctions were improper because no hearing was held. The Supreme Court noted that plaintiff was clearly entitled to a hearing, but had failed to timely object to the failure to conduct one. The Supreme Court will not hold a District Court in error for an omission that the District Court was not given an opportunity to correct or review unless a timely objection is made. The imposition of sanctions was affirmed. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000). See also Green v. Green, 176 M 532, 579 P2d 1235 (1978).

Wait of Thirteen Months to Question Whether Sanctions Should Be Imposed — Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard: Defendant sought sanctions against Palmer, plaintiff's attorney, under Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., and this rule for Palmer's defiance of scheduling and pretrial orders, and the District Court awarded sanctions under Rule 37. Palmer alleged that his due process rights were violated because he did not receive notice and an opportunity to be heard, but the due process arguments were not supported in the record. The Supreme Court agreed that when a person is sanctioned with attorney fees and costs under Rule 37, that person is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard before sanctions are imposed. However, in this case, Palmer waited more than 13 months after defendants moved for sanctions to question whether they should be imposed. Notice was adequate, and Palmer also was allowed to argue the appropriateness of sanctions at a hearing. Palmer's argument on appeal, that Rule 37 did not apply to him because he was a nonparty deponent, was not addressed because the issue was raised for the first time on appeal. The Supreme Court noted that Rule 16(f), M.R.Civ.P., clearly allows sanctions in cases like this one, in which an attorney defies a District Court's scheduling and pretrial orders. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000).

Adequate Due Process and Opportunity to Appear — Sanctions Appropriate for Frivolous Suit: Brandts invested in a condominium development corporation, loaning $20,000 to the corporation president. The promissory note exchanged for the loan provided that Brandts would be repaid with interest upon sale of a condominium to a family trust. Sande acted as escrow agent for the closing of the real estate sale and purchase transaction. The corporation president had instructed the title company to repay Brandts upon closing, but later rescinded that instruction, so funds from the purchase of the condominium were disbursed to the corporation and to various creditors instead of to Brandts. When the corporation was later sold, Brandts signed an agreement releasing and discharging their claims against the corporation. Nearly 2 years later, Brandts sued Sande and the title company for negligently and wrongfully applying $20,000 from the escrow account. The District Court determined that there was neither a valid assignment nor legal notice of an assignment of Brandts' interest in the funds from the closing, so Sande owed no legal duty to Brandts. The court summarily dismissed the suit and ordered sanctions against Brandts for filing a frivolous complaint, pursuant to this rule. The record on appeal showed that the District Court went to great lengths to ensure that Brandts were afforded due process by giving them notice to show cause and affording them an opportunity to be heard and to defend against the imposition of sanctions. The court did not err in assessing Brandts with Sande's attorney fees and costs. Brandt v. Sande, 2000 MT 98, 299 M 256, 1 P3d 929, 57 St. Rep. 400 (2000). See also Smith v. Electronic Parts, Inc., 274 M 252, 907 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 1215 (1995).

Discovery Requests Designed to Harass and Embarrass Opposing Counsel Worthy of Sanction: Counsel for the heirs to an estate filed for sanctions against the estate's attorneys, contending that the estate's attorneys had knowingly misrepresented provisions of the Insurance Code and presented unwarranted positions of law to the District Court. The estate's attorneys subsequently filed for a protective order and sanctions against the heirs' attorney, arguing that various discovery requests were abusive, harassing, and constituted a personal attack on the estate's attorneys. The District Court denied the heirs' attorney's motion and granted the estate's attorneys' motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding adequate evidence in the record that the discovery requests in question were not designed to elicit any relevant information, but rather were designed to harass and embarrass opposing counsel and needlessly increase the costs of litigation. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000), followed in Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Improper Award of Joint and Several Sanctions Under Rule 37(c) — Award of Fees and Costs Proper as Sanction Under Rule 11: Pursuant to Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P., the trial court held both plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel jointly and severally liable for attorney costs and fees associated with a dilatory discovery action. Plaintiff's attorney correctly argued that the language of Rule 37(c) only allows a court to order that sanctions be paid by a party, so it was error to order that sanctions be paid by the party and the party's attorney under that rule. However, although Rule 37(c) was unavailable as a source of authority for imposing sanctions under this scenario, this rule did provide a basis for discipline for dilatory discovery. The District Court reached the right result but for the wrong reason. The error was harmless, and the Supreme Court affirmed the award of sanctions pursuant to this rule. Morris v. Big Sky Thoroughbred Farms, Inc., 1998 MT 229, 291 M 32, 965 P2d 890, 55 St. Rep. 957 (1998). See also Robertus v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 207, 344 M 157, 189 P3d 582 (2008).

Note: The Supreme Court amended Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P., to reflect the Morris holding by order dated September 15, 1998, published at 55 St. Rep. 979 (1998).

Improper Foreclosure Action Claims Not Grounded in Fact — Sanctions Proper: Glickman defaulted on his property payments, and following two foreclosure actions, the property was sold at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale. Glickman did not appeal either action but later filed an "original petition" seeking to quiet title, damages, and a declaratory judgment regarding the validity of the judgments, foreclosure decrees, and Sheriff's sales. Any reasonable inquiry by Glickman and his attorney prior to filing the "original petition" would have shown that the claims were not grounded in fact and were not warranted by existing law or by a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law and that unnecessary delay and needless increase in litigation and cost would result from the claims. The award of attorney fees and costs pursuant to this rule were appropriate. Glickman v. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, 1998 MT 8, 287 M 161, 951 P2d 1388, 55 St. Rep. 27 (1998).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randono Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randono case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of Rule 54(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under this rule and that costs could be awarded pursuant to Rule 54(d). However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under 25-10-201. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

New Trial on Damages for Employer's Failure to Disclose Files Helping Employee's Wrongful Discharge Case: In a wrongful discharge action, an employee was properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages (he had been awarded $70,000 by a jury) as a sanction against the hospital-employer, which failed to give him discovery documents relevant to and favoring the employee on issues of the hospital's liability and employee's damages. The employee was anonymously sent the documents after the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Sanction of $5,500 Against Employer for Failure to Disclose Files Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly sanctioned the employer by granting the plaintiff $5,500 for amounts expended for work on summary judgment and, after the verdict, on the basis that documents in the employer's files were requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer. The documents, which were anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showed that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff. The documents would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Notice and Hearing Required Before Imposing Sanctions: Although this rule does not state that a trial court must give notice to show cause and hold a hearing before imposing sanctions, the court should do so in order to provide due process and afford the party sufficient time to prepare its case against imposition of sanctions. The court should also specify in its judgment or order the pleadings, motions, or other papers upon which it bases imposition of this rule's sanctions. Lindey's, Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 489, 872 P2d 767, 51 St. Rep. 359 (1994).

Nonparents Filing Child Custody Proceeding Not Subject to Sanctions: The grandparents filed an action to obtain custody of their grandchildren. The lower court dismissed the petition and, relying on In re Marriage of Miller, 251 M 300, 825 P2d 189 (1992), awarded attorney fees to the mother as sanctions against the grandparents. The Supreme Court distinguished Miller and held that the grandparents had a reasonable basis to rely on 40-4-211 to seek custody and therefore were not subject to sanctions. In re Custody of R.R.K., R.D.K., & L.M.K., 260 M 191, 859 P2d 998, 50 St. Rep. 1002 (1993).

Form of Pleadings When Information in Exclusive Control of Culpable Party: Plaintiff was injured on the job but did not know whether there was a meritorious cause of action or whether there were any culpable parties. He argued that he could not file a complaint and conduct discovery under this rule's requirement of certification that the complaint be grounded in fact because the information needed to certify the facts was in the exclusive control of the potentially culpable parties. However, this rule only requires that a party make reasonable inquiry and then certify based on knowledge, information, and belief. This rule does not require a guarantee or certification that every detailed fact has been thoroughly investigated and found to be correct. The Supreme Court cited the practices of joinder of parties and the filing of a fictitious "Doe" pleading as alternative ways to commence an action under such circumstances. Temple v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992).

Award of Sanctions Reversed — Argument Supported by Authorities: The District Court granted sanctions against plaintiffs after determining that they had repeatedly misrepresented the holdings in a previous Supreme Court decision regarding notice requirements relating to oil leases. After ruling in favor of plaintiffs on one aspect of their argument and determining that the argument was amply supported in law, the Supreme Court reversed the award of sanctions. Sundheim v. Reef Oil Corp., 247 M 244, 806 P2d 503, 48 St. Rep. 181 (1991).

Sanctions Denied — Suit Not Totally Frivolous: The plaintiff initiated a suit alleging tortious interference with a business relationship. The action was dismissed by summary judgment, and the lower court imposed sanctions on the plaintiff for bringing a frivolous suit. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the action but reversed the imposition of sanctions, ruling that the plaintiff's suit was not totally frivolous nor did it appear to have been brought for an improper purpose. Smith v. Barrett, 242 M 37, 788 P2d 324, 47 St. Rep. 514 (1990).

Tort of Malicious Defense Not Recognized in Montana: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had never intended to engage in litigation yet allowed her attorney to indicate to the plaintiff's bank that litigation was pending. This action resulted in certain funds of the plaintiff being held by the bank, thereby damaging the plaintiff's business relations. The plaintiff argued that the defendant's opposition to the suit against her for tortious interference with a business relation constituted the tort of malicious defense. The Supreme Court held that the tort of malicious defense has never been recognized in Montana. The court stated that it was not deciding if the tort should be recognized but that under the facts, the defendant's actions were not malicious and the tort was not applicable. Smith v. Barrett, 242 M 37, 788 P2d 324, 47 St. Rep. 514 (1990).

Lousy Pleadings Grounds for Sanctions: The District Court imposed a $1,200 sanction on the plaintiffs and their attorney as a punishment for their incomprehensible pleadings. The lower court found that this inept legal work cost the defendant thousands of dollars of unnecessary legal expense. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision, ruling that the lower court's action was not an abuse of discretion. McCracken v. Chinook, 242 M 21, 788 P2d 892, 47 St. Rep. 501 (1990).

Sanctions Warranted Upon Bad Faith Joinder of Third-Party Defendant — Standard Applicable to Review of Award of Sanctions: The District Court assessed sanctions against a party whose joinder of a third-party defendant was found to be unjustifiable, ill-advised, frivolous, fraudulent, malicious, and oppressive. In affirming the award of sanctions, the Supreme Court cited numerous federal cases, holding that: (1) the trial court's findings of fact will be overturned if clearly erroneous; (2) the court's legal conclusion that facts constitute a violation of this rule will be reversed if the determination constitutes an abuse of discretion; (3) a case will be reviewed de novo only if the violation is based on the legal sufficiency of a plea or motion; (4) once the court determines that a case has no merit or has been commenced for an improper purpose, the mandatory language of the rule requires the imposition of sanctions on the offending party or his counsel, or both; (5) failure to impose sanctions when circumstances reveal that the rule has been violated constitutes reversible error; and (6) the form and amount of the sanction imposed will be overturned only in cases of an abuse of discretion by the trial court. D'Agostino v. Swanson, 240 M 435, 784 P2d 919, 47 St. Rep. 10 (1990), followed in Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), Wise v. Sebena, 248 M 32, 808 P2d 494, 48 St. Rep. 309 (1991), Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 269 M 32, 887 P2d 193, 51 St. Rep. 1345 (1994), Madison Addition Architectural Comm. v. Youngwirth, 2000 MT 293, 302 M 302, 15 P3d 1175, 57 St. Rep. 1244 (2000), and Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282, and clarified in Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Adoption Petition Not Brought in Bad Faith: The mother of a child petitioned to have her child adopted by her ex-husband. The child's father, also an ex-husband of the mother, had the petition dismissed because he had not voluntarily relinquished his parental rights as required by statute. The biological father asked for sanctions against the mother and her attorney, arguing that the petition had been brought in bad faith and for an improper purpose. He argued that even a cursory reading of the statute would have shown that the petition could not be properly filed and that the action had only been undertaken to interfere with his visitation rights. The Supreme Court refused to impose sanctions, holding that to avoid sanctions under this rule, it is not necessary that a party be correct in his view of the law, only that he make a good faith argument in support of his view. In re Adoption of R.D.T., 239 M 33, 778 P2d 416, 46 St. Rep. 1489 (1989).

Objective Reasonableness Standard Applicable to Sanctions: More stringent than the original good faith formula, this rule imposes an objective reasonableness standard designed to prevent litigation and avoid waste. Accordingly, an attorney must make a reasonable inquiry into the facts and law that serve as the basis for his complaint. A party need not be correct in his view of the law. Rather, the pleader, at a minimum, must have a good faith argument for his view of what the law is or should be. Bee Broadcasting Associates v. Reier, 236 M 275, 769 P2d 709, 46 St. Rep. 356 (1989), followed in Jacildo v. McFadden, 253 M 114, 831 P2d 597, 49 St. Rep. 467 (1992).

Allegations Ungrounded in Fact and Legally Insufficient — Sanctions Warranted: The District Court properly awarded sanctions after finding that plaintiff's complaint was replete with allegations of fraud, misrepresentation, deceit, bad faith, malice, concealment, perjury, conspiracy, and collusion; yet, none of the allegations were grounded in fact or put forward any legal theory upon which relief could be granted. Accordingly, the court found that reasonable minds could only conclude that the action was interposed in order to harass or cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in costs of litigation. Brown v. Jensen, 231 M 340, 753 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 665 (1988).

Contradictory and Inconsistent Actions Warranting Sanctions: The District Court found an easement was warranted, and appellant testified that he intended to grant one, but later appellant informed respondent that no easement would be forthcoming. Respondent used Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P., as a basis for a motion for an easement. The District Court found appellant had acted in a contradictory and inconsistent manner with regard to the easement and that Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., sanctions were proper. Respondent's use of Rule 70 was inappropriate because no judgment had been entered, but that did not defeat his motion because it was not unreasonable under the circumstances. Searight v. Cimino, 230 M 96, 748 P2d 948, 45 St. Rep. 46 (1988).

Bad Faith Paternity Defense — Fees Justified: The assessment of fees was proper under this rule where blood tests showed a 99.14% probability of paternity, but the alleged father denied paternity although admitting at trial that he believed he was the father, continuing to resist legal acknowledgement of paternity to gain leverage on the issue of support. He also admitted he undervalued property in his financial declaration and underestimated the child's need in his needs statement. These actions constituted needless delay by bad faith pleading, triggering Rule 11 sanctions. State ex rel. Sorenson v. Roske, 229 M 151, 745 P2d 365, 44 St. Rep. 1854 (1987).

Sufficiency of Attorney's Signature After Expiration of Statute of Limitations on Reply: A petition for valuation of shares of stock was timely filed but without the signature of a Montana attorney. The signing of the petition after expiration of the 60-day statute of limitations on the reply, accomplished promptly after the attorney was made aware of objection by defense counsel, clearly was within the exception of Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), allowing late signatures. Gold Reserve Corp. v. McCarty, 228 M 512, 744 P2d 160, 44 St. Rep. 1723 (1987).

Genuine Controversy Warranting Attorney Fees Not Frivolous: A party that defended itself at the District Court level, cross-claimed against another party, and on appeal contended that damages and attorney fees should have been awarded may not maintain at the same time that the case is a frivolous lawsuit. Branstetter v. Beaumont Supper Club, Inc., 224 M 20, 727 P2d 933, 43 St. Rep. 1981 (1986).

Imposition of Sanctions Within Discretion of Trial Court: Plaintiff moved for relitigation of contractual issues on which judgment was final and also moved for consideration of new contractual issues that had arisen after judgment. Sanctions may be imposed at the trial court's discretion if a motion has been filed for purposes of delay or is not offered in good faith. Assessment of reasonable attorney fees and costs against plaintiff and his attorney was not an abuse of discretion. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 223 M 8, 723 P2d 954, 43 St. Rep. 1489 (1986), followed in Bee Broadcasting Associates v. Reier, 236 M 275, 769 P2d 709, 46 St. Rep. 356 (1989).

Verification Not Required — When: Since the adoption of the rules, it is not ordinarily required that either a complaint or an answer be verified. Keller v. Hanson, 157 M 307, 485 P2d 705 (1971).

Failure to Verify — Effect: When failure to verify was not raised as an issue until after trial and no claim was made that the failure was prejudicial, there was no error. The proper remedy was a motion to strike. Adams v. Davis, 142 M 587, 386 P2d 574 (1963).

Former Rule 12. Defenses and objections — when and how presented — by pleading or motion — motion for judgment on pleadings

State Not Required to File Response to Petition for Reinstatement — Default Judgment Properly Denied: The petitioner filed a petition for reinstatement of his driver's license. After the state failed to file an answer brief, the petitioner argued that he was entitled to a default judgment. The District Court concluded that the specific provisions of 61-8-403 that set forth the procedure for reinstatement do not require the state to file an answer. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the general responsive pleading requirements did not apply to reinstatement proceedings. Ditton v. Dept. of Justice, 2014 MT 54, 374 Mont. 122, 319 P.3d 1268.

Voluntary Appearance Constituting Waiver of Jurisdiction Defense: Defendant North Dakota insurance company voluntarily appeared in District Court and sought affirmative relief, but did not argue any jurisdictional issues until some 3 ½ months later. By voluntarily appearing and filing motions seeking relief on nonjurisdictional grounds, defendant admitted the authority and jurisdiction of the District Court and was precluded from later arguing lack of personal jurisdiction. Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008), followed in D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co, 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009). See also Spencer v. Ukra, 246 M 430, 804 P2d 380 (1991).

Service Upon Limited Liability Company Not Constituting Service Upon Individual Company Members — No Joinder of Member Solely for Executing on Judgment Against Company: Plaintiff obtained a judgment against a limited liability company, but when plaintiff discovered that the company had no assets to levy against, plaintiff moved to levy judgment against defendant personally. The motion was dismissed without prejudice, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although defendant knew of the lawsuit involving the company, defendant was not separately served, and service upon the company did not constitute service upon the individual members of the company. Further, the District Court did not err in refusing to join defendant after judgment was rendered solely for the purpose of executing judgment because doing so would have deprived defendant of the due process right to notice and the opportunity to be heard. Ioerger v. Reiner, 2005 MT 155, 327 M 424, 114 P3d 1028 (2005), following S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977), Hadford v. Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc., 1998 MT 179, 289 M 529, 962 P2d 1198 (1998), Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), and Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Denial of Motion to Change Venue — Explanation Within Court Discretion: Under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., when a court grants a motion under Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the court shall support its order with an explanation of its reason, but there is no comparable requirement for orders denying motions to change venue. A District Court is at liberty to deny a venue motion with or without comment. Therefore, it was not error for a court to provide an explanation for why defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, nor was it error for the court to direct plaintiff to prepare an appropriate memorandum and order for the court to sign. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Venue — Second Suit Abuse of Process: Venue was proper in Lewis and Clark County, the location clearly indicated in the contract as the place where the contract was to be performed. It was an abuse of process for the defendant in a suit filed in District Court in Lewis and Clark County to file an action against the plaintiff in Justice's Court in Granite County. This was an attempt to thwart the plain provisions of the written contract and a use of the court system to accomplish that goal. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the Lewis and Clark County District Court requiring defendant to dismiss its action filed in Justice's Court in Granite County. Leasing, Inc. v. Discovery Ski Corp., 235 M 133, 765 P2d 176, 45 St. Rep. 2250 (1988).

Former Rule 12(a). When presented

Assurance by Plaintiffs' Counsel to Not Enter Default — Lack of Notice to Defendants — Four-Prong Test for Good Cause Correctly Applied — Setting Aside of Default Proper: Landlords sued their former tenants, alleging that the tenants had caused considerable damage to the rental property. After the tenants were served with the complaint, a friend of the tenants, on their behalf, contacted the landlords' attorney to negotiate a settlement. The attorney assured the friend that the landlords would not seek a default against the tenants. Nevertheless, the attorney moved for and received a default against the tenants. Thereafter, a new attorney filed a notice of appearance for the landlords as well as an application for entry of default judgment, neither of which was served on the tenants. The District Court issued a default judgment against the tenants on the same day they filed a motion to continue. Following a hearing, however, the District Court set aside the default. On appeal, the landlords argued that the District Court abused its discretion in setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, first noting that default judgments are generally disfavored, and applying the four-prong test for good cause set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 Mont. 465, 791 P.2d 784 (1990). In this case, the landlords' attorney had not honored his promise to not enter a default against the tenants and had failed to provide them the notice required under former Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (now superseded). Therefore, there was good cause to set aside the judgment. Benintendi v. Hein, 2011 MT 298, 363 Mont. 32, 265 P.3d 1239.

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005).

Child Custody Disputes — Defaults Disfavored: The father sought a modification of custody of his children. His wife failed to file her response within the time provided by the rules. The father argued that he was entitled to custody of his children by default. The Supreme Court held that any doubt in the late filing of an answer should be resolved by trial on the merits of the case, and custody cases present a compelling reason for a hearing on the merits. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Time for Pleading After Denial of Motion: Defendants had 20 days from day on which motion to dismiss complaint was denied in which to serve and file responsive pleading. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Default Taken Prematurely — Service by Publication: Husband who went to Canada and was personally served there in divorce action had 40 days in which to answer under the combined time allotted in Rules 4(D)(5)(g) and 12(a), M.R.Civ.P., and default taken before that time was voidable. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Jurisdiction — Attaches When: Jurisdiction of court attaches at time of personal service of complaint and summons; personal service of summons and complaint in divorce action precluded and made a nullity a subsequent divorce entered founded upon service by publication. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Reply to Counterclaim Following Default Properly Ignored: Where a reply to a counterclaim was not filed until 19 months after the expiration of the 20-day period and 14 months after default had been entered, the court did not err in disregarding the belated pleading on motion for judgment on the counterclaim. Munger v. Nelson, 61 M 104, 201 P 286 (1921).

Failure to State a Claim 676
Necessary Parties to Action 690
Capacity of Parties 690
Dismissal Versus Summary Judgment 691

GENERAL

Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Filed 7 Years After Commencement of Proceedings Timely: Parties to a probate matter filed a motion to dismiss 7 years after the commencement of probate proceedings. The District Court erred in denying the motion because it lacked subject matter jurisdiction. A party cannot waive or confer jurisdiction by consent when there is no basis for jurisdiction in law and the proceedings were declared void. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121.

No Error in Failure to Grant Change of Venue After Trial Begun: Dean moved for a change of venue at the end of the first day of trial, claiming that a fair trial could not be had because many venire members knew of the case, knew the parties, disapproved of marijuana use, and had been influenced by pretrial publicity and taxpayer bias. The trial court denied the change of venue motion, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The trial court allowed extensive voir dire, including private questioning of each panel member, and liberally granted motions to excuse jurors for cause. All jurors confirmed that their prior knowledge and opinions about witnesses would not interfere with their impartiality, and Dean made no assertion that the trial court abused its discretion by denying a challenge for cause to any juror. Denial of the belated motion for a venue change was affirmed. Dean v. Sanders County, 2009 MT 88, 350 M 8, 204 P3d 722 (2009).

Failure to Comply With Briefing Schedule on Issue of Personal Jurisdiction —Jurisdiction Defense Waived: A former wife brought a contempt petition against her former husband for his alleged failure to pay debts pursuant to the parties' Georgia marriage dissolution. The husband's counsel appeared in District Court and indicated that a motion might be filed objecting to personal jurisdiction. The court set a schedule for filing the motion and set a date for hearing, but counsel failed to submit a motion or brief within the time set by the court or to request an extension. At the hearing and without having filed a motion and brief, counsel raised the question of personal jurisdiction. The court ordered briefing on the question of whether counsel's failure to file a motion and brief by the original deadline amounted to waiver of the personal jurisdiction issue, but counsel's subsequent brief addressed only the jurisdiction issue and not the waiver issue. The court then overruled the objection to personal jurisdiction and the case went to trial. The husband appealed the denial of his motion to dismiss based on lack of personal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. When a defendant who has been served with process files an appearance, indicates the intent to file a motion challenging personal jurisdiction, and then fails to file the motion or a supporting brief within the timeframe established by the scheduling order, the defendant waives the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction. Smith v. Smith, 2008 MT 461, 348 M 174, 199 P3d 824 (2008), distinguishing Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171 (1993).

Failure to State Legal Defense in Answer — Judgment on Pleadings Proper: Plaintiff filed an action for damages for breach of contract and nonpayment of an account. Defendant filed a response, after which plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings. The District Court granted the motion, and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed after holding that defendant failed either to deny any of the material allegations in the complaint or to allege any affirmative defense to defeat the action. Although pleadings are to be taken in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, defendant's failure to state a legal defense warranted judgment on the pleadings. Neil Consultants, Inc. v. Lindeman, 2006 MT 80, 331 M 514, 134 P3d 43 (2006).

Judgment on Pleadings — Pro Se Litigant Not Denied Opportunity to Be Heard or Access to Courts: Plaintiff filed an action for damages for breach of contract and nonpayment of an account. Defendant filed a pro se response, after which plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings. The District Court granted the motion based on defendant's failure to state a legal defense. Defendant appealed on grounds that he was denied the opportunity to be heard and denied access to the courts, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although pro se litigants may be given a certain amount of latitude, that latitude cannot be so broad as to prejudice the other party, and it is reasonable to expect pro se litigants to adhere to procedural rules. Here, defendant's filing of an answer in response to the complaint demonstrated access to the courts, and defendant identified no impediment beyond the pro se status that prevented pleading a legal defense. Defendant was not denied the opportunity to be heard or access to the courts. Neil Consultants, Inc. v. Lindeman, 2006 MT 80, 331 M 514, 134 P3d 43 (2006).

Successful Motion for Judgment on Pleadings — Standard of Review: A successful motion for judgment on the pleadings must establish that no material issue of fact remains and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The pleadings are to be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whose allegations are taken as true. Because a motion for judgment on the pleadings is decided as a matter of law, the Supreme Court standard of review for conclusions of law is whether the District Court was correct. Neil Consultants, Inc. v. Lindeman, 2006 MT 80, 331 M 514, 134 P3d 43 (2006), following Paulson v. Flathead Conserv. District, 2004 MT 136, 321 M 364, 91 P3d 569 (2004).

Reference to Matters Outside Complaint — Error in Failure to Notify Parties of Intent to Grant Summary Judgment: Stokes filed a complaint against the state alleging inverse condemnation pursuant to a public highway expansion project. The state moved to dismiss the complaint on grounds that prior litigation had established the exact footprint of Stokes' easement and that for purposes of judicial economy, Stokes should be required to pursue the claim in a pending eminent domain action involving the same parcels of land. The District Court agreed with the state and dismissed the complaint. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that by referring to matters outside the complaint, the District Court effectively transformed the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and then failed to notify the parties of its intention to do so, thereby failing to extend to the parties an opportunity to present additional material as required in this rule. Failure to comply with this rule was reversible error, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Stokes v. St., 2005 MT 42, 326 M 138, 107 P3d 494 (2005).

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001).

State Remedy and State Court Enforcement of Contract Wages Required by Federal Davis-Bacon Act: The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction of state contract law claims against a contractor and subcontractors by workers hired to build housing on Malmstrom Air Force base under a contract between the contractor and the Air Force. The workers claimed that they were not paid the prevailing wages required by the federal Davis-Bacon Act. The defendants claimed that there was no private right of action and that the workers had not exhausted their federal administrative remedies. The evidence showed that the workers extensively used the administrative remedies, taking all proper steps to attempt to administratively resolve the dispute. The workers were not seeking to enforce the Davis-Bacon Act labor standards; they sought to enforce a contract that includes wages required by the Act, a subtle but important distinction. The Act does not preempt the workers' right to a state enforcement action, using state remedies, under the facts of this case. That right is in keeping with Montana's longstanding policy and constitutional guarantee in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., of citizens' access to Montana courts when they are aggrieved. As third-party beneficiaries of the contract, the workers have the right to sue in state court to enforce the contract under state law. Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

Third-Party Defendant Related to District Court Judge — Denial of Motion for Change of Venue When Not Timely Filed: Over a 2½-year period, one of plaintiff's employees forged signatures on more than 100 company checks and money orders, made them payable to herself, and deposited the proceeds in her personal account in a Missoula credit union. Plaintiff ultimately filed an action against the credit union and sought a change of venue from Missoula County on grounds that a fair trial could not be had in that county. The employee was related to one of the District Court judges in the county, although not the same judge that heard the case, but plaintiff nevertheless asserted a conflict of interest because both judges worked in the same courthouse in the same judicial district. The motion for change of venue was denied, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The motion for change of venue was not filed within 20 days of the credit union's answer, as required in this rule, so the untimely motion was properly denied. Yarbro, Ltd. v. Missoula Fed. Credit Union, 2002 MT 152, 310 M 346, 50 P3d 158 (2002).

Venue Versus Jurisdiction — Failure to Move for Change of Venue at Initial Appearance Constituting Waiver of Right to Later Object to Venue: A mother filed in District Court in Judith Basin County for review of a child support modification consent order by the Department of Public Health and Human Services Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) reducing the father's child support obligation. CSED moved for dismissal, claiming that the mother had failed to exhaust her administrative remedies. The District Court granted the motion based on lack of jurisdiction, concluding that the petition should have been filed in a different county. The mother appealed, contending that the court confused the concepts of venue and jurisdiction and contending that dismissal of the petition for lack of jurisdiction was erroneous as a matter of law. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed. The District Court's interpretation of 2-4-702 as a requirement that a petition for judicial review must be filed in the correct venue for the court to obtain jurisdiction was incorrect as a matter of law. Jurisdiction is a court's authority to hear and determine a case that goes to the power of the court and cannot be waived or conferred by consent of the parties when there is no basis for jurisdiction under the law, while venue refers to the place where a case is to be heard or where the power of the court is to be exercised and is a personal privilege of defendant that may be waived and that is considered waived pursuant to this rule unless a motion to change venue is made at defendant's initial appearance. Thus, the mother's petition for judicial review vested the Judith Basin County District Court with jurisdiction under 2-4-702. Whether venue was proper in the county where the petition was filed was an entirely different issue. Section 2-4-702 also sets forth the proper place where a contested administrative decision can be heard, providing that the petition must be filed in the District Court for the county where the petitioner resides or has a principal place of business or where the agency maintains its principal office. Upon proper motion, the matter should have been transferred to the proper county, but CSED failed to move for a change of venue at the initial appearance, thereby waiving its right to later object to venue, opting instead to move to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. Therefore, Judith Basin County was a proper place for trial absent agreement by the parties to transfer venue. In re Support Obligation of McGurran, 2002 MT 144, 310 M 268, 49 P3d 626 (2002).

Miscalculation of Amount Necessary to Redeem Tax Lien — No Violation of Assignee's Constitutionally Protected Property Rights — Section 1983 Claim Properly Dismissed: Shepherd held an assignment of the tax sale certificate on real property in Red Lodge. A few days before the redemption period was to expire, the owner of record redeemed the property by paying $4,407.28, but the County Treasurer unintentionally overlooked an additional $56.30 in interest that had accrued between the date that notice was given that a tax deed would be issued and the date of redemption. Shepherd then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983, alleging that the county's failure to collect the statutorily required amount for redemption deprived Shepherd of a property interest without due process of law. Shepherd sought $250,000 in general damages, punitive damages, and attorney fees and costs. Shortly thereafter, the county tendered Shepherd $56.30 plus interest, but Shepherd rejected the money and added a negligence claim to the complaint. The District Court dismissed the section 1983 claim on grounds that Shepherd failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, and awarded summary judgment to the county on the negligence claim, subject to the payment of $60.73 of accumulated interest then owed to Shepherd. Shepherd appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Without ruling on whether Shepherd had a property right, the Supreme Court concluded that the claim failed as a matter of law. To prevail on a section 1983 claim pursuant to Orozco v. Day, 281 M 341, 934 P2d 1009 (1997), plaintiff must establish a violation of federal constitutional or statutory rights proximately caused by the conduct of a person acting under color of state law. Shepherd alleged a violation of the federal constitutional right to due process, but the process due in this case pertained to the redemption of tax liens under Montana law, and except for the inadvertent miscalculation of interest due, that process was followed. The miscalculation was at most a ministerial error, and to equate the miscalculation with a denial of due process would trivialize the constitution and the important remedial purpose of section 1983. Because there was no denial of due process, there was no section 1983 claim, and the District Court properly dismissed Shepherd's claim pursuant to this rule. Shepherd v. Carbon County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2002 MT 98, 309 M 391, 46 P3d 634 (2002).

Validity and Enforceability of Memorandum of Understanding — Findings of Facts and Conclusions of Law Not Required: The District Court ruled that the parties had entered into a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU) regarding the parties' obligations applicable to an agricultural lease. The defendants argued that the MOU was simply an agreement to agree, that only a formal settlement agreement would bind the parties, and that the District Court erred in finding the MOU to be binding without setting out its findings of fact and conclusions of law. The plaintiff maintained that the MOU was an unconditional settlement agreement, that a more formal settlement document was not necessary to finalize or carry out the MOU, and that the court had no duty to set out its findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court's ruling and affirmed. All interested parties were present at the settlement conference and participated in negotiations, which ended with all the parties signing the MOU, memorializing the agreement among the signatories. Clearly there was a meeting of the minds during negotiations, and all the parties anticipated being bound by the MOU. The MOU was not conditioned upon the execution of a formal settlement agreement, so one was not necessary. The Supreme Court has recognized the validity of similar MOUs in Hetherington v. Ford Motor Co., 257 M 395, 849 P2d 1039 (1993), and Marta Corp. v. Thoft, 271 M 109, 894 P2d 333 (1995), and concluded that the agreement memorialized in the MOU here was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories. Further, under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., findings and conclusions are unnecessary on decisions of motions except for judgments at trial, which did not apply in this case. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a defendant's motion to file an amended answer and counterclaim addressed to the original complaint, because those claims were also resolved by the MOU. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

Inadvertent Use of Previous Cause Number on New Complaint Considered Technical, Nonprejudicial Defect: One day before expiration of the statute of limitations, the Lundquists filed a pro se complaint against Shook, Hamilton, and McBeth for fraudulent transfer of property, but in preparing the complaint, the Lundquists used a template from a prior fraudulent transfer case involving Shook, Hamilton, and Pederson and included the same cause number from the prior case. The Lundquists' former counsel notified the District Court that he was not representing the Lundquists in the case involving McBeth. One day prior to service of process on McBeth, the District Court ordered the Clerk of the District Court to withdraw the Lundquists' complaint on grounds that the complaint was filed in the same cause of action previously pending, and the Lundquists did not obtain the court's consent to amend prior pleadings and have their attorney of record sign the complaint against McBeth. The Lundquists then moved to have the court assign a new cause number to the complaint and allow amendment of the complaint to retain the original filing date. The court denied the motion, holding that if a new complaint was to be filed and a new cause number assigned, it would be considered filed as of the date on which it was presented for filing and not the date on which it was originally attempted to be filed. Thus, a new complaint was filed with a new cause number and filing date, but the new complaint was filed after expiration of the statute of limitations for fraudulent conveyance actions, so the District Court granted McBeth's dismissal motion because the complaint was not timely filed. The Lundquists appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. In filing the new complaint, the Lundquists had notified the court that they intended to proceed against McBeth in an action that was independent of the transfer litigated in the previous cause, and their use of the cause number from the previous action was inadvertent and a technical rather than fundamental defect. The Lundquists did not need the District Court's permission to file a new complaint, nor did the new pro se complaint require their attorney's signature. Because the Lundquists named McBeth in the complaint, filed the complaint prior to the expiration of the fraudulent transfer statute of limitations, and served McBeth with a copy of the complaint, McBeth was not prejudiced by the technical defect and the District Court should not have ordered the complaint withdrawn. Lundquist v. McBeth, 2001 MT 311, 308 M 1, 38 P3d 831 (2001).

Dispute Over Whether Agreement to Arbitrate Exists — Motion to Compel Arbitration Improper: The District Court found that the arbitration provision in a contract to provide on-line stock trading was valid and enforceable and compelled arbitration. Although it is true that a court is required to follow a liberal policy in enforcing arbitration agreements, including resolving any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues in favor of arbitration, under 27-5-115, arbitration may not be ordered if there is a substantial and bona fide dispute over whether an arbitration agreement exists. Further, the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. 1, et seq., provides that an agreement to arbitrate is valid except when grounds exist at law or in equity to revoke the contract, reversing the longtime judicial hostility to arbitration agreements and putting them on the same footing as other contract provisions. A District Court may properly adjudicate the validity of an arbitration agreement only when a party contests the validity of an arbitration clause within a contract but does not contest the validity of the contract as a whole. Here, plaintiffs were on notice that there was some form of arbitration governing the agreement, but they had no indication that they were agreeing to binding arbitration or that arbitration was their exclusive remedy because they allegedly never received the specific terms and conditions of the agreement, creating a substantial ambiguity. Because there was a substantial and bona fide dispute over the arbitration agreement that could not be overcome by the general policy encouraging upholding agreements to arbitrate, the District Court committed reversible error in not fully addressing whether a valid arbitration agreement existed, in dismissing the case for lack of jurisdiction, and in compelling arbitration. Kingston v. Ameritrade, Inc., 2000 MT 269, 302 M 90, 12 P3d 929, 57 St. Rep. 1137 (2000).

Claim for Punitive Damages Not Precluded by Estoppel — Issues of Previous Litigation Not Identical: Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for Finstad and an award of $400,000 in compensatory damages, as well as a determination that punitive damages were warranted. The District Court conducted a minitrial on the issue of punitive damages, and the jury awarded $83,000. Defendant contested the award of punitive damages and moved for dismissal on grounds that Finstad's claim was barred by collateral estoppel by virtual representation because the issue had already been litigated in two previous Lincoln County cases against defendant. Defendant contended that the issues were identical, that final judgment had been rendered, and that Finstad was a party to or in privity with a party in the previous cases and thus was virtually represented by those parties in the previous cases. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, finding that the issues were not identical, and also ruled for Finstad on the question of estoppel by virtual representation. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the record, noting that although some of the evidence and witnesses regarding the punitive damages claim were the same as in the previous cases, several significant factual distinctions and legal claims existed. Because the first element of collateral estoppel regarding identical parties was not met, the Supreme Court affirmed without reaching the question of estoppel by virtual representation. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000), following Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318 (1994).

Contested Ownership of Independent Business — Standard of Review of Judgment on Pleadings: Hedges claimed ownership of an independent Melaleuca business, allegedly acquired through a written transfer of the business by Johnson, the former owner, before Johnson's death. As corepresentatives of Johnson's estate, the Woodhouses claimed ownership of the same business by virtue of a residuary devise in Johnson's will. The uncontroverted facts in the pleadings served as the factual basis for the parties' competing motions for judgment on the pleadings. A movant for judgment on the pleadings must establish that no material fact exists and that movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and pleadings are to be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whose allegations are taken as true. The conclusions of law standard of review is applied. The District Court properly looked to Johnson's Melaleuca contract, which required that Melaleuca accept signed and acknowledged forms in respect to transfer of a business during a business owner's lifetime and approve the transfer in writing. The contractual restrictions on assignment of a Melaleuca contract were not met by Johnson's written transfer of the business to Hedges, and the court correctly concluded that Johnson's assignment was not valid. Judgment on the pleadings for Woodhouses was affirmed. Hedges v. Woodhouse, 2000 MT 220, 301 M 180, 8 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 905 (2000).

Motion to Dismiss as Admission of All Well-Pled Allegations: A motion to dismiss pursuant to this rule has the effect of admitting all well-pled allegations in the complaint. In considering the motion, the complaint must be construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, whose allegations of fact must be taken as true. The determination that a complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted is a conclusion of law that the Supreme Court reviews to determine whether the trial court is correct. Missoula City-County Air Pollution Control Bd. v. Bd. of Envtl. Review, 282 M 255, 937 P2d 463, 54 St. Rep. 338 (1997).

No Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Lawyer — Jurisdiction Not Acquired Through Interstate Communications: Plaintiffs sued an out-of-state attorney, alleging theft and conversion and fraud and deceit arising out of a dispute over settlement money. On defendant's motion, the District Court dismissed the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction. When defendant came into possession of and allegedly asserted unauthorized control over settlement checks in Idaho, defendant did not do any act that resulted in the accrual of the tort of conversion within Montana. When all representations regarding the claims took place in Idaho and the settlement was negotiated in Idaho, defendant's act of mailing the contingency fee agreement and other letters to plaintiffs in Montana did not create jurisdiction in Montana. Jurisdiction is not acquired through interstate communications pursuant to a contract to be performed in another state. Bird v. Hiller, 270 M 467, 892 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 288 (1995), followed in Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154, 55 St. Rep. 131 (1998), Threlkeld v. Colo., 2000 MT 369, 303 M 432, 16 P3d 359, 57 St. Rep. 1578 (2000), and Tackett v. Duncan, 2014 MT 253, 376 Mont. 348, 334 P.3d 920.

Nonresidents of Subdivision Without Standing to Enforce Covenants of Subdivision: The adjacent neighbors of a subdivision sued the county and the residents of the subdivision either to have the county enforce the subdivision's restrictive covenants, approved by the county, or to have the District Court require the subdivision residents to abide by the covenants. The Supreme Court held that, without an ownership interest in the property, the neighbors and the public do not have the right to insist that the local government enforce restrictive covenants previously approved by the local government as part of the subdivision. The Supreme Court also ruled that the neighbors do not share the mutuality of the benefits and burdens as between grantees of the subdivision and therefore lack standing to enforce the restrictive covenants. The issue of whether a resident of the subdivision could seek enforcement of the covenants by the local government was not before the Supreme Court. Patton v. Madison County, 265 M 362, 877 P2d 993, 51 St. Rep. 536 (1994).

Claims Not Defense — Not Barred by Rule: This rule requires that every defense to a claim, counterclaim, or third-party claim be raised in the responsive pleading. When plaintiff's claims against defendant were not a defense to the claims asserted by a different plaintiff in a prior litigation, plaintiff was not required to file his claims against defendant in that action. Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318, 51 St. Rep. 340 (1994).

Untimely Appeal From Denial of Motion for Change of Venue — Waiver: In the course of a dissolution proceeding, Lori appealed from the District Court's denial of her motion for a change of venue. The Supreme Court held that while a denial of a motion for a change of venue is an appealable order within the scope of former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the request for a change of venue must be timely made. Under this rule, a motion for a change of venue must be made within 20 days after the response to the pleading is filed. In this case, the dissolution proceeding was begun in 1985 and the husband's motion for custody was filed on June 5, 1991. However, the motion for a change of venue was not filed until March 18, 1993. In addition to the untimely motion, Lori made numerous appearances in the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District without challenging venue in that district. The Supreme Court therefore dismissed the appeal. In re Marriage of Smith, 260 M 406, 860 P2d 159, 50 St. Rep. 1151 (1993).

Determination of Constitutional Violation Necessary Element of 42 U.S.C. 1983 Claim — Summary Judgment Precluded: Talley filed a cross-complaint for summary judgment on the question of a violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 and associated attorney fees in connection with a discharge from his employment as a part-time community college instructor. Recognizing that a free speech violation might possibly have occurred, the District Court nevertheless properly dismissed the summary judgment motion because the free speech complaint had not been resolved and a violation of constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities is attendant to a 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim. Consideration of attorney fees prior to settlement of the free speech claim was also premature. Talley v. Flathead Valley Community College, 259 M 479, 857 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 889 (1993), affirmed in 273 M 336, 903 P2d 789, 52 St. Rep. 1016 (1995).

Consideration by Court of Newspaper Articles Not Published Within Twenty Days of Motion to Change Venue: Mannix argued that the lower court erred in considering newspaper editorials published more than 20 days before the defendants' motion for change of venue. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion because many of the articles published were editorials rather than news articles as had been the case in its decision in St. v. Pease, 227 M 424, 740 P2d 659 (1987). Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Defendant, who was successful in having an action dismissed on a motion under this rule, failed to file a notice of entry of judgment. The plaintiffs' 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal did not run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Filing Amended Motion — Prior District Court Approval Necessary: Prior approval of the District Court is a prerequisite to the proper filing of an amended Rule 12(b) motion. Ass'n of Unit Owners of the Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 224 M 142, 729 P2d 469, 43 St. Rep. 2084 (1986).

Plaintiff's Failure to Comply With Court Procedural Rules — Order Granting defendant's Motion to Dismiss Upheld: It was proper to dismiss a complaint on defendant's motion to dismiss under this rule when plaintiff failed to comply with the procedure required by the Supreme Court Uniform Rule II and Missoula County District Court Local Rule 4 on a motion to dismiss. McLaughlin v. Hart, 213 M 216, 690 P2d 431, 41 St. Rep. 2059 (1984).

Motion to Change Venue After Default Judgment Entered — Denied as Untimely — Proper Course Suggested: A motion for a change of venue may not be made after judgment has been entered. Thus, in this case defendant's motion to change venue was correctly denied as untimely because a default divorce judgment had been granted. Defendant's proper course of action should have been to move for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P.; then, if granted, she should attempt to withdraw her initial appearance and request a change of venue. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 208 M 83, 675 P2d 392, 41 St. Rep. 183 (1984).

Uniform Rules for District Courts — Time Limit for Filing Brief in Support of Rule 12 Motion: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Raising Statute of Limitations and Estoppel in Motion — When Allowed: The affirmative defenses of the Statute of Limitations and estoppel by judgment may be raised in a motion to dismiss rather than in the answer when the complaint on its face shows that the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations and the judgment relied on for the estoppel by judgment defense was made in the same court that is asked to pass on the motion. Beckman v. Chamberlain, 673 P2d 480, 40 St. Rep. 2044 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Change of Venue — Defendant's Personal Privilege in Main Action: Plaintiff (Novco) brought an action against the Graingers (defendants) on two counts, for payment for automobile parts delivered to Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., and against Harold Grainger individually to collect on a bad check drawn on the account of Sunset Automotive, Inc., upon which Novco alleged Grainger was personally liable. The Graingers defaulted, which default was subsequently set aside, and they filed an answer, a counterclaim, and a third-party complaint. The third-party complaint alleged that Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., was the real party in interest and liable to Novco. Sunset moved for a change of venue, which the District Court denied. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure do not permit a third-party plaintiff to implead as a third-party defendant a party who is not a party to the original action and who is or may be liable to the original plaintiff. Rule 14(a), M.R.Civ.P., only permits impleader of a party who "is or may be liable" to the third-party plaintiff. The Supreme Court followed the federal court rule and held that the privilege of objecting to venue in the main action is a personal privilege belonging to the defendant in the main action alone and not to a third-party defendant. Novco v. Grainger, 199 M 291, 649 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 1367 (1982).

Complaint Construed in Favor of Plaintiff: For purposes of the motion to dismiss, the complaint is to be construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff and its allegations taken as true. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981); Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979); Fulton v. Farmers' Union Grain Terminal Ass'n, 140 M 523, 374 P2d 231 (1962).

Order Denying Motion for Relief From Default Judgment Properly Appealed — Special Appearance Abolished: When the defendant honey processing company twice moved to vacate and dismiss a default judgment obtained against it by the plaintiff honey producing company, the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over an appeal from the District Court's denial of the second motion to vacate and dismiss. The defendant's first motion was untimely filed, and the fact that it was brought to challenge the personal jurisdiction of the court and characterized as a "special appearance" is of no effect, as special appearances have been abolished and the same requirements for timely appeal applies to all appearances. The second motion was properly appealable as it is considered denied, which denial is a final order, if the court has not ruled on the motion within 15 days after submission. Foster Apiaries, Inc. v. Hubbard Apiaries, Inc., 193 M 156, 630 P2d 1213, 38 St. Rep. 1025 (1981), followed in In re Estate of Ducey, 241 M 419, 787 P2d 749, 47 St. Rep. 232 (1990), and Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008).

"Special Appearance" Treated as Motion to Dismiss — Dismissal of Nonresident Defendants for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Upheld: Plaintiffs appealed the dismissal of nonresident defendants from their wrongful death and survivorship lawsuits. The Supreme Court found that a "special appearance" made by a party defendant to quash service of a summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, despite its outdated label, served as a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. The trial court did not commit reversible error by granting a motion that used an antiquated label. Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980).

Time for Motion to Change Venue for Interests of Justice and Witnesses' Convenience: The District Court properly denied as premature a motion for a change of venue on the grounds that the interests of justice and the convenience of witnesses would be best served. Former case law held that the motion may be made only after an answer has been filed, and Rule 12(b)(iii), M.R.Civ.P., preserves that policy. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Change of Venue for Taxpayer Bias — Timely Motion: A motion for a change of venue, based on the allegation that county taxpayers could not be unbiased jurors in a case in which that county was a party because the county taxpayers risked higher taxes if the county lost the case, was denied. The movant did not file the motion within 20 days after the answer or within 20 days after an event affording good cause to believe an impartial trial could not be had. Keith v. Liberty County Hosp. & Nursing Home, 183 M 39, 598 P2d 203 (1979).

Statute of Frauds Not Pleaded: Defendant failed to raise the Statute of Frauds defense in his pleadings, therefore he could not maintain it on appeal. Mont. Seeds, Inc. v. Holliday, 178 M 119, 582 P2d 1223 (1978).

Notice of Subsequent Proceedings: If a party "appears" by filing a motion he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Illegal Tax Alleged — Improper Dismissal: The court erred in granting defendants' motions to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction because the complaints alleged an illegal tax, and did not put into issue any question of valuation. Thus, the courts, and not the tax appeal boards, had original jurisdiction to hear the case under former law and the rule of Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975). U.S. Nat'l Bank of Red Lodge v. Dept. of Revenue, 175 M 205, 573 P2d 188 (1977).

Unlawful Detainer — Failure to Claim Rent Due: When an agricultural tenant held over and received no notice to quit within 60 days, he was free from the action for unlawful detainer for the term of the previous lease, and since plaintiff prayed for relief solely under the unlawful detainer statute, the court properly dismissed the action without discussing recovery of rent. Holliday Land & Livestock Co. v. Pierce, 174 M 393, 571 P2d 93 (1977).

Contract Between City and Firemen — Dismissal Improperly Granted: The District Court erred when it dismissed counts within a complaint which were claims for relief on the basis of a contract between the city and the firemen when it was abundantly clear that appellant's complaint was not so defective as to appear beyond a doubt that appellant could prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. Local 8 Int'l Ass'n of Firefighters v. Great Falls, 174 M 53, 568 P2d 541 (1977).

No Substantive Changes in Amended Complaint — Dismissal Properly Granted: The court properly dismissed an amended complaint which was essentially the same as the original complaint filed before another District Judge. Plaintiff merely added sweeping alternative conclusions of law to his original complaint and claimed that they were substantive changes. Sovey v. Chouteau County District Hosp., 173 M 392, 567 P2d 941 (1977).

Dismissal of Complaint Appealable: Dismissal of complaint pursuant to this rule is appealable since the practical effect of dismissal is to leave plaintiff without opportunity for further judgment relief, just as if judgment had been entered against him. Hasbrouck v. Krsul, 168 M 270, 541 P2d 1197 (1975); Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Motion to Dismiss Equivalent to Demurrer: A motion to dismiss under this rule is equivalent to a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) under former procedure. Duffy v. Butte Teachers' Union, 168 M 246, 541 P2d 1199 (1975); Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964); Holtz v. Babcock, 143 M 341, 389 P2d 869, 390 P2d 801 (1964); Payne v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co., 142 M 406, 385 P2d 100 (1963).

Hearing on Lack of Jurisdiction Required — Dismissal Improperly Granted: Dismissal of tort action for lack of jurisdiction was premature without full hearing and cross-examination on defendant's motion under Rule 12(b)(2), where complaint alleged that corporate defendant had agent in Montana but answer of nonresident corporation stated that corporation had no "representative resident" in Montana, but also stated that "orders received from dealers in Montana are accepted in Indiana". Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 165 M 32, 525 P2d 556 (1974).

Failure to File Supporting Brief: Defendants, by failing to file brief within prescribed time of District Court rules, admitted their motion to dismiss complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted was without merit. Wiseman v. Holt, 163 M 387, 517 P2d 711 (1973).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Third-Party Defendant — Negligence — When Dismissal Proper: Court erred in dismissing seller and manufacturer of truck as party defendants when many issues of material fact remained to be determined. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law — Unnecessary: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, Rule 56, or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Jurisdictional Defense Lost — Scope of Jurisdiction Over Nonresidents: Defendant could not inject plea of lack of jurisdiction over the person after filing motion asserting lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Jurisdiction is proper over nonresident buyer purchasing through nonresident agent when one payment was made directly to and one order was made directly with resident seller. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

Jurisdiction Over Subject Matter — Divorce: Notwithstanding a party's expressed intention to remain in another state, the Supreme Court will look to the facts and they speak louder than words. This may hold true when the party expresses an actual intention. Veseth v. Veseth, 147 M 169, 410 P2d 930 (1966).

Challenging Venue — When: Notwithstanding the 1963 amendment to this rule which deleted venue as a defense which could be asserted as a motion under the rule, the convenience of witnesses cannot be invoked to authorize a change in venue until an answer has been filed. Yeager v. Foster, 146 M 330, 406 P2d 370 (1965).

Rule as Statute of Limitations: Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P., is procedural and not a Statute of Limitations which, under Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P., must be affirmatively pleaded as a defense. A dismissal can be raised by motion under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P. The hiatus between the repeal of the former section dealing with failure to serve summons and enactment of Rule 41(e) (replaced with Rule 4E), did not vitiate the validity of the dismissal or restart computation of time. Whitcraft v. Semenza, 145 M 94, 399 P2d 757 (1965).

Disposal on Grounds Other Than Merits: The rules encourage disposition of cases quickly and on the merits. Close scrutiny should be given when one party moves to have the case disposed of on grounds other than the merits. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Involuntary Dismissal Inapplicable to Failure to State a Claim: Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., providing for involuntary dismissal which operates as an adjudication upon the merits, has no application to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under this rule. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Relationship Between Rules 12(b) and 41(b): Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., has no application to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Res Judicata — Not Raised Beyond Pleadings: Parties did not go beyond the pleadings and introduce other material regarding res judicata. Therefore, the motion to dismiss was not one for a judgment on the merits. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Order Sustaining Motion Not Appealable: An order sustaining a motion to dismiss is not appealable. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 143 M 432, 391 P2d 1 (1964), but see Prentice Lumber Co. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972), and Hasbrouck v. Krsul, 168 M 270, 541 P2d 1197 (1975).

Constructive Fraud — Not Stated With Particularity: Because sufficient allegations of fact regarding "constructive fraud" were not pleaded with particularity, the complaint failed to state a claim for relief as a derivative action. Brooks v. Brooks Pontiac, Inc., 143 M 256, 389 P2d 185 (1964).

Motion as Admission of Facts — Exceptions: While a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted is the same as a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) under former Montana procedure and therefore admits to all facts well pleaded, it does not admit to controversial conclusions of law or to the accuracy of alleged construction of written instruments set forth in the pleading. Holtz v. Babcock, 143 M 341, 389 P2d 869, 390 P2d 801 (1963).

Motion to Dismiss — What Facts Admitted: A motion to dismiss admits all well-pleaded allegations, but conclusions of law and unwarranted deductions or inferences of fact are not admitted. Holtz v. Babcock, 143 M 341, 389 P2d 869, 390 P2d 801 (1963).

Requisites for Cause of Action: To state a cause of action the complaint must show that the plaintiff has the right to sue, and where it appears from the face of the pleading that he has no such right, on grounds other than lack of legal capacity, no legal judgment could be entered in the action, and the complaint does not state a cause of action. In such a situation a general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed) on that ground is sufficient. Hand v. Heslet, 81 M 68, 261 P 609 (1927).

Misjoinder of Parties — Liability Not Affected: A party's liability is not in any way affected because another, who is not liable, is made a defendant with him. Hence, a joint demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. and 25-31-503, now repealed) will be overruled if a good cause of action is stated against either party. Cummings v. Reins Copper Co., 40 M 599, 107 P 904 (1910).

Objection Stated in Statutory Language: Where a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) is interposed to a counterclaim on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it is sufficient to state the objection in the statutory language. Power v. Sla, 24 M 243, 61 P 468 (1900).

FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Failure to State Claims for Fraudulent and Negligent Misrepresentation — Intent to Injure and Requirements of Former Rules 8(a) and 9(b) — Confusion of Law by District Court: In a case in which two banks brought an action against an accounting firm for damages caused by an unqualified audit statement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the accounting firm's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Citing Fraunhofer v. Price, 182

Mont. 7, 594 P.2d 324 (1979), the Supreme Court held that the requirements to particularly plead fraud must be balanced with the provisions of former Rule 8(a) M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly applied a heavier burden of pleading an "intent to injure" than was justified under 27-1-221 because the language in that section could be interpreted to apply to a claim for punitive damages. The Supreme Court also found that the District Court's dismissal of the negligent misrepresentation claim occurred because the District Court confused it with a claim for professional negligence and that that confusion resulted from an incorrect jury instruction confusing "near privity" under Thayer v. Hicks, 243 Mont. 138, 793 P.2d 784 (1990), with the standard for duty of care in third-party negligent misrepresentation cases under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case for a new trial with the correct jury instructions. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Failure to Establish Existence of Written Contract Concerning Obligation to Convey Mobile Homes — Declaratory Relief Inappropriate: Plaintiff sought declaratory relief related to the purchase of a trailer park, asserting that the seller breached the contract by failing to convey the seller's personal mobile units following the sale. The District Court denied the breach of contract claim, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to establish the existence of a written contract under which the seller was obligated to convey the personal mobile units, so the breach of contract claim was futile. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies — Dismissal for Failure to State Proper Claim for Relief Not Error: Plaintiff objected in District Court to a Missoula school district's sale of an unused public elementary school building to a Missoula Catholic school foundation. The court ruled that because the sale of the school was closed on May 6, 2005, but plaintiff's claim was not filed until April 11, 2006, the claim was barred by the 30-day statute of limitations in 2-3-114, so the court dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the claim, but not on grounds that the statute of limitations was not met. Rather, plaintiff failed to exhaust its administrative remedies by appealing the school district's action to the county superintendent, as required in 20-3-210, so dismissal for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted was not erroneous. Good Schools Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula County Pub. School Dist. No. 1, 2008 MT 231, 344 M 374, 188 P3d 1013 (2008).

District Court's Subject Matter Jurisdiction Not Affected by Party's Lack of Standing — Appeal of Board of Adjustment Decision: Defendants asserted that the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over them because plaintiffs failed to establish standing to challenge a boundary line relocation. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants mistakenly linked the requirement that a court have subject matter jurisdiction with the requirement that a plaintiff have standing to sue. Both are required, but they are not interdependent. Subject matter jurisdiction refers to a court's power to hear a particular type of case, while standing refers to the threshold justiciability requirement that a plaintiff have a personal stake in a particular case. If a plaintiff lacks standing, a court can grant no relief because a justiciable controversy does not exist, but a party's lack of standing does not deprive a District Court of subject matter jurisdiction. A court lacks the power to resolve a case brought by a party without standing because that party can present no actual case or controversy, not because the court has been stripped of subject matter jurisdiction. Here, the District Court had statutory subject matter jurisdiction under 76-2-327 to hear the boundary line appeal of the City Board of Adjustment decision and determined that plaintiffs had standing to challenge the boundary relocation. Even though defendants stylized the appeal as a subject matter jurisdiction issue, which may be appealed by interlocutory appeal prior to final judgment, the actual issue was the District Court's ruling on plaintiffs' standing, which the Supreme Court will not review prior to final judgment. Defendants' appeal was therefore premature, so the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal and remanded for further proceedings. Ballas v. Missoula City Bd. of Adjustment, 2007 MT 299, 340 M 56, 172 P3d 1232 (2007).

Applicability of Rule 13(a) to Pleading Replying to Counterclaim: Plaintiff filed a breach of contract action related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store. While that case was pending, plaintiff filed another action alleging that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment. The parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, and defendant moved for summary judgment for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted and contended that the second case was barred by Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., because it was a compulsory counterclaim that should have been raised in the first action. Plaintiff moved to consolidate the cases. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and held that the consolidation motion was mooted by dismissal of the action. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., a reply to a counterclaim is a pleading, triggering the need for the replying party to assert all counterclaims that arise out of the same transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the initial counterclaim. By not raising the claim, a party risks that Rule 13, M.R.Civ.P., will bar the claim in a subsequent action. Plaintiff failed to raise any counterclaims in its response to defendant's counterclaims and the second action was barred. The District Court did not err in considering the motion to consolidate without converting the motion to one for summary judgment prior to granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 287, 339 M 452, 171 P3d 690 (2007), distinguishing Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Taxpayer Standing to Petition for Review of Decision of Board of Adjustment — Dismissal of Petition Proper for Failure to State Claim: Plaintiffs lived two blocks away from a property where a landowner was granted a variance to build a home on an undersized plot. Plaintiffs alleged that the Board of Adjustment abused its discretion by granting the variance. The Board moved to dismiss the claim on grounds that plaintiffs failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because plaintiffs were not neighboring landowners and were not involved in the variance decision and also argued that plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge the variance because they did not allege any injury other than their right to orderly development of residential property zones. The District Court held that plaintiffs lacked standing and alternately dismissed plaintiffs' appeal for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court. The court disagreed that plaintiffs lacked standing. Under 76-2-327, any taxpayer of a municipality may petition for review of a decision of a Board of Adjustment. However, even when taking all the allegations contained in the petition in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, including an unfounded allegation that the petition was granted before the hearing date, plaintiffs' petition failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted and was properly dismissed, so the District Court was affirmed. Druffel v. Bd. of Adjustment, 2007 MT 220, 339 M 57, 168 P3d 640 (2007).

Conversion of Motion to Dismiss Into Motion for Summary Judgment Improper Without Notice to All Parties: Plaintiff brought a complaint against the county for breach of an agreement to sell certain tax-forfeited property to plaintiff. The county moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted on grounds that because no written or oral agreement existed, no specific performance was possible. The District Court converted that motion into a motion for summary judgment and granted summary judgment to the county without giving notice of the conversion to plaintiff. The Supreme Court noted that the distinction between dismissal and summary judgment is more than academic, in that dismissal allows for the possibility of refiling a complaint to withstand dismissal, while summary judgment is a final adjudication on the merits. Thus, conversion of the motion was not harmless error. Plaintiff was entitled to notice of the conversion and a reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to the motion, and failure to do so was reversible error. Meagher v. Butte-Silver Bow City-County, 2007 MT 129, 337 M 339, 160 P3d 552 (2007). See also Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Failure to Establish Federal or State Claim of Political Discrimination — Petition for Injunction Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs who were two minor party candidates sued the University System for political discrimination in violation of federal and state law because they were not included in gubernatorial debates on university campuses. The District Court dismissed the petition for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A political discrimination claim based on 42 U.S.C. 1983 generally takes the form of deprivation of a property interest in government employment. Plaintiffs made no employment-based discrimination allegations, so that claim failed. Plaintiffs' political discrimination claim based on 42 U.S.C. 1985 was in the form of a common-law conspiracy, and to prove conspiracy under that section, a plaintiff must show that some racial or perhaps otherwise class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus lay behind the conspirator's action and that the conspiracy was aimed at interfering with the plaintiff's private and publicly protected rights. Plaintiffs could not show that they were members of a suspect class. A common-law conspiracy occurs in Montana when two or more persons, by some concerted action, intend to accomplish some unlawful objective for the purpose of harming another that results in damage, and it is not the conspiracy itself but torts committed or wrongs done in furtherance of the conspiracy that give rise to a claim. Even when viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, in this case, the asserted facts would at most only breed a suspicion that plaintiffs might have had a right to relief, so that federal claim failed as well. Plaintiffs' state law claim under 49-3-205 was denied because plaintiffs failed to exhaust administrative remedies prior to filing suit in District Court. Absent viable federal or state discrimination claims, the District Court properly dismissed plaintiffs' petition for injunctive relief. Jones v. Mont. Univ. Sys., 2007 MT 82, 337 M 1, 155 P3d 1247 (2007).

No Standing to Bring Political Discrimination Claim on Behalf of Others: Plaintiffs who were two minor party candidates sued the University System for political discrimination because they were not included in gubernatorial debates on university campuses. The claim was brought on behalf of "91,989 Montana hungry unregistered minors". The Supreme Court addressed the standing claim sua sponte. The general rule is that a litigant may assert only the litigant's own constitutional rights or immunities and must demonstrate a personal stake in the controversy and some injury that would be alleviated successfully by maintaining the action. Here, the alleged hungry minors possessed neither a stake in the outcome of plaintiffs' asserted civil rights violations nor suffered any injury that plaintiffs' complaint would alleviate, and plaintiffs were prohibited by the general rule from asserting constitutional rights on behalf of others. Jones v. Mont. Univ. Sys., 2007 MT 82, 337 M 1, 155 P3d 1247 (2007).

Failure to Prove Facts Beyond Ordinary Negligence — Exclusivity Provision Applicable: Wise suffered an on-the-job injury and contended that the employer's negligent conduct allowed an additional claim for damages beyond benefits provided under the Workers' Compensation Act. However, Wise failed to prove any set of facts that the employer committed any intentional and deliberate act with the intent to cause Wise's injury or any element necessary to allege anything more than ordinary negligence. Thus, the exclusivity provision of 39-71-411 applied, and the damages claim was properly dismissed. Wise v. CNH America, LLC, 2006 MT 194, 333 M 181, 142 P3d 774 (2006), distinguishing Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), in light of the 2001 amendment to 39-71-413.

No Workers' Compensation Court Jurisdiction Upon Repudiation of Workers' Compensation Claim: A 14-year-old employee was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident while on the way to a job. A workers' compensation claim was filed by the minor's father, who was an employee of the same company. The State Fund accepted liability and paid indemnity and medical benefits. Having determined that it owed the minor permanent partial and temporary total disability benefits, the State Fund initiated a petition seeking the Workers' Compensation Court's direction regarding the best method of paying the benefits, in view of the claimant's minority age. The court appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the minor's interests. The guardian investigated the accident and concluded that because the minor might not have been in the course and scope of employment at the time of the accident, the minor might have a claim against the employer based on the driver's negligence. When the minor reached 18 years of age, he filed a claim in Workers' Compensation Court, naming both the State Fund and the employer as adverse parties, seeking a determination that the injury was not suffered in the course and scope of employment and repudiation of the workers' compensation claim in order to pursue a tort claim against the driver and the insurer. The court decided that the claim could be repudiated, in which case the petition would be dismissed for lack of a justiciable controversy, or that the claim could be ratified, in which case the court would determine the best method of payment of benefits. The court vacated a scheduled hearing and gave the employee 30 days to decide upon an option. The employee opted to repudiate the workers' compensation claim and pursue a tort action, so the court dismissed the petition, and the employer appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Workers' Compensation Court's jurisdiction over the prerepudiation dispute between the employee and the State Fund did not extend to the dispute between the employee and employer by virtue of the employee's naming the employer in the workers' compensation petition. The Workers' Compensation Court correctly determined that it did not have jurisdiction over the dispute between the employee and employer regarding whether the employee was injured in the course and scope of employment, and once the workers' compensation claim was repudiated, the employee's petition was properly dismissed. In addition, the Workers' Compensation Court did not act arbitrarily by raising the subject matter jurisdiction sua sponte, vacating the hearing, and granting the employee a 30-day period to consider whether to repudiate the claim. Dismissal of Postconviction Petition for Failure to State Claim — Differentiation of Standards Applicable to Civil Cases — No Error in Failure to Hold Evidentiary Hearing on Postconviction Petition: Herman asserted that an evidentiary hearing should have been held regarding his petition for postconviction relief because the standard in 46-21-201 is nearly identical to the provision in subsection (6) of this rule, so allegations in a petition for postconviction relief must be taken as true and construed in a light most favorable to the petitioner, requiring a hearing on the allegations. The Supreme Court disagreed. The express statutory requirements in 46-21-104 significantly exceed and are inconsistent with the mere notice pleading requirements for an ordinary complaint in a civil action. Thus, the civil standards do not apply to dismissals of petitions for postconviction relief for failure to state a claim because the civil standards are inconsistent with the more specific requirements of 46-21-104 and 46-21-201, and the District Court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing on Herman's petition and in dismissing Herman's claim for failure to meet the procedural threshold in 46-21-104. Herman v. St., 2006 MT 7, 330 M 267, 127 P3d 422 (2006), following Ellenburg v. Chase, 2004 MT 66, 320 M 315, 87 P3d 473 (2004), and distinguishing St. v. City Not Liable Under Scaffolding Law: Plaintiff's husband was killed in the collapse of a scaffold, and plaintiff sued the city of Missoula, asserting that the city violated its duty to inspect the scaffold. The District Court found that the city owed no duty and summarily dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 50-77-101, the Legislature imposed liability only on certain entities for violations of scaffolding law, not including cities. Additionally, under State ex rel. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 154 M 336, 463 P2d 326 (1969), only those having direct and immediate control of the work involving the scaffold are required to make an injured worker whole. Because the city was not liable for scaffolding violations, plaintiff failed to raise a justiciable issue for which relief could be granted and the claim was dismissed as moot. Dukes v. Missoula, 2005 MT 196, 328 M 155, 119 P3d 61 (2005), following Dennis v. Brown, 2005 MT 85, 326 M 422, 110 P3d 17 (2005).

Reasonable Accommodation of Incarcerated Plaintiff's Opportunity to Prosecute Claim — Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute Affirmed: Following remand of Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001), the District Court gave Hauschulz, who was incarcerated out of state, about 1 ½ years to obtain counsel and participate in the proceedings, but Hauschulz was unable to specify when he would be able to prosecute the claim. The District Court subsequently dismissed Hauschulz's claim for failure to prosecute, and Hauschulz appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that although incarceration undoubtedly restricts one's ability to exercise civil liberties, it does not give rise to a right to an indefinite postponement of civil proceedings, particularly over the objection of the other party. Applying the factors in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374 (1993), the Supreme Court found no abuse of the District Court's discretion in balancing the competing public policy interests when dismissing Hauschulz's claim with prejudice. Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2005 MT 189, 328 M 95, 117 P3d 908 (2005).

Issues in Third-Party Action Contained in Underlying Suit — Third-Party Complaint Properly Dismissed as Moot: In a real property dispute, a realtor filed a complaint against the attorney who represented plaintiffs, asserting that the attorney had a duty to disclose and explain zoning issues related to the property. The District Court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, and the realtor appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The attorney's negligence as an agent, if any was contained in the underlying case before the District Court, and a ruling on whether the realtor could assert a duplicative claim for contribution by way of a third-party complaint would have no practical effect on the controversy. The realtor's issue was thus moot or academic, and the claim was properly dismissed. Dennis v. Brown, 2005 MT 85, 326 M 422, 110 P3d 17 (2005). See also Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. Rep. 393 (Cal. Ct. App. 1979).

Human Rights Act Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Discrimination Complaint — Summary Dismissal by District Court Affirmed: Arthur filed a sexual discrimination complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights but failed to rebut a defendant's response, so the Commission sent Arthur a notice of dismissal and right to file a civil action in District Court. Arthur filed neither a timely objection to dismissal nor a timely action in District Court. Instead, Arthur filed a tort action against defendants, alleging various torts and requesting compensatory and punitive damages. An amended complaint filed 2 years later asserted: (1) failure to provide a safe workplace; (2) negligent retention of the employee who allegedly sexually harassed Arthur; (3) negligent supervision of the employee; (4) intentional infliction of emotional distress; (5) negligent infliction of emotional distress; and (6) sexual harassment under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. The District Court summarily dismissed the first five complaints as barred by the exclusive remedy provision of 49-2-509 (now repealed) and dismissed the sixth complaint as barred by the statute of limitations in 49-2-509 (now repealed). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Arthur's tort claims were a recharacterization of the initial sexual harassment claim, and pursuant to 49-2-509 (now repealed), the Montana Human Rights Act is the exclusive remedy for claims of sexual discrimination and precludes other tort claims that arise from underlying allegations of sexual discrimination or harassment. Further, under Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), equitable tolling of the statute of limitations is not applicable in a discrimination case when a claimant does not have more than one legal remedy available, any one of which could be pursued in good faith. Rather, the claimant's exclusive remedy is under the Montana Human Rights Act. Arthur had knowledge of the vital facts underlying the sexual discrimination claim and could not claim inability to obtain the information in order to toll the statute of limitations. Arthur v. Prison Diet Plan Not Violative of Freedom of Religion — Summary Dismissal Proper: While incarcerated at a correctional facility, Cape, a Catholic, sued the facility and the food service providers for violating Cape's freedom of religion by failing to provide religious meals of fish and unleavened bread during Lent. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim on grounds that Cape failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. On appeal, Cape asserted that because the court was not the arbitrator of religious orthodoxy, it could not pass judgment on the correctness of Cape's religious beliefs. However, the warden at the facility testified that meatless meals were provided to all Catholic inmates during Lent, and a Catholic priest testified that the Catholic religion does not require that fish be consumed on days of abstinence from red meat, that a vegetarian diet is acceptable, and that Catholics are not required to consume unleavened bread during Lent. To be protected as a constitutional right, a dietary request must be essential to the practice of a particular religion. Cape failed to allege that the dietary requests were an essential part of a religious diet. Having failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, the Supreme Court affirmed. Cape v. Crossroads Correctional Center, 2004 MT 265, 323 M 140, 99 P3d 171 (2004).

Summary Dismissal Proper Absent Evidence Supporting Inmate's Freedom of Religion and Equal Protection Claims: While a prisoner at the Crossroads Correctional Facility, Cape sued the facility and the food service providers for violating Cape's freedom of religion for failing to provide religious meals, for failing to provide access to a priest and religious materials, and for violating his right to equal protection by denying Cape's request for group prayer and Bible study while providing those services to other inmates. Cape was subsequently transferred to a regional jail facility. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants on grounds that the matter was moot because Cape was no longer in the custody of the facility. On appeal, the Supreme Court acknowledged that Cape could be transferred back to the facility and thus suffer the same alleged deprivation of rights. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court affirmed absent evidence to support Cape's freedom of religion and equal protection claims. Cape v. Crossroads Correctional Center, 2004 MT 265, 323 M 140, 99 P3d 171 (2004).

Repealed Statute Regarding Sale or Lease of School Trust Lands to School Districts — No Justiciable Controversy or Action Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Former 20-6-621(4) allowed the Board of Land Commissioners to sell, for appraised value, or to lease, for $1 a year, school trust lands to a school district. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation stipulated that the provision was unconstitutional because it made state lands available for less than full market value. The District Court agreed, noting that leasing school trust lands to some school districts would favor only some of the beneficiaries and not the school trust as a whole. The Legislature concurred and repealed the subsection in 1999. Plaintiff subsequently sued the Department, the Board, and the state, contending that the Department unlawfully determined that the provision was unconstitutional and failed to defend the constitutionality of the provision. The state moved to dismiss the complaint on grounds that no justiciable controversy existed and that the complaint alleged no cause of action upon which relief could be granted. The District Court granted summary judgment for the state, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Any determination that the Department exceeded its authority would have had no bearing on the existing rights or interests at issue, and a judgment granting the relief sought would not have effectively operated to resolve any issue in the case. Thus, there was no justiciable case or controversy, and the claim was properly dismissed. Advocates for Educ., Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2004 MT 230, 322 M 429, 97 P3d 553 (2004), following Mont.-Dak. Util. Co. v. Billings, 2003 MT 332, 318 M 862, 80 P3d 1247 (2003).

No Requirement That Court Take as True Conclusions or Allegations With No Factual Basis or Contrary to What Has Been Adjudicated — Estoppel — Dismissal Proper: In Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), the District Court held that a husband's parents and sister had no enforceable ownership interests in their own right to disputed marital property because any interest that they arguably had was dependent on the husband's equitable interest, which was litigated in the dissolution action in which the husband denied any interest in the property. Nevertheless, the parents and sister brought a separate action, claiming that the parents were trustors of a trust created for the husband's benefit and that the sister was a successor trustee or trust beneficiary. The District Court dismissed the complaint pursuant to this rule for failure to state a claim. The parents and sister appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not consider matters outside the pleadings, which would have required that the dismissal motion be converted to a summary judgment motion, but properly considered only the complaint and incorporated documents. Moreover, the court was not under any duty to take as true legal conclusions or allegations that had no factual basis or that were contrary to what had already been adjudicated. Any purported interest in the property by the husband was barred by estoppel. The prior decision that adjudicated the husband's interest in the property extinguished any derivative claim that the parents and sister might have had, and the complaint and attached documents supported the District Court's granting of the motion to dismiss. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

State Law Tort Claims Not Protected or Prohibited by FELA — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper: Reidelbach worked for the railroad for about 20 years but was forced to stop working because of job-related disabling cumulative spinal injuries. Reidelbach reached an agreement with the railroad's claim representatives under which he would forego pursuing a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) and the railroad would propose a fair settlement for the injuries. After 2 years, no settlement was offered, and ultimately the parties exchanged counteroffers, but no agreement on an amount was reached. Reidelbach then filed a timely FELA claim and also brought several state claims, alleging that the railroad had engaged in unfair, dilatory, and fraudulent claims practices. The District Court concluded that all the postinjury state claims were preempted by FELA and dismissed them pursuant to this rule, so Reidelbach appealed. Following an extensive analysis of federal law related to preemption in its various forms, the Supreme Court held that Reidelbach's state claims were neither expressly nor impliedly preempted by FELA and did not conflict with or stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of FELA. Therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing Reidelbach's state claims on grounds of FELA preemption, and the case was reversed and remanded for trial in state court. Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002).

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by 33-18-242 prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by 33-18-242. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins.

Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001). See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute".

Improper Grant of Motion to Dismiss Legal Malpractice Suit for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Hauschulz faced criminal charges in Billings, and while awaiting trial, he was extradited to Idaho on unrelated charges and incarcerated. The Michael Law Firm was hired to represent Hauschulz in the Billings proceedings, which Hauschulz could not attend. Instead of moving for dismissal of the charges unless Montana extradited Hauschulz, the law firm professed not to know where Hauschulz was and negotiated an unauthorized plea agreement on behalf of Hauschulz. Upon learning of the law firm's actions, Hauschulz filed a legal malpractice complaint alleging constitutional violations and requesting damages. The District Court dismissed the action on grounds that Hauschulz had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, reasoning that no damages could be awarded because Hauschulz's problems all stemmed from the failure to appear at trial. Hauschulz appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief, and a dismissal will be affirmed by the Supreme Court only if plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that would support the claim. As set out in Merzlak v. Purcell, 252 M 527, 830 P2d 1278 (1992), to recover damages in a legal malpractice claim, plaintiff must establish that: (1) the professional owed plaintiff a duty of care; (2) the professional breached the duty of care through failure to use reasonable care and skill; (3) plaintiff suffered an injury; and (4) the professional's conduct was the proximate cause of the injury. In this case, the Supreme Court found that each element was satisfied. Hauschulz might be able to prove a set of facts that would entitle him to relief and has stated a sufficient claim to survive a challenge under this rule. Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001). See also Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614 (1997).

Equitable Estoppel Defense Defeated — Failure of Counterclaim to State Claim for Which Relief May Be Granted: The city of Whitefish sought and obtained a permanent injunction against Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), requiring removal of a sign that violated the city's ordinance. Town Pump's defense was that the city's approval of the original building plan equitably estopped the city's claim. Alternatively, Town Pump counterclaimed for the costs of remodeling the building. In order for the city to obtain a permanent injunction, it first had to overcome Town Pump's counterclaim that it was equitably estopped from doing so. The city successfully defeated the counterclaim. Absent a legal theory upon which to base damages, the city could not be held liable, so the District Court did not err in dismissing Town Pump's counterclaim for damages on grounds that it failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Claim for Common-Law Tort of Bad Faith by Third Party Not Preempted by Statute — General Statute of Limitations Applicable: The District Court dismissed Brewington's complaint against two insurance companies based on the conclusion that the complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because the claim was barred by the statute of limitations in 33-18-242 regarding third-party claimants. Brewington contended that the claim was based on the common-law tort of bad faith, not on 33-18-242. The Supreme Court construed the plain language of the statute in determining that by its terms, 33-18-242 does not prohibit a third-party claimant from bringing an action for bad faith. Both Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), and Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), establish a common-law cause of action for bad faith that was not affected by the passage of 33-18-242. When the common law is not in conflict with a statute, the common law applies. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that 33-18-242 prohibited Brewington from pleading the common-law tort of bad faith was reversible error. Further, because the claim was brought for bad faith and not pursuant to 33-18-242, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204, not the 1-year statute of limitations in 33-18-242, applied. Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237, 56 St. Rep. 1257 (1999), distinguishing Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

Rebuttable Presumption That Prison Escapee Abandoned Personal Property: Hawkins escaped from the state prison. Immediately following the escape, officials packed up Hawkins' personal property, sealed it in boxes with security tape and Hawkins' name on each box, and placed it in the prison storage room. After 2 days, Hawkins was apprehended and returned to prison. He was found guilty of escape, but his property was not ordered destroyed. Over the next 30 days, Hawkins requested the return of his personal property several times. Eventually, Hawkins was escorted to the storage room and allowed to remove his legal papers but was informed that, by policy, when a prisoner escapes, all personal property is considered abandoned, so the remainder of his property was destroyed or sold. Hawkins filed an action for the value of the property, alleging that prison officials destroyed his property without affording him due process, which constituted cruel and unusual punishment and violated a gratuitous bailment that Hawkins had formed. The District Court, concluding that Hawkins had abandoned his property by his escape and that the abandonment constituted a complete defense to any action brought by Hawkins that depended on his ownership of the property, dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939), for the proposition that in determining whether one has abandoned property or rights, intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry. If there is no expressed intent to abandon, then intent must be inferred from the acts of the property owner. The presumption or inference of intent to abandon one's property based solely on the acts of the owner is a rebuttable presumption. Here, upon returning to prison and requesting the return of his property, Hawkins effectively rebutted the presumption that he intended to abandon it, and when he reclaimed his property by requesting its return, he regained his status as owner of his personal property against all others. The District Court committed reversible error when it found that Hawkins abandoned the property by escape and dismissed the action based on failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Hawkins v. Mahoney, 1999 MT 296, 297 M 98, 990 P2d 776, 56 St. Rep. 1185 (1999), distinguishing Herron v. Whiteside, 782 SW 2d 414 (1989). See also 1 C.J.S. Abandonment § 12 (1985).

Satisfaction of Elements of Estoppel as Question of Proof, Not Pleading: Poeppel asserted in District Court that he was misled by a county representative as to the proper time to file a grievance and that this act estopped the county from arguing that the request for a grievance was untimely. The county argued on appeal that the claim of estoppel was properly dismissed because Poeppel's complaint failed to allege the six elements of estoppel set forth in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991). The question then became whether those elements must be alleged in the complaint or are factual issues of proof. Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires particularity in pleading certain specified matters, not including estoppel, which is governed by the requirement in Rule 8(e), M.R.Civ.P., which states that pleadings must be simple, concise, and direct. The allegations in Poeppel's complaint, sparse and artless as they were, nevertheless put the county on notice so that a responsive pleading could be prepared. Whether Poeppel could satisfy the elements of estoppel was a question of proof, not pleadings, and the District Court erred in dismissing the grievance for failure to state a claim. The Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether the complaint was timely because resolution of that issue hinged upon whether Poeppel could prove the claim of estoppel at trial. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Poeppel v. Flathead County, 1999 MT 130, 294 M 487, 982 P2d 1007, 56 St. Rep. 525 (1999), following Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Res Judicata as Bar to Relitigation of Foreclosure Sale Dispute — Claim Properly Dismissed: Glickman defaulted on his property payments, and following two foreclosure actions, the property was sold at a Sheriff's foreclosure sale. Glickman did not appeal either action but later filed an "original petition" seeking to quiet title, damages, and a declaratory judgment regarding the validity of the judgments, foreclosure decrees, and Sheriff's sales. Applying the criteria in Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158 (1995), the Supreme Court held that the underlying District Court actions satisfied the elements of res judicata and that Glickman's subsequent "original petition" failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Glickman v. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, 1998 MT 8, 287 M 161, 951 P2d 1388, 55 St. Rep. 27 (1998).

Ability to Demonstrate Later Accrual of Action as Precluding Motion to Dismiss Based on Failure to State Claim — Human Rights Violation Claim: Powell was dismissed from his job with the Salvation Army on February 18, 1994, for the stated reason that he had been drinking on the job that day. Powell asserted that he learned months later that the dismissal was actually based on his past history of alcoholism, and he subsequently filed a grievance charge with the Human Rights Commission, alleging unlawful discrimination. The District Court granted a motion by the Salvation Army to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted for lack of jurisdiction based on Powell's failure to file a timely claim with the Commission. Under 27-2-102, the period of limitation applicable to any given cause of action begins to run when the claim or cause of action accrues, unless otherwise provided by statute. Pursuant to 49-2-501, a cause of action accrues under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, when the alleged unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered. Applying the principles in Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), the Supreme Court found that Powell may well be able to demonstrate that his cause of action did not accrue until sometime after his termination and that he had thus complied with the applicable 300-day limitation period. The allegations in Powell's complaint were sufficient to withstand the Salvation Army's motion to dismiss, and the District Court erred in concluding otherwise. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Powell v. Salvation Army, 287 M 99, 951 P2d 1352, 54 St. Rep. 1518 (1997), following Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180 (1981).

Dismissal for Failure to State a Claim — When: A complaint should not be dismissed for insufficiency unless it appears certain that plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any set of facts which could be proved in support of the claim. Court erred in dismissing complaint. Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997); Helena Parents Comm'n v. Lewis & Clark County Comm'rs, 277 M 367, 922 P2d 1140, 53 St. Rep. 687 (1996); Farris v. Hutchinson, 254 M 334, 838 P2d 374, 49 St. Rep. 717 (1992); Proto v. Missoula County, 230 M 351, 749 P2d 1094, 45 St. Rep. 265 (1988); Mogan v. Harlem, 227 M 435, 739 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 1212 (1987), followed in Doe v. St., 256 M 348, 846 P2d 1018, 50 St. Rep. 105 (1993); Stillman v. Fergus Co., 220 M 315, 715 P2d 43, 43 St. Rep. 396 (1986); Busch v. Kammerer, 200 M 130, 649 P2d 1339, 39 St. Rep. 1624 (1982); Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981); Kielmann v. Mogan, 156 M 230, 478 P2d 275 (1970).

Section 1983 Action for Damages and Declaratory and Injunctive Relief — State Agency Held Not a "Person" — Individual or Official Capacity of Individual Defendants Determined — Test for Qualified Immunity in Damages Action — Remington Overruled: Orozco, an inmate in the Montana State Prison, brought a civil action for damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983 against the Department of Corrections and Human Services (now Department of Corrections) and several Department employees for the denial of his due process rights in connection with the denial of his ability to earn good time credits. The Department moved for dismissal for failure to state a claim, based upon 11th amendment immunity. As to the Department, the Supreme Court held, citing Will v. Mich. Dept. of St. Police, 491 US 58 (1989), that because the Department has been created as part of the Executive Branch of state government, suing the Department is the same as suing the State of Montana, which is not a "person" for the purposes of a section 1983 action. In response to Orozco's argument that 2-9-305 required him to join the Department as a party, the Supreme Court noted that there is nothing in the text of that section that requires that the state be joined as a party; the section provides only for the tender of a defense and payment of damages by the state if a state employee is sued. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly dismissed the action for damages against the Department. As to the individual defendants, the Supreme Court held that state employees acting in their official capacities are likewise not "persons" for the purposes of a section 1983 action but that state employees acting in their individual capacities are "persons" within the meaning of section 1983. The Supreme Court noted that Orozco had not clearly indicated the capacities in which the individual defendants were being sued, and so it looked to other provisions of the complaint and to U.S. Supreme Court decisions in order to determine Orozco's intent and held that Orozco intended to sue the individual defendants in their individual capacities. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in holding that the individually named defendants were not "persons" under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for the purposes of the action for damages. The Supreme Court also held that in enacting 53-30-105 (now repealed) mandating rules for the accrual of good time, the state had created a right to good time. The Supreme Court also held that the immunity analysis used in Remington v. Dept. of Corrections and Human Services, 255 M 480, 844 P2d 50 (1992), was incorrect in light of the later decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Sandin v. Connor, 515 US 472 (1995), and overruled Remington, but, on the basis of the Sandin immunity analysis, determined that Orozco's liberty interest in the award of good time credits was not clearly established on the date of Orozco's hearing to reclassify him as a maximum security prisoner who was no longer entitled to earn good time credits. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the Department employees who were sued in their individual capacities were to be given qualified immunity for the purposes of the action for damages but that the District Court improperly dismissed the action for declaratory and injunctive relief and remanded the case to the District Court for a determination of what process was due Orozco before his opportunity to earn good time was revoked and whether he received that process. Orozco v. Day, 281 M 341, 934 P2d 1009, 54 St. Rep. 200 (1997).

Saving Statute Inapplicable to Complaint Filed Against Party Not Originally Named in Complaint: On January 8, 1992, Williams filed a charge with the Human Rights Commission

(HRC) of racial discrimination in employment against Zortman Mining, Inc. (Zortman), a wholly owned subsidiary of Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus). At Zortman's request, a right-to-sue letter was issued by the HRC. On June 18, 1993, Williams filed a complaint against Pegasus in federal court, but that complaint was dismissed on November 3, 1993, because Williams had not exhausted his administrative remedies. The federal court noted that Williams was attempting to manipulate the diversity jurisdiction of the federal court by naming the foreign parent corporation, Pegasus, but not the Montana subsidiary, Zortman. Naming Zortman as a party would have defeated diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1332. On November 9, 1993, after the 90-day period to file following issuance of a right-to-sue letter, Williams filed a complaint in state District Court naming Zortman as the only defendant. Williams asserted that the federal filing satisfied 49-2-509(2) (now repealed) and that the saving statute, 27-2-407, gave him 1 year to refile his complaint following dismissal in federal court. However, Zortman was not named in the federal action. Because the federal action was against a different party, 27-2-407 did not apply. The saving statute applies only when the new complaint and the original complaint are substantially for the same cause of action, including identity of the parties. The statute of limitations in 49-2-509 (now repealed) operated to bar Williams' claim against Zortman because Zortman was not a party to the first suit. As set out in Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918), 27-2-407 applies in cases in which an action has been commenced and, without plaintiff's fault, there is a failure to reach a determination of the merits and the statute of limitations runs during the pendency of the action. Williams v. Zortman Min., Inc., 275 M 510, 914 P2d 971, 53 St. Rep. 289 (1996), following Turner v. Aldor Co. of Nashville, Inc., 827 SW 2d 318 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991).

Failure to Assert Discharge of Debt by Bankruptcy in Earlier Action as Waiver and Res Judicata in Subsequent Action: Loney was sued by his law firm for fees owed for representing him in bankruptcy proceedings. Loney failed to answer the complaint, and a default judgment was entered. Loney subsequently filed a complaint to have the judgment declared void on the basis that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. The Supreme Court held that Loney had been required to assert the discharge of the debt in bankruptcy as an affirmative defense when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he had waived that defense and could not now assert it in his claim against the firm. The Supreme Court also held that Loney could have litigated the issue of the discharge of the debt when the law firm sued him. Therefore, he was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from litigating that issue again in his suit to have the firm's judgment voided. Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995), followed in Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997).

Failure to Install or Maintain Safety Device — No Allegation of Intentional or Malicious Acts — Exclusivity Provision of Workers' Compensation Act Prevails: Plaintiff sued, alleging that her son's death, which was covered by workers' compensation insurance, was caused by the negligence of defendant in not installing or maintaining a safety device. The District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Act provided the exclusive remedy. Plaintiff urged the court to carve out judicial exception to the Act to provide tort liability when a worker is killed because of failure to install or maintain a required safety device. The Supreme Court declined to make a judicial exception and relied on the legislative determination that absent intentional and malicious conduct, employees cannot sue their employers for injuries sustained during the course of their employment that are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Kortes v. Pool Co., 270 M 474, 893 P2d 322, 52 St. Rep. 291 (1995). See also Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Contradictory, Unsupported Allegations — Summary Dismissal Proper: The District Court properly granted a motion for summary dismissal for failure to state a claim when allegations of fraud were found to be contradictory, not sufficiently particular, and unsupported by fact. Allegations of fraud cannot ordinarily be based on "information and belief" except as to matters that are particularly within the opposing party's knowledge, and the allegations must be accompanied by a statement of facts upon which the belief is founded. C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 262 M 321, 864 P2d 1253, 50 St. Rep. 1577 (1993). See also Fossen v. Fossen, 2013 MT 299, 372 Mont. 175, 311 P.3d 743.

Equitable Bill of Discovery Allowable Under Limited Circumstances: While modern rules of pleading and practice virtually eliminated the need for an equitable bill of discovery, it is cognizable under the following limited circumstances: (1) it is available only against a person or entity that cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation; (2) it is available for the names and addresses of potential defendants and for onsite visits to inspect specific items that may have caused a documented injury; and (3) plaintiff in an equitable action must show that the discovery requested cannot be obtained otherwise and has been requested of and denied by the person or entity that, for whatever reason, cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation. An equitable bill of discovery that did not meet these narrow criteria was properly dismissed under this rule for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Temple v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992), distinguishing State ex rel. Pitcher v. District Court, 114 M 128, 133 P2d 350 (1943), and Japp v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389 (1981).

Use of Declaratory Judgment to Settle Question of Business Association Between Dentist and Denturist Improper — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim and Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Brisendine, a licensed denturist, presented to the Board of Dentistry a proposal stating his desire to enter into a business association with a dentist regarding fees and compensation. The Board issued a letter stating that it was considering the proposal but that such association would probably constitute the illegal practice of dentistry. The Board further threatened sanctions against Brisendine if he went forward with his proposal, but no final decision was ever issued by the Board. Brisendine sought a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief in District Court, requesting a decision on whether the business association was legal. The District Court dismissed the complaint for failure to present a justiciable controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that use of a declaratory judgment at this stage of the proceedings constituted an attempt to seek an advisory opinion and an unwarranted intrusion into the Board's regulatory authority. The Supreme Court noted that Brisendine could seek a declaratory judgment from the Board without subjecting his license to suspension or revocation and that dismissal of the motion for declaratory judgment was proper because Brisendine had not exhausted his administrative remedies. Brisendine v. St., 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019, 49 St. Rep. 444 (1992), distinguished in Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997).

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under this rule, the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Facts Challenging Zoning Ordinance — Sufficient Statement of Claim: The Supreme Court overruled the lower court's dismissal of a suit challenging a change in the zoning ordinance, holding that the plaintiffs' amended complaint was specific enough in its claim of damage to their property by the ordinance change to sufficiently state a claim. However, the Supreme Court did uphold the lower court's dismissal of the suit on the basis that the plaintiffs had failed to exhaust their administrative remedies. Kunz v. Butte-Silver Bow, 244 M 271, 797 P2d 224, 47 St. Rep. 1615 (1990).

Failure of Limited Partners to Request General Partner to Initiate Suit: The limited partners sued the bank, alleging that the bank had forced the general partner to breach his fiduciary duty to the limited partners. The lower court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, holding that the plaintiffs had not alleged that they were suing in a derivative capacity and that they had failed to set forth with particularity their efforts to obtain action by the general partner. The Supreme Court ruled that under Rule 9(a), M.R.Civ.P., the plaintiffs did not need to allege that they were suing in a derivative capacity. The court also held that although Rule 23.1, M.R.Civ.P., and 35-12-1403 require the plaintiffs to set out with particularity their efforts to get the general partner to take action, the lower court should have given the plaintiffs a chance to amend their complaint. Larson v. First Interstate Bank, 241 M 350, 786 P2d 1176, 47 St. Rep. 344 (1990).

Failure to State Claim — False Arrest and Imprisonment: The District Court properly dismissed plaintiff's suit when plaintiff was arrested for the offense of custodial interference for returning children to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) rather than to their lawful custodian as required by 45-5-304. Contway v. Camp, 236 M 169, 768 P2d 1377, 46 St. Rep. 270 (1989).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Reasonable Difference of Opinion That Defendant Did Not Cause Injury: Plaintiff parents appealed a summary judgment order in an action alleging a university's negligence caused injury to their minor daughter who had consumed alcohol and was involved in a motorcycle accident while under the supervision of a university program. Although the university assumed a custodial role similar to that of a high school when it undertook to have plaintiffs' daughter live on its campus, supervised by university personnel, and thus was charged with exercising reasonable care, there was no room for a reasonable difference of opinion as to whether someone other than the defendant university was the intervening cause of the daughter's injury. Therefore, summary judgment for the university based on proximate cause was proper. Graham v. Mont. St. Univ., 235 M 284, 767 P2d 301, 45 St. Rep. 2389 (1988).

Motion to Dismiss Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment: A motion to dismiss that raised the failure to state a claim as a defense and presented facts outside the pleading was properly treated as a motion for summary judgment. Am. Medical Oxygen Co. v. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center, 232 M 165, 755 P2d 37, 45 St. Rep. 962 (1988).

Three-Year Delay Between Filing of Grievance and Board Hearing — Motion to Dismiss Not Error: When appellant was not rehired by the city of Billings for a vacant position, he filed a grievance with the State Board of Personnel Appeals (Board), charging that the city was discriminating against him for earlier filing an unfair labor practice charge against the city. The District Court did not err in granting the Board's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, although there was a 3-year delay between the filing of the grievance and a hearing by the Board, allegedly caused by labor union interference and Board delay. The Board fulfilled the fundamental requirements of due process by allowing appellant notice and an opportunity to be heard. Under 2-4-701, appellant could have petitioned the Supreme Court to require the Board to hold a hearing. As to the defendant labor union, the District Court's order granting a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is reversed because appellant may be able to prove a set of facts stating a claim against the union. Klundt v. St., 219 M 347, 712 P2d 776, 43 St. Rep. 1 (1986). See also In re Connell v. St., 280 M 491, 930 P2d 88, 54 St. Rep. 28 (1997), in which the delay was by a state agency.

Frivolous Claims — The "Justinhoard" Thesis: Plaintiff sued a state government executive branch attorney because the attorney had represented four state Supreme Court Justices in another action in which plaintiff sued the Justices. Plaintiff claimed the attorney was guilty of conspiracy, improper official action, and abuse of the principle of "justinhoard" (a principle of justice apparently developed by and unique to plaintiff). The court found the complaint and appeal from its dismissal fruitless, weightless, needless, and senseless, stating that the cause is another of a series of proceedings by plaintiff in the state and federal courts in which he has imputed incompetence, bias, and conspiracy to judges and parties involved in his court actions, and has subjected the judicial process to denigration. The appeal was dismissed. Lussy v. Young, 215 M 50, 695 P2d 455, 42 St. Rep. 173 (1985).

Legal Malpractice Complaint — Upheld Under Liberal Rules of Pleading: In a legal malpractice suit, the defendant-attorney moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the complaint did not state a cause of action because the complaint did not specifically allege that had it not been for the negligence of the attorney, the client would have won the lawsuit. The District Court dismissed the case. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that under Montana's liberal rules of pleading, the complaint was sufficient. R.H. Schwartz Constr. Specialties, Inc. v. Hanrahan, 207 M 105, 672 P2d 1116, 40 St. Rep. 1926 (1983).

Conversion of Investment by Investment Advisor — Claim: Amended complaint was sufficient to constitute a claim for relief based on conversion where it alleged plaintiff invested approximately $32,000 through defendant investment firm in the Franklin Money Fund, that the firm wrongfully and without authority removed the money from the fund and placed it in the Kemper Cash Equivalent Fund, and that plaintiff was damaged by the firm's actions in the amount of $1,500, as he had to secure the services of an attorney and expend time, effort, and funds in pursuit of his property. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983).

Dismissal of Claims Without Certification Held Not Appealable — Multiple Parties: Where the claims of two of the three plaintiffs for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and trespass were dismissed for failure to state a claim, the dismissal was not appealable without certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. In Tobacco River Lumber, Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978), the Supreme Court held the dismissal of the claims of one of several parties to be appealable because the practical effect of the dismissal was to leave the party without judicial relief. However, in the instant case the remaining plaintiff sought the same relief as those whose claims were dismissed. The order dismissing those claims must therefore be considered interlocutory and not final. Benders v. Stratton, 202 M 150, 655 P2d 989, 39 St. Rep. 2389 (1982).

Discovery as Remedy for Lack of Specificity of Complaint: The Supreme Court does not favor cutting short litigation at initial pleading stage when a complaint does not state a cause of action under any set of facts; further specificity regarding a claim may be obtained by appropriate discovery devices. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981), followed in McKinnon v. W. Sugar Co-op Corp., 2010 MT 24, 355 Mont. 120, 225 P.3d 1221.

Refusal to Dismiss Count Not Directed Toward Movant: Refusal to dismiss certain defendants as to a count of the complaint was not error where the count was not directed toward them and the court's judgment on that count did not affect them. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

No Factfinding Appropriate on Motion to Dismiss: In action based not only on an action at law for breach of contract but also on a claim in equity for fraud, the court did not err in denying defendants' motion to dismiss on grounds that they were not "contractual parties" to the promissory note involved. A complaint will not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond any doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The court is not engaged in factfinding when ruling on a motion to dismiss. What evidence is later actually adduced in support of plaintiff's position is of no consequence when reviewing the appropriateness of the lower court's denial of a motion to dismiss made prior to trial. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Error in Procedure of County Commissioners — Dismissal Properly Ordered: Plaintiff and a majority of the residents of his territory petitioned to become a part of a school district in Teton County. The Cascade County Commissioners failed to meet jointly with Teton County Commissioners as required by 20-6-213 (now repealed). Each board of commissioners was unanimous in its decision, though their decisions were contrary, and no facts are alleged that any other mode of decision would have produced a different result. Plaintiff has not alleged an injury from the procedure followed, and one who is not injured will not be heard to complain. The District Court properly dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Gunderson v. County Comm'rs, 183 M 317, 599 P2d 359 (1979).

Tortious Interference With Business Relationship: The District Court erred in granting defendant's motion to dismiss because the complaint does, in fact, state a cause of action for tortious interference with a business relationship sufficient to require a Rule 12(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P, motion to be overruled. Pelton v. Markegard, 179 M 102, 586 P2d 306 (1978).

Motion Viewed With Disfavor: Courts view motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted with disfavor, and will grant them only where the complaint and accompanying allegations show upon their face some insuperable barrier to relief. Buttrell v. McBride Land & Livestock, 170 M 296, 553 P2d 407 (1976); Wheeler v. Moe, 163 M 154, 515 P2d 679 (1973), followed in Glaude v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 271 M 136, 894 P2d 940, 52 St. Rep. 367 (1995).

Motion to Dismiss a Complaint for Failure to State a Claim in the Face of a Specific Statute: Applying the rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief, a motion to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim was proper where third-party plaintiff knew that third-party defendant was an agent and that credit was not extended to him personally as 28-10-702(1) specifies credit must be given to the agent personally to hold him responsible to third persons as a principal. Hasbrouck v. Krsul, 168 M 270, 541 P2d 1197 (1975).

Civil Conspiracy: Granting of motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted was proper where the complaint alleged a mere conspiracy, as the actionable element of conspiracy is the wrong done plaintiff, not the combination of persons constituting the conspiracy. Thus, assuming the facts of the conspiracy are true, there is still no claim for relief stated. Duffy v. Butte Teachers' Union, 168 M 246, 541 P2d 1199 (1975), followed in Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991), Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 258 M 79, 852 P2d 523, 50 St. Rep. 433 (1993), Schumacker v. Meridian Oil Co., 1998 MT 79, 288 M 217, 956 P2d 1370, 55 St. Rep. 338 (1998), and Hughes v. Pullman, 2001 MT 216, 306 M 420, 36 P3d 339 (2001).

Official Immunity Sustained: Complaint against county Sheriff and four deputies and County Attorneys and two deputies for damages arising out of plaintiff's arrest, search of plaintiff's store, and plaintiff's public trial did not state claim upon which relief could be granted since public officers are immune from civil liability for their official acts and complaint did not allege defendants were acting outside their capacity as public officers or in excess of their authority. Wheeler v. Moe, 163 M 154, 515 P2d 679 (1973).

Failure to State a Claim — Sublessee — Privity: A sublessee, not a party to the original lease, does not have requisite privity to base a claim against the lessor upon. Such a complaint was properly dismissed for failure to state a claim. State ex rel. Buttrey Foods, Inc. v. District Court, 148 M 350, 420 P2d 845 (1966).

Failure to State a Claim — Terms of Pleading: Mere absence of certain terms of act does not cause a complaint to be bad by failing to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. A short and plain statement of the claim, in whatever words, suffices. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

NECESSARY PARTIES TO ACTION

State Court Jurisdiction Over Real Property Dispute Involving Federal Easement: A public lands access group sued Jones for blocking access to public lands that were previously accessible via a road across Jones's land. When the access group subsequently discovered that the federal Bureau of Reclamation had an express, nonexclusive easement over the road for irrigation and maintenance purposes since the road was constructed, the Bureau was joined as a party defendant. The Bureau and the access group then entered an agreement acknowledging the Bureau's easement, recognizing that the Bureau had never blocked public access to the road, and dismissing the Bureau from the suit. Jones then moved to dismiss the suit on grounds that the access group's claim for a prescriptive easement raised a dispute in title between the group and the United States and that because federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over such title disputes under the federal Quiet Title Act (FQTA), 28 U.S.C. 2409, et seq., the state District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction and personal jurisdiction over the claim, so the claim could not proceed in state court. The District Court agreed and dismissed the claim with prejudice. The access group appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The United States, through the Bureau, had been named as a defendant, knowingly and expressly disavowed a dispute in title between the Bureau and the access group, and agreed to be voluntarily dismissed from the suit. Therefore, a disputed title between the access group and the federal agency, which is required for jurisdiction under the FQTA, did not exist, nor did Jones provide any authority for the proposition that a defendant in a property dispute can assert a property interest of the United States under the FQTA in order to remove the cause of action to federal District Court. Jones failed to establish that the FQTA applied in this case, so the District Court did have subject matter jurisdiction over the action against Jones, and the action was remanded to District Court for further proceedings. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2008 MT 12, 341 M 111, 176 P3d 1005 (2008). See also Leisnoi, Inc. v. U.S., 170 F3d 1188 (9th Cir. 1999).

Conversion — Response to Improper Pleading: Good pleading requires that all the owners of a chattel, whether partners or not, join in an action to recover damages to, or for the wrongful taking or conversion of it, or to recover its possession; where this is not done, the pleading is vulnerable to a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), the defect, however, being waived by failure to demur. Schoenborn v. Williams, 83 M 477, 272 P 992 (1928).

Defect in Parties to Be Shown: Where an objection to a defect of parties is taken by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), the defect relied upon must be specifically pointed out. Church v. Zywert, 58 M 102, 190 P 291 (1920).

Absence of Necessary Party to Be Shown: A demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) for defect of parties must point out the particulars relied on, showing the absence of necessary, as distinguished from merely proper, parties. Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916); Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 25 M 379, 65 P 111 (1901).

Raising Issue by Answer or Motion: An alleged defect of parties, to be available as a ground of demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), must appear from the face of the complaint, else the objection can be raised only by answer. Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 559, 154 P 714 (1916).

CAPACITY OF PARTIES

Lack of Capacity Raised by Motion or Answer: Lack of legal capacity in plaintiff to sue, when apparent on the face of the complaint, can be questioned only by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), and when not so apparent the objection may be taken by answer; if not so taken advantage of, it is considered waived. NW. Hardware & Steel Co. v. Winnett, 67 M 545, 216 P 568 (1923).

Complaint to Show Defect Relied On: A special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground that the plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue, such as infancy or insanity, must point out the particular defect relied on, and the fact of such disability must appear on the face of the complaint. Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916).

Dismissal for Lack of Capacity — How Issue Raised: Where lack of capacity in plaintiff to sue does not appear from the face of the complaint, a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on this ground must point out wherein he lacks capacity. Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 559, 154 P 714 (1916).

Pleading to Be Specific: An objection of want of capacity to sue, defect or misjoinder of parties, or misjoinder of causes of action, must be made by a pleading which specifically points out the defect relied upon, whether the pleading be a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or an answer. O'Donnell v. Butte, 44 M 97, 119 P 281 (1911).

Want of Capacity Distinct From Failure to State a Claim: A demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground of want of capacity is something entirely distinct from one which raises the objection that a complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. When one of these two separate grounds is the basis of a demurrer, the other cannot be considered. Knight v. Le Beau, 19 M 223, 47 P 952 (1897).

DISMISSAL VERSUS SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Admissibility of Evidence of Lawfully Seized Property — Summary Dismissal of Petition for Forfeiture Improper: After Branam's vehicle was stopped by an officer following a report of an assault, Branam fled. The officer had the vehicle towed to a storage yard. An employee of the storage yard noticed cash and a weapon in the vehicle. A search of the vehicle under warrant yielded cash, a weapon, and drug paraphernalia. The state petitioned for forfeiture of the property. Branam moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that because the state did not have probable cause to seize the property, the evidence was inadmissible. The District Court agreed and summarily dismissed the petition, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court held that the facts alleged in the petition were sufficient to satisfy the requirements of 44-12-103, so the petition was sufficient to withstand Branam's motion to dismiss. As a matter of law, the property was lawfully seized and probable cause existed to institute forfeiture proceedings, so Branam was not entitled to summary judgment dismissing the petition. However, the court declined to comment on the admissibility of the evidence because the question of whether the state could present sufficient admissible evidence at trial to establish that the property was subject to forfeiture under 44-12-102 was not before the court. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. St. v. Branam, 2006 MT 300, 334 M 457, 148 P3d 635 (2006).

Examination on Motion to Dismiss Limited to Contents of Complaint — Notice Required for Consideration of Materials Outside Pleading: Plouffe sued the state for tortious conduct, malicious prosecution, and defamation. The state moved for dismissal based on res judicata, and the District Court granted the state's motion, so Plouffe appealed. In considering the dismissal motion, the District Court relied on exhibits and materials related to other issues than those cited in the complaint. Plouffe noted that the exhibits could have been examined by converting the motion to one for summary judgment but that Plouffe would have been entitled to proper notice of the court's intention to do so. The state contended that the District Court was allowed to take judicial notice of the extraneous materials under Rule 201, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), without converting the motion to one for summary judgment. The Supreme Court decided for Plouffe. On a motion to dismiss, the District Court may examine only whether a claim has been adequately stated in the complaint, and the court's examination is limited to the content of the complaint. Whether Plouffe's complaint was barred by res judicata could not be determined from the allegations of the complaint. The District Court could have ignored the exhibits and decided the motion based on the rules pertaining to a motion to dismiss, or the court could have converted the motion to one for summary judgment, which would have allowed Plouffe to present all material pertinent to the motion and to avoid surprise. However, judicial notice cannot circumvent the notice requirement in this rule. Plouffe's complaint did not challenge or present a collateral attack on a prior judgment, so the complaint could not be dismissed without converting the motion to dismiss to one for summary judgment. The District Court's failure to do so, and to notify Plouffe of its intent to do so, was reversible error. Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003). See also Glickman v. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, 1998 MT 8, 287 M 161, 951 P2d 1388 (1998).

Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Respond to Revised Motion for Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended that the District Court improperly converted a motion under this rule to dismiss to a Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., motion for summary judgment, arguing that they were denied the opportunity to respond to affidavits submitted by defendant with its reply brief and that the District Court erred when it did not assume the facts stated in plaintiffs' complaint to be true, thus improperly resolving contested issues of fact. The Supreme Court noted that under Gebhardt v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855 (1983), when a District Court intends to convert a motion in this manner, notice should be given to the parties that the court intends to consider matters outside the pleadings, in order to give the party opposing summary judgment or dismissal the opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would establish a genuine issue of material fact and thereby avoid summary judgment if possible. However, in this case, the District Court did not convert the motion at a point when plaintiffs had no opportunity to respond. Rather, for reasons not apparent from the record, plaintiffs did not respond to the revised motion, nor at the time that the motion was heard did plaintiffs complain or ask for an opportunity to respond, even though it was clear that the motion for summary judgment would be heard. Instead, plaintiffs went beyond the pleadings in filing an affidavit with their response brief, but offered no further proof, and argued that the factual allegations in the complaint must be taken as true for purposes of a motion to dismiss under this rule. Therefore, plaintiffs had adequate notice of and opportunity to respond to the motion for summary judgment, and the District Court did not improperly convert the motion. Enger v. Missoula, 2001 MT 142, 306 M 28, 29 P3d 514 (2001).

Lack of Property Ownership Within Proposed Annexation — No Standing to Challenge Annexation Resolution — Summary Judgment Proper Despite Lack of Notice to Parties of Intent to Convert Motion to Dismiss Into Motion for Summary Judgment: It is error for a court to fail to give formal notice of the intent to convert a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment, giving the party opposing the motion an opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would create a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment. However, in this case, plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge an annexation resolution because they did not own property within the proposed annexation. Without standing to state a claim, plaintiffs could prove no set of facts in support of their action that would entitle them to relief. Therefore, failure by the court to give the parties notice of conversion of the motion to dismiss was harmless error. Knudsen v. Ereaux, 275 M 146, 911 P2d 835, 53 St. Rep. 83 (1996), following O'Donnell Fire Serv. & Equip. v. Billings, 219 M 317, 711 P2d 822 (1985).

No Notice of Intent to Treat Dismissal Motion as Summary Judgment — Eventual Result Same: Although the District Court erred in not giving the required notice that it intended to treat the motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment, the matter was not reversed or remanded because the eventual result in the court would have been the same. First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Missoula v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281, 46 St. Rep. 1280 (1989).

Motions to Dismiss Properly Converted to Motions for Summary Judgment: Defendants brought motions to dismiss under this rule, and in response plaintiff attached 11 documents to his brief opposing the motions, arguing the contents of the documents throughout the brief. The District Court considered the documents, excluded nothing presented to it, converted the motions to dismiss to motions for summary judgment, and dismissed the action as barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff did not appear at the oral hearing, but later claimed he had no opportunity to present material pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found that by introducing the documents and inviting consideration of them, plaintiff was fairly apprised that the trial court would look beyond the pleadings and could treat the motions to dismiss as motions for summary judgment. Bretz v. Ayers, 232 M 132, 756 P2d 1115, 45 St. Rep. 936 (1988), citing Grove v. Mead School District, 753 F2d 1528 (9th Cir. 1985), and followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 1998 MT 331, 292 M 277, 971 P2d 371, 55 St. Rep. 1346 (1998), Koke v. Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians of Mont., Inc., 2003 MT 121, 315 M 510, 68 P3d 814 (2003), and Conway v. Benefis Health Sys., Inc., 2013 MT 73, 369 Mont. 309, 297 P.3d 1200.

Consideration of Matters Outside Pleadings on Motion to Dismiss — Conversion to Summary Judgment: Reversible error was committed when matters outside the pleadings were considered in conjunction with defendant's motion to dismiss complaint and the court did not notify plaintiff that the effect of such consideration was conversion of the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff was entitled to reasonable opportunity to present all materials pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. Though plaintiff must be presumed to have knowledge of the automatic conversion requirements of the rule governing a motion to dismiss, since the court had discretion as to whether or not it would exclude extra-pleading materials, it was incumbent on the court to affirmatively notify the parties that the materials were not excluded and that the conversion of the motion to dismiss into a summary judgment motion was effected. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983), followed in Gordon v. Hedman, 277 M 96, 918 P2d 680, 53 St. Rep. 558 (1996).

Motion to Dismiss Improperly Granted — Court's Reliance on Alleged Facts in Brief Improper: The defendant moved to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. The motion to dismiss was improperly granted, because the District Court appeared to rely on allegations of fact contained in the parties' briefs. If a District Court intends to utilize this rule as a summary judgment proceeding, it is under a duty to give notice to the parties of the changed status of the motion. Busch v. Kammerer, 200 M 130, 649 P2d 1339, 39 St. Rep. 1624 (1982). See also Wood v. Den Herder, 277 M 147, 920 P2d 105, 53 St. Rep. 646 (1996).

Appealability and Appropriateness of Partial Summary Judgment: Although a partial summary judgment granting specific performance of an option contract was designated as interlocutory it was a final and appealable transfer of property. Furthermore, the summary judgment was improperly granted when based upon a determination in a hearing on motion to dismiss that there were no issues of material fact, depriving defendant the opportunity to effectively resist the summary judgment motion. Graveley v. MacLeod, 175 M 338, 573 P2d 1166 (1978).

Distinction Between Motion to Dismiss and for Summary Judgment: The District Judge did not reverse the previously disqualified District Judge's denial of defendants' motion to dismiss by granting defendants' motions for summary judgment and thereby improperly exercising appellate jurisdiction because the latter motion was a decision on the merits while the former was merely a determination of the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Notice — Summary Judgment Granted on a Motion to Dismiss Complaint for Failure to State a Claim: District Court erred in treating defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim as a motion for summary judgment without affording plaintiff notice and opportunity to oppose it because the court must give the parties notice of the changed status of the motion and a reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such motion so no one will be taken by surprise by the conversion. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Livingston, 169 M 431, 548 P2d 155 (1976), followed in Hoveland v. Petaja, 252 M 268, 828 P2d 392, 49 St. Rep. 245 (1992).

Former Rule 12(c). Motion for judgment on the pleadings

Failure to Establish Existence of Written Contract Concerning Obligation to Convey Mobile Homes — Declaratory Relief Inappropriate: Plaintiff sought declaratory relief related to the purchase of a trailer park, asserting that the seller breached the contract by failing to convey the seller's personal mobile units following the sale. The District Court denied the breach of contract claim, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to establish the existence of a written contract under which the seller was obligated to convey the personal mobile units, so the breach of contract claim was futile. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Agreement for Payment of Costs of Subdivision Telephone Facilities Containing Contingent Service Refund Not Considered Loan Requiring Payment of Interest — Judgment on Pleadings Affirmed: In 2001, defendant telephone cooperative entered an aid to construction contract whereby plaintiff agreed to pay $85,497.88 to aid defendant in costs incurred in installing, operating, and maintaining telephone facilities for services to plaintiff's subdivision. The contract required defendant to refund all or part of the money following construction if the actual cost per unit was less than estimated and the unit maintained continuous service for 5 years. In 2004, plaintiff demanded that defendant pay interest on the money, asserting that the money was a loan. The District Court held that the money was not a loan, so plaintiff was not entitled to interest. The District Court granted judgment on the pleadings for defendant pursuant to Rule 12(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court properly considered all materials and exhibits referred to in the pleading, and the court did not have to accept the allegation that the money was a loan for purposes of granting judgment because the question was not a factual allegation, but rather a question of law. Defendant's obligation to return money was based on a contingency, and there was no absolute promise to repay, so the transaction did not meet the definition of a loan. Thus, judgment on the pleadings was proper. Firelight Meadows, LLC v. 3 Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2008 MT 202, 344 M 117, 186

P3d 869 (2008), following Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), and distinguished in Conway v. Benefis Health Sys., Inc., 2013 MT 73, 369 Mont. 309, 297 P.3d 1200. See also Nyquist v. Nyquist, 255 M 149, 841 P2d 515 (1992).

Deed Outside Chain of Title — No Easement Absent Notice That Property Servient to Access Stated in Deed: Nelson's deed for a subdivision lot stated that Nelson would have a roadway easement for access to another lot bordered by Flathead Lake. That lot was subsequently purchased by Barlow. Barlow's deed contained no reference to an easement or reference to Nelson's deed stating that Nelson had a roadway easement to access Barlow's lot. When Barlow began building a cabin on his lot, Nelson sued to enjoin construction, alleging that Nelson's deed entitled him to cross Barlow's lot to access Flathead Lake. The District Court granted Barlow's motion for judgment on the pleadings and dismissed Nelson's claim, so Nelson appealed. The Supreme Court first noted that the language in Nelson's deed was ambiguous and concluded that the District Court erred in holding otherwise. However, the District Court correctly noted that Barlow was not a party to Nelson's deed, and because no similar access provision existed in Barlow's deed, Barlow was not bound by Nelson's deed. Nelson's deed was outside Barlow's chain of title. Even though Nelson's deed was recorded several years prior to Barlow's purchase, that fact was insufficient to impose an easement on Barlow's lot. Barlow was not required to examine the chain of title to Nelson's land to discover an alleged easement across the Barlow property for the benefit of Nelson, and the purported grant of lake access in Nelson's deed did not put Barlow on notice that his property was servient to an easement. The District Court was affirmed. Nelson v. Barlow, 2008 MT 68, 342 M 93, 179 P3d 529 (2008), overruled in part in Earl v. Pavex Corp., 2013 MT 343, 372 Mont. 476, 313 P.3d 154. See also Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941), and Goeres v. Lindey's, Inc., 190 M 172, 619 P2d 1194 (1980).

Failure to State Cognizable Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 — Judgment on Pleadings Properly Granted: Brown filed a complaint in District Court seeking to address alleged deprivations of his rights by prison officials under 42 U.S.C. 1983, but the complaint was dismissed on the pleadings for failure to state a cognizable claim under the federal law. The District Court found that Brown's claims were barred by Heck v. Humphrey, 512 US 477 (1994), which held that a state prisoner's claim for damages is not cognizable under 42 U.S.C. 1983 if a judgment in favor of plaintiff would necessarily imply the invalidity of the conviction or sentence, unless the prisoner can demonstrate that the conviction or sentence has been previously invalidated. Brown appealed, seeking to distinguish Heck by casting his claim as one for an earlier parole appearance, rather than as affecting his ultimate release date. The Supreme Court was not persuaded. Brown's claims, if proved, would necessarily imply the invalidity of his conviction or sentence and thus were not cognizable under 42 U.S.C. 1983, unless Brown could demonstrate that the conviction or sentence had been invalidated. The District Court's dismissal of Brown's 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim was affirmed. Brown v. St., 2002 MT 58, 309 M 106, 46 P3d 42 (2002), distinguishing Neal v. Shimoda, 131 F3d 818 (9th Cir. 1997).

Contested Ownership of Independent Business — Standard of Review of Judgment on Pleadings: Hedges claimed ownership of an independent Melaleuca business, allegedly acquired through a written transfer of the business by Johnson, the former owner, before Johnson's death. As corepresentatives of Johnson's estate, the Woodhouses claimed ownership of the same business by virtue of a residuary devise in Johnson's will. The uncontroverted facts in the pleadings served as the factual basis for the parties' competing motions for judgment on the pleadings. A movant for judgment on the pleadings must establish that no material fact exists and that movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and pleadings are to be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whose allegations are taken as true. The conclusions of law standard of review is applied. The District Court properly looked to Johnson's Melaleuca contract, which required that Melaleuca accept signed and acknowledged forms in respect to transfer of a business during a business owner's lifetime and approve the transfer in writing. The contractual restrictions on assignment of a Melaleuca contract were not met by Johnson's written transfer of the business to Hedges, and the court correctly concluded that Johnson's assignment was not valid. Judgment on the pleadings for Woodhouses was affirmed. Hedges v. Woodhouse, 2000 MT 220, 301 M 180, 8 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 905 (2000).

Order for Summary Judgment Proper When Additional Information Considered: Whitlock characterized the District Court's decision as a judgment on the pleadings because no extrinsic evidence was introduced to treat the decision as a summary judgment and contended that the court's decision was therefore improper. Noting that at one point during the proceedings Whitlock had moved for summary judgment in his favor and urged consideration of some supplementary documents, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had before it additional information that was not part of the pleadings. Because there was no disputed issue of material fact, the court's order was considered one for summary judgment pursuant to this rule. Citizens to Recall Mayor James Whitlock v. Whitlock, 255 M 517, 844 P2d 74, 49 St. Rep. 1113 (1992).

Denial of Motion for Judgment on Pleadings Part Way Through Trial: It was proper for the District Court to deny as tardy a motion for judgment on the pleadings after 16 stipulations had been read into the record and two witnesses had testified for approximately 140 pages of transcript. In re Estate of Flasted, 228 M 85, 741 P2d 750, 44 St. Rep. 1362 (1987).

Quiet Title Action — Motion Properly Denied: A Rule 12(c) motion is improper if the court must look to matters beyond the pleadings. The District Court was asked to examine matters beyond the pleadings, such as tax records and records of the County Clerk and Recorder; thus, the District Court correctly denied the motion. Murphy v. Atl. Richfield Co., 221 M 166, 717 P2d 558, 43 St. Rep. 717 (1986).

Motion Properly Granted as to Improper Defendant: Where complaint alleged defendant was a party to the contract underlying the lawsuit but the contract itself revealed defendant was not a party and no other evidence was offered showing defendant was a proper party to the lawsuit, motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly granted. Kinion v. Design Sys., Inc., 197 M 177, 641 P2d 472, 39 St. Rep. 408 (1982).

Motion for Judgment on Pleadings Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment: The court improperly granted judgment on the pleadings because in doing so it considered matters beyond the complaint and answer, the only pleadings in the case. The motion should have been treated as one for summary judgment. Mathews v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 184 M 368, 603 P2d 232 (1979).

Failure to State Cause of Action: The court properly granted judgment on the pleadings to defendant when the pleadings failed to state a cause of action for libel—either libel per se or libel per quod by special damages. Wainman v. Bowler, 176 M 91, 576 P2d 268 (1978).

Constitutionality — Judgment on the Pleadings Affirmed:

Judgment on pleadings for defendant against plaintiff contesting the constitutionality of 90-5-101 through 90-5-113 was upheld. Fickes v. Missoula County, 155 M 258, 470 P2d 287 (1970).

Judgment on pleadings for defendant against plaintiff contesting the constitutionality of Ch. 177, L. 1963, was upheld. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. McCormick, 152 M 319, 448 P2d 991 (1968).

No Appeal From Denial of Motion: An appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Corey v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 72 M 383, 233 P 909 (1925).

Denial of Motion — Failure to Proceed to Trial: It was proper for the court to enter judgment for defendant after overruling plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings, where plaintiff, instead of proceeding to trial upon the merits, announced that he would stand on the motion made. Moore v. Murray, 30 M 13, 75 P 515 (1904).

Former Rule 12(d). Preliminary hearings

Preliminary Hearing Procedure Appropriate to Determine Jurisdictional Dispute: A preliminary hearing by the District Court pursuant to this rule is the appropriate procedure if there are material jurisdictional facts in dispute. If there are jurisdictional facts intertwined with facts involving the merits of the case, the court may determine its jurisdiction in a plenary pretrial proceeding. Minuteman Aviation, Inc. v. Swearingen, 237 M 207, 772 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 741 (1989), followed in Bunch v. Lancair Int'l, Inc., 2009 MT 29, 349 M 144, 202 P3d 784 (2009), to the extent that when material jurisdictional facts are disputed, the District Court has discretion to permit discovery to resolve any factual issues.

Factual Issue Relating to Both Jurisdiction and Ultimate Liability Properly Determined by Motion: Plaintiffs appealed the use of affidavits and discovery material in the court file in the court's determination of whether an employee of a certain defendant was acting within the scope of his employment. The plaintiffs complained that the court's determination amounted to a decision of the defendant's ultimate tort liability rather than a factual determination of the court's jurisdiction over some defendants. While agreeing that jurisdiction and ultimate liability in tort are not subject to determination by motion where disputes of fact exist, the Supreme Court held that common collateral issues related to the defendant's connection with the tortious act are jurisdictional issues which may be resolved before trial and the trial court's use of affidavits for that purpose was correct under Rules 12(d) and 43(e), M.R.Civ.P. In so holding, the court noted that the discovery materials and affidavits were extensive and that the plaintiffs were given a sufficient opportunity to examine the nonresident defendants through depositions and interrogatories and thereby to develop their argument regarding jurisdiction. Knoepke v. SW.

Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980), followed in Grizzly Sec. Armored Express, Inc. v. The Armored Group, LLC, 2011 MT 128, 360 Mont. 517, 255 P.3d 143.

"Special Appearance" Treated as Motion to Dismiss — Dismissal of Nonresident Defendants for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction Upheld: Plaintiffs appealed the dismissal of nonresident defendants from their wrongful death and survivorship lawsuits. The Supreme Court found that a "special appearance" made by a party defendant to quash service of a summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, despite its outdated label, served as a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. The trial court did not commit reversible error by granting a motion that used an antiquated label. Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980).

Former Rule 12(e). Motion for more definite statement

Failure to Replead in Accordance With Rules — Dismissal With Prejudice Warranted — Exhaustion of All Sanctions Not Required: After a contract action against Nystroms was dismissed, Nystroms brought an action against the plaintiffs and their counsel, consisting of 76 paragraphs in 26 pages, alleging malicious fraudulent prosecution, intentional abuse of process, and unlawful intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court determined that the complaint was vindictive, argumentative, and repetitive and directed Nystroms to replead in accordance to Rules 8 and 12, M.R.Civ.P. Nystroms then filed an amended complaint of 130 paragraphs in 43 pages including previous allegations and adding allegations of interference with business relations and conspiracy. The District Court dismissed with prejudice under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to comply with the court's order. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that even though there may have been other less severe remedies available to the District Court, that court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. The Nystroms' counsel had warning that failure to replead in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure could result in dismissal. The District Court could have reasonably concluded that there was no other adequate remedy available to the District Court and the defendant under the circumstances. Nystrom v. Melcher, 262 M 151, 864 P2d 754, 50 St. Rep. 1488 (1993).

When Claims Uncertain: If plaintiff's claims were as uncertain as defendants asserted, plaintiff was entitled to file a motion to make the pleadings more definite and certain under Rule 12(e), M.R.Civ.P., rather than expect the court to dismiss the claims. Tobacco River Lumber Co., Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law — Unnecessary: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P., Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Lack of Separate Statement of Causes: The objection to a complaint that the causes of action therein contained are not separately stated and numbered cannot be raised by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). The proper remedy for such a defect is a motion to make the pleading more definite and certain. Roberts v. Sinnott, 55 M 369, 177 P 252 (1918); Marcellus v. Wright, 51 M 559, 154 P 714 (1916); Galvin v. O'Gorman, 40 M 391, 106 P 887 (1910).

Former Rule 12(f). Motion to strike

GENERAL

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law — Unnecessary: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P., Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Failure to Verify — Effect: When failure to verify was not raised as an issue until after trial and no claim was made that the failure was prejudicial, there was no error. The proper remedy was a motion to strike. Adams v. Davis, 142 M 587, 386 P2d 574 (1963).

Appellate Review: Where the District Court sustains a motion of defendant to strike out certain portions of the complaint on the ground that they are "sham, conclusion, irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, redundant, surplusage and frivolent", and neither brief nor argument indicate in what manner same was subject to such objections, the Supreme Court will examine the stricken matter with the rest of the complaint and if found unobjectionable the court will direct overruling of the motion to strike. Christie v. Morris, 116 M 210, 149 P2d 250 (1944).

Insufficient Defense — Remedies: Where the plea of another action pending is open to the objection of being sham, irrelevant, and redundant, it may be stricken on motion. Where, however, the sufficiency of the plea is sought to be tested, the proper practice is to demur (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Flatt v. Norman, 91 M 543, 11 P2d 798 (1932); McCormick v. Shields, 63 M 9, 205 P 831 (1922).

Redundant Material in Complaint — Remedy: A motion to strike, and not a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), is the proper method of attacking a complaint alleged to be defective for maintaining conclusions of law or surplusage. Raiche v. Morrison, 37 M 244, 95 P 1061 (1908).

Immaterial Matter to Be Disregarded: Sham and irrelevant matter, when not stricken out on motion, will be wholly disregarded. Power v. Gum, 6 M 5, 9 P 575 (1886).

SHAM PLEADING

Failure to Replead in Accordance With Rules — Dismissal With Prejudice Warranted — Exhaustion of All Sanctions Not Required: After a contract action against Nystroms was dismissed, Nystroms brought an action against the plaintiffs and their counsel, consisting of 76 paragraphs in 26 pages, alleging malicious fraudulent prosecution, intentional abuse of process, and unlawful intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court determined that the complaint was vindictive, argumentative, and repetitive and directed Nystroms to replead in accordance to Rules 8 and 12, M.R.Civ.P. Nystroms then filed an amended complaint of 130 paragraphs in 43 pages including previous allegations and adding allegations of interference with business relations and conspiracy. The District Court dismissed with prejudice under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to comply with the court's order. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that even though there may have been other less severe remedies available to the District Court, that court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. The Nystroms' counsel had warning that failure to replead in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure could result in dismissal. The District Court could have reasonably concluded that there was no other adequate remedy available to the District Court and the defendant under the circumstances. Nystrom v. Melcher, 262 M 151, 864 P2d 754, 50 St. Rep. 1488 (1993).

Sham Defenses in Amended Answer: Where, after a general demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to certain affirmative defenses in an action on a surety company's bond had been sustained as not presenting a defense, defendant in an amended answer repleaded them, the court properly ordered them stricken as sham. St. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 78 M 504, 255 P 1063 (1927), explained in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Phillips, 69 F2d 901 (9th Cir. 1934).

"Sham", "Irrelevant", and "Redundant" Matter Defined: A "sham" pleading is one which appears to be false by comparison with other declarations of the pleading, or appears manifestly and inherently so by reason of its incompatibility with the law or the nature and condition of things within the judicial knowledge. "Irrelevant" matter is such as has no connection with the cause of action. "Redundant" matter is that which is unnecessary or superfluous. Flatt v. Norman, 91 M 543, 11 P2d 798 (1922).

How Sham Determined: The sham pleading, or portion thereof to be eliminated on motion, is such as appears manifestly and inherently sham by reason of its incompatibility with the law, or the nature and condition of things within the judicial knowledge, or appears to be false by comparison with other declarations of the pleading; and these conditions should appear upon a consideration of the pleading alone. McDonald v. Pincus, 13 M 83, 32 P 283 (1892).

Former Rule 12(g). Consolidation of defenses in motion

Jurisdictional Defense Lost — Scope of Jurisdiction Over Nonresidents: Defendant could not inject plea of lack of jurisdiction over the person after filing motion asserting lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Jurisdiction is proper over nonresident buyer purchasing through nonresident agent when one payment was made directly to and one order was made directly with resident seller. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

Objection to Uncertainty of Pleadings Waived: Where the defendant charged in a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to a complaint that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but failed to interpose an objection on the ground that the complaint was ambiguous and uncertain, he must be considered to have waived the latter objection. Johnson v. Herring, 89 M 156, 295 P 1100 (1931); Doane v. Marquisee, 63 M 166, 206 P 426 (1922); Cohen v. Clark, 44 M 151, 119 P 775 (1911); Pryor v. Walkerville, 31 M 618, 79 P 240 (1905).

GENERAL

Challenge to Jurisdiction — Formality Not Required: A written request for dismissal because of lack of jurisdiction and an oral challenge to jurisdiction at a hearing were entirely adequate under Rule 12(h)(3), M.R.Civ.P., to bring the issue before the court. In re Marriage of Lance, 213 M 182, 690 P2d 979, 41 St. Rep. 2032 (1984).

Motion to Change Venue After Default Judgment Entered — Denied as Untimely — Proper Course Suggested: A motion for a change of venue may not be made after judgment has been entered. Thus, in this case defendant's motion to change venue was correctly denied as untimely because a default divorce judgment had been granted. Defendant's proper course of action should have been to move for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P.; then, if granted, she should attempt to withdraw her initial appearance and request a change of venue. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 208 M 83, 675 P2d 392, 41 St. Rep. 183 (1984).

Real Party in Interest — Waiver: Where it does not appear from the face of the complaint that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, the defect can only be reached by answer and is waived by failure to so plead. La Bonte v. Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 75 M 1, 241 P 631 (1925).

Answer After Objection Overruled — Waiver of Right to Appeal: Where a defendant has interposed a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to a complaint which is overruled, and fails to stand upon his demurrer, but answers over and goes to trial upon the merits, he waives his right to be heard upon his objection to the action of the court in overruling the demurrer, unless the complaint should be so defective as not to support the judgment. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 M 227, 67 P 114 (1902); Murphy v. Phelps, 12 M 531, 31 P 64 (1892); Barber v. Briscoe, 8 M 214, 19 P 589 (1888); Garver v. Lynde, 7 M 108, 14 P 697 (1887); Francisco v. Davis, 2 M 474 (1876).

JURISDICTION OVER PARTIES

Failure to Comply With Briefing Schedule on Issue of Personal Jurisdiction —Jurisdiction Defense Waived: A former wife brought a contempt petition against her former husband for his alleged failure to pay debts pursuant to the parties' Georgia marriage dissolution. The husband's counsel appeared in District Court and indicated that a motion might be filed objecting to personal jurisdiction. The court set a schedule for filing the motion and set a date for hearing, but counsel failed to submit a motion or brief within the time set by the court or to request an extension. At the hearing and without having filed a motion and brief, counsel raised the question of personal jurisdiction. The court ordered briefing on the question of whether counsel's failure to file a motion and brief by the original deadline amounted to waiver of the personal jurisdiction issue, but counsel's subsequent brief addressed only the jurisdiction issue and not the waiver issue. The court then overruled the objection to personal jurisdiction and the case went to trial. The husband appealed the denial of his motion to dismiss based on lack of personal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. When a defendant who has been served with process files an appearance, indicates the intent to file a motion challenging personal jurisdiction, and then fails to file the motion or a supporting brief within the timeframe established by the scheduling order, the defendant waives the defense of lack of personal jurisdiction. Smith v. Smith, 2008 MT 461, 348 M 174, 199 P3d 824 (2008), distinguishing Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171 (1993).

No Jurisdiction in Montana Courts Over Reservation Indian — URESA (Now UIFSA) — Jurisdiction Not Based on Waiver Alone: The wife appealed the dismissal of her action seeking to enforce child support payments under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) (now Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA)). The District Court ruled it had no jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court agreed there was neither subject matter jurisdiction nor personal jurisdiction. The husband was a Blackfeet Indian living on the reservation in Montana.

Jurisdiction could not be found in federal enabling statutes because neither the tribe nor the state complied with them, there were no off-reservation acts in Montana sufficient to vest state courts with jurisdiction over the husband, and a reservation Indian's domicile on the reservation is not an in-state contact that grants jurisdiction to state courts. The father has not acquiesced in state jurisdiction and has challenged state court jurisdiction from the outset. The fact that there was no appeal from the tribal court, the only avenue open to the wife, to the federal court system was not a waiver in favor of state court jurisdiction. There must be a legal basis supporting state jurisdiction. State ex rel. Flammond v. Flammond, 190 M 350, 621 P2d 471, 37 St. Rep. 1991 (1980).

Jurisdictional Defense Lost — Scope of Jurisdiction Over Nonresidents: Defendant could not inject plea of lack of jurisdiction over the person after filing motion asserting lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Jurisdiction is proper over nonresident buyer purchasing through nonresident agent when one payment was made directly to and one order was made directly with resident seller. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

Lack of Jurisdiction Waived: Defendant who did not plead lack of jurisdiction over the person in his initial response to complaint was precluded from making subsequent motion on the omitted defense under subsection (g) and he thereby waived the defense under provisions of this subsection. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Spahn, 156 M 68, 474 P2d 141 (1970).

Misjoinder of Plaintiff on Face of Complaint — How Objection Taken — Waiver: Where it appears on the face of the complaint that causes of action have been improperly united or that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff, the objection must be by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed); otherwise it is considered waived. State ex rel. Clark v. Bailey, 99 M 484, 44 P2d 740 (1935); Frost v. Long & Co., 66 M 385, 213 P 1107 (1923).

Misjoinder of Defendant on Face of Complaint — How Objection Taken — Waiver: Where a misjoinder of parties defendant is patent upon the face of the complaint, the defect can be availed of only by special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), failure to interpose which waives it. Schauer v. Morgan, 67 M 455, 216 P 347 (1923).

Misjoinder Objection Waived — How Taken: The objection of a misjoinder of causes of action is waived, unless it is taken by answer or demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Frost v. Long & Co., 66 M 385, 213 P 1107 (1923); Forsell v. Pittsburgh & Mont. Copper Co., 38 M 403, 100 P 218 (1909).

Objection to Introduction of Evidence — Misjoinder Objection Improper: The point that the complaint discloses a misjoinder of parties, or that causes of action are improperly united, may not be raised by objection to the introduction of evidence, but must be taken advantage of by special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), else the right to object is waived. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Unneeded Defendants Joined — Waiver of Objection: Where the proof showed that too many persons had been joined as defendants, but this fact did not appear upon the face of the complaint, and the answer of the defendant did not plead it, the defendant thereby waived his objection to the misjoinder of the parties defendant. Knatz v. Wise, 16 M 555, 41 P 710 (1895); Conklin v. Fox, 3 M 208 (1878). See also Logan v. Billings & N. R.R., 40 M 467, 107 P 415 (1910); Puckett v. Hopkins, 63 M 137, 206 P 422 (1922); and Frost v. Long & Co., 66 M 385, 213 P 1107 (1923).

CAPACITY OF PARTIES

Form of Objection — Waiver: Lack of legal capacity in plaintiff to sue, when apparent on the face of the complaint, can be questioned only by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed); when not so apparent the objection may be taken by answer. If the apparent lack of capacity is not so taken advantage of, it is considered waived. Piatt & Heath Co. v. Wilmer, 87 M 382, 288 P 1021 (1930); NW. Hardware & Steel Co. v. Winnett, 67 M 545, 216 P 568 (1923).

Failure to Object — Waiver of Remedy: If no objection to the capacity of minor plaintiffs to sue is taken by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer, it is considered to be waived. O'Donnell v. Butte, 44 M 97, 119 P 281 (1911).

Caption Defective: Where the complaint did not state the Christian name of the plaintiff, and defendant answered and admitted that plaintiff was in the possession of certain premises when an alleged trespass was committed thereon, defendant waived his right to raise the question in the Supreme Court that the complaint was uncertain in stating plaintiff's name. Nichols v. Dobbins, 2 M 540 (1877), distinguished in Boyd v. Platner, 5 M 226, 2 P 346 (1884).

AMBIGUITY OF PLEADING

Waiver After Joinder of Issue: After joinder of issue there is considered to be a waiver of any right to object by special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint, on the ground of ambiguity or uncertainty in the allegations of the facts upon which the relief is demanded. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916).

No First Objection Allowed on Appeal: An objection that the complaint is ambiguous and uncertain cannot be urged on appeal where no special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), because of such defects, was interposed in the court below. Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915).

Waiver of Objection: An objection to a complaint on the ground of indefiniteness is waived unless a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on that account is interposed. Keffler v. Wilds, 50 M 387, 146 P 1105 (1915); Billings Realty Co. v. Big Ditch Co., 43 M 251, 115 P 828 (1911).

Incorrect Designation of Parties — Waiver: An inadvertent substitution of the word "defendant" for "plaintiff" in the complaint does not render the pleading insufficient, but subject to special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground of uncertainty, which defect is waived by answering to the merits. Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

Complaint to Be Construed in Favor of Plaintiff: After issue joined, the complaint, though ambiguous in its allegations, should be construed most favorably to the plaintiff, as the defendant waives defects of this character by answering. Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry., 38 M 222, 99 P 837 (1909).

FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Frivolous Claims — The "Justinhoard" Thesis: Plaintiff sued a state government executive branch attorney because the attorney had represented four state Supreme Court Justices in another action in which plaintiff sued the Justices. Plaintiff claimed the attorney was guilty of conspiracy, improper official action, and abuse of the principle of "justinhoard" (a principle of justice apparently developed by and unique to plaintiff). The court found the complaint and appeal from its dismissal fruitless, weightless, needless, and senseless, stating that the cause is another of a series of proceedings by plaintiff in the state and federal courts in which he has imputed incompetence, bias, and conspiracy to judges and parties involved in his court actions, and has subjected the judicial process to denigration. The appeal was dismissed. Lussy v. Young, 215 M 50, 695 P2d 455, 42 St. Rep. 173 (1985).

Default Judgment — Deficiency Alleged — Allegations Admitted: The sufficiency of a complaint may be raised for the first time on appeal. However, where it is so raised, every reasonable inference will be drawn from the facts stated necessary to uphold the pleading. For the purpose of testing the sufficiency of the complaint where defendant suffered entry of default judgment, all of the allegations therein must be considered as admitted. Calkins v. Smith, 106 M 453, 78 P2d 74 (1938).

Objection Never Waived: The objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is never waived. Hand v. Heslet, 81 M 68, 261 P 609 (1927); Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 38 M 177, 99 P 298 (1908); Parker v. Bond, 5 M 1, 1 P 209 (1883).

Action on Appeal Bond — Action Destroyed by Defective Complaint: Where official bond was conditioned on defendant's taking an appeal to Supreme Court, the right to recover thereon was entirely destroyed where plaintiff in an action on the bond affirmatively averred such appeal was in fact taken, and such defects, going to sufficiency of complaint to state cause of action, were not cured by findings of court. USF&G Co. v. Whittaker, 8 F2d 455 (9th Cir. 1925).

Omission From Complaint — Supplied in Answer: Where defendant, upon the assumption that a recital in the caption of the complaint that defendant was doing business under a certain firm name and style supplied a necessary allegation, treated it as such in answering, he supplied the omission of an affirmative allegation in the complaint, and was in no position on appeal to urge error. NW. Hardware & Steel Co. v. Winnett, 67 M 545, 216 P 568 (1923).

First Objection Allowed on Appeal — Reversal for Defendant: The sufficiency of a complaint may be questioned for the first time on appeal and if found fatally defective a judgment rendered thereon for the plaintiff will be reversed. Ellinghouse v. Ajax Livestock Co., 51 M 275, 152 P 481 (1915), distinguished in Dickason v. Dickason, 84 M 52, 274 P 145 (1929); Cole v. Helena Light & Ry., 49 M 443, 143 P 974 (1914); Shober v. Blackford, 46 M 194, 127 P 329 (1912); Tracy v. Harmon, 17 M 465, 43 P 500 (1896); Foster v. Wilson, 5 M 53, 2 P 310 (1883).

Inference of Sufficiency of Complaint for Plaintiff: Though the sufficiency of a complaint may be questioned for the first time on appeal and if found fatally defective a judgment rendered thereon for the plaintiff will be reversed, every reasonable deduction will be drawn from the facts stated in order to uphold the judgment. Ellinghouse v. Ajax Livestock Co., 51 M 275, 152 P 481 (1915), distinguished in Dickason v. Dickason, 84 M 52, 274 P 145 (1929).

When Complaint Sufficient on Appeal: A complaint will be held sufficient, if attacked for the first time on appeal, if the defect made the basis of the objection is not a matter going to the root of the cause of action, but is such as might have been remedied by an amendment. Ellinghouse v. Ajax Livestock Co., 51 M 275, 152 P 481 (1915), distinguished in Dickason v. Dickason, 84 M 52, 274 P 145 (1929).

Failure to State a Claim Not Cured by Judgment: The omission to state in a complaint facts essential to make out a cause of action is not cured by the decision and judgment, and the question of its sufficiency may be presented at any time during the progress of the trial, even in the Supreme Court for the first time. Badovinac v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 454, 104 P 543 (1909); Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 M 181, 88 P 796 (1907); Wyman v. Jensen, 26 M 227, 67 P 114 (1902); Whiteside v. Lebcher, 7 M 473, 17 P 548 (1888).

Deficient Complaint Not Aided by Reply — Time for Objection: A complaint, in an action to determine an adverse claim in patent proceedings in the matter of mining property, defective in omitting to allege that an adverse claim has been filed in the land office within 60 days after application for patent, is not aided by allegations in the reply. The sufficiency of the complaint to support the judgment may be raised at any time during the progress of the case. Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 M 181, 88 P 796 (1907).

First Objection Allowed on Appeal: The objection that the complaint does not support the judgment can be raised in the appellate court for the first time on appeal from the judgment. Quirk v. Clark, 7 M 31, 14 P 669 (1887); Foster v. Wilson, 5 M 53, 2 P 310 (1883); Parker v. Bond, 5 M 1, 1 P 209 (1883); Territory v. Virginia Road Co., 2 M 96 (1874).

NONJOINDER OF PARTIES

Failure of Defect to Appear in Complaint — How Objection Taken: Generally, any defect in parties must be taken advantage of by special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or else it is considered waived, or if the defect of parties does not appear on the face of the complaint then by motion for nonsuit at the trial. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Misjoinder Discovered by Defendant — Amendment of Answer Improperly Denied: In view of the authority lodged in the District Court to order additional parties brought into court whenever necessary, where attorney discovered after cause set for trial that defendant company's operations and affairs had been placed in the hands of trustees in bankruptcy necessitating bringing action against the trustees, there was no waiver of the defect in parties by failure to demur (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed), and court abused its discretion in denying petition to amend its answer. State ex rel. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. District Court, 105 M 396, 73 P2d 204 (1937).

Defect Upon Face of Complaint — How Objection Made: Where a defect of parties appears on the face of the complaint, it must be taken advantage of by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Church v. Zywert, 58 M 102, 190 P 291 (1920).

Nonjoinder of Business Partners — Waiver of Objection: Where A brought an action against B as the surviving partner of the firm of B and C, which firm was composed of B, C, and D, but the answer of B did not set forth that D was a partner, or that there was a nonjoinder of parties, and judgment was entered against B alone, B waived the defect of parties by failing to take advantage of it by demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer. Parchen v. Peck, 2 M 567 (1877).

JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT MATTER

Analysis for Jurisdiction of District Court Over Tribal Member and Tribal Property: The correct analysis in both regulatory and adjudicatory actions involving tribal members or lands is whether the exercise of jurisdiction by a state court or regulatory body is preempted by federal law or, if not, whether it infringes on tribal self-government. If either element is met, a state may not assume civil jurisdiction or take regulatory action over Indian people or their territories within the boundaries of their reservations. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

No Subject Matter Jurisdiction for District Court in Probate for Tribal Member — Jurisdiction Presumptively With Tribal Court — Proceedings Before District Court Void: The District Court erred when it assumed subject matter jurisdiction over the probate of an enrolled Blackfeet Tribal member's estate when all of the decedent's estate property was located within the exterior boundaries of the Blackfeet Reservation. The Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear and held that civil jurisdiction over non-Indians and Indians on reservation lands presumptively lies in the tribal court. Absent express congressional limitation, the tribe maintained sovereign power and exclusive jurisdiction over the probate of the decedent. A state court has an independent obligation to determine whether it has jurisdiction in a case involving an Indian person and Indian Country. The court declared void the 7 years of proceedings before the District Court with reference to the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

Failure to Raise Legality of Sentence on Direct Appeal — Postconviction Consideration Barred: Osborne was convicted of a fourth DUI in 1999, and when charged with felony DUI in 2003, the state sought to have Osborne declared a persistent felony offender. The District Court obliged, and Osborne was declared a persistent felony offender and sentenced to 10 years in prison with 5 years suspended. Osborne did not appeal the sentence directly, but filed a petition for postconviction relief, asserting that the sentence was not legal. The petition was denied, and Osborne appealed. The state argued that the Supreme Court was procedurally barred under 46-21-105 from considering the petition because the legal challenge to the sentence could have been raised on direct appeal. Osborne asserted that because the state did not raise the procedural bar issue in District Court, that argument was waived. Although the Supreme Court as a rule does not consider issues raised for the first time on appeal, this general rule does not preclude consideration of jurisdictional questions raised for the first time on appeal. The procedural bar is jurisdictional, so the court considered the state's argument, concluding that lack of subject matter jurisdiction may not be waived and that 46-21-105 represents a jurisdictional limit on courts' ability to entertain and decide petitions for postconviction relief and effectively prohibits courts from exercising jurisdiction over grounds for relief that could have been raised on direct appeal. Thus, Osborne's failure to challenge the legality of the sentence on direct appeal precluded consideration in a postconviction petition. St. v. Osborne, 2005 MT 264, 329 M 95, 124 P3d 1085 (2005).

State Remedy and State Court Enforcement of Contract Wages Required by Federal Davis-Bacon Act: The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction of state contract law claims against a contractor and subcontractors by workers hired to build housing on Malmstrom Air Force base under a contract between the contractor and the Air Force. The workers claimed that they were not paid the prevailing wages required by the federal Davis-Bacon Act. The defendants claimed that there was no private right of action and that the workers had not exhausted their federal administrative remedies. The evidence showed that the workers extensively used the administrative remedies, taking all proper steps to attempt to administratively resolve the dispute. The workers were not seeking to enforce the Davis-Bacon Act labor standards; they sought to enforce a contract that includes wages required by the Act, a subtle but important distinction. The Act does not preempt the workers' right to a state enforcement action, using state remedies, under the facts of this case. That right is in keeping with Montana's longstanding policy and constitutional guarantee in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., of citizens' access to Montana courts when they are aggrieved. As third-party beneficiaries of the contract, the workers have the right to sue in state court to enforce the contract under state law. Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

Alleged New Evidence Not Extending Statutory Time Bar for Postconviction Relief: Abe was found guilty of accountability for deliberate homicide and was sentenced to 60 years in prison. One year and 14 days after the deadline, Abe filed a petition for postconviction relief on grounds of newly discovered evidence. Allegedly, two jurors from Abe's trial sat in on the trial of Abe's coconspirator and heard two of the state's witnesses testify differently than they did in Abe's trial. The Supreme Court applied the factors to be considered when a District Court evaluates a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence as set out in St. v. Sullivan, 285 M 235, 948 P2d 215 (1997) (see also St. v. Greeno, 135 M 580, 342 P2d 1052 (1959)), including the requirement that the evidence must have come to the knowledge of the defendant since trial and the requirement that the evidence must not be such as will tend only to impeach the character or credit of a witness. Here, Abe's counsel knew about the alleged discrepancies after Abe's trial but prior to Abe's appeal, so the discrepancies in testimony could have been raised on direct appeal. Further, the petition for postconviction relief alleged that the discrepancies undermined the credibility of the witnesses but did not establish that Abe did not engage in the criminal conduct for which he was convicted. Thus, the District Court concluded, and the Supreme Court agreed, that the alleged new evidence did not serve to extend the statutory bar for filing a petition for postconviction relief beyond the 1-year period in 46-21-102. Although Abe correctly pointed out that the state did not raise the issue of the statutory bar in District Court and that the District Court did not rule on the issue, the general rule that the Supreme Court will not address issues raised for the first time on appeal did not apply in this case because that rule does not apply when the issue is jurisdictional. The 1-year statute of limitations for postconviction relief is a jurisdictional limit, and lack of subject matter jurisdiction may be raised at any time under this rule. Dismissal of Abe's petition for postconviction relief was affirmed as procedurally barred. St. v. Abe, 2001 MT 260, 307 M 233, 37 P3d 77 (2001).

Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Tribe — Motion for Relief From Judgment Not Subject to Time Constraints: After protracted litigation involving a tribal security interest in cows of tribal members, the Blackfeet Tribe filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., based upon a contention that the District Court lacked jurisdiction. No response to the motion was ever made by the District Court. Eighteen months later, the Blackfeet Tribe then filed a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and the District Court granted the motion approximately 6 years later. The Supreme Court held that even though under normal circumstances the motion was considered denied after 45 days and the District Court would then have lost jurisdiction, the ability of a party to invoke the rules concerning subject matter jurisdiction transcend normal procedural consideration. Thus, the Blackfeet Tribe's motion to dismiss was not subject to time constraints. The fact that it was filed 18 months after judgment was entered and the fact that the District Court took 6 years to rule on the motion did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction. Wippert v. The Blackfeet Tribe, 260 M 93, 859 P2d 420, 50 St. Rep. 973 (1993), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729. See also In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 M 399, 956 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 147 (1998), overruled in In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121.

Question of Abandonment Not Within Subject Matter Jurisdiction Regarding Modification: Husband was served a petition for adoption of his children by wife's new husband. The petition alleged abandonment. The District Court improperly considered the question of abandonment during the postdissolution hearing, which centered around the issues of visitation and unpaid child support. The question was outside the scope of issues included within the original dissolution decree, was to be decided by the court hearing the adoption proceedings, and should have been dismissed under subsection (3) of this rule. In re Marriage of Callahan, 233 M 465, 762 P2d 205, 45 St. Rep. 1639 (1988).

Tort Suits Against Production Credit Associations — Applicability of Federal Tort Claims Act: The District Court properly dismissed a tort claim against a production credit association (PCA) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. A PCA is properly considered an instrumentality under 12 U.S.C. 2091, and tort claims against instrumentalities acting primarily as agents of the United States must be pursued under the Federal Tort Claims Act according to 28 U.S.C. 2679. Tooke v. Miles City Prod. Credit Ass'n, 234 M 387, 763 P2d 1111, 45 St. Rep. 641 (1988), citing In re Sparkman, 703 F2d 1097 (9th Cir. 1983).

Jurisdiction — Cannot Be Obtained by Consent: Objection to lack of jurisdiction over subject matter may be raised at any time. A court lacking jurisdiction cannot acquire it by consent of parties. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972), followed in In re Marriage of Cox, 226 M 176, 736 P2d 97, 44 St. Rep. 567 (1987).

Appeal of Justice Court Judgment — Improper Service of Notice of Appeal Raised for First Time in Supreme Court: The fact that the notice of appeal from a Justice's Court to the District Court was served before filing may be urged as a ground for dismissal of the appeal in the Supreme Court, although the point was not raised in the District Court; as the question involves the jurisdiction of the District Court to entertain the appeal, it may be raised at any time. McCauley v. Jones, 35 M 32, 88 P 572 (1907).

Issue First Raised on Appeal: The question of jurisdiction may be raised for the first time in the Supreme Court. McCauley v. Jones, 35 M 32, 88 P 572 (1907); Oppenheimer v. Regan, 32 M 110, 79 P 695 (1905).

Former Rule 13(a). Compulsory counterclaims

General 704
Same Contract or Transaction 705

GENERAL

Nonjudicial Foreclosure — No Requirement to Plead as Compulsory Counterclaim: The District Court correctly ruled that a party was not required to assert a nonjudicial foreclosure as a mandatory counterclaim under former Rule 13, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because the Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply to nonjudicial proceedings. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Court, 2011 MT 115, 360 Mont. 437, 254 P.3d 566.

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Forgery Counterclaim Not Permitted: In a dispute over the charges for the care and training of horses, the parties agreed that Watkins would accept $5,000 for his services. The Williamses gave Watkins two checks for $2,500, but they stopped payment on the second check and refused to tender the rest of the money on the basis that one of the horses had been mistreated. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Watkins for $20,191 for services. The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in excluding evidence that Watkins had sold their horse trailer and forged the bill of sale. The Supreme Court held that the Williamses' pleadings did not assert a counterclaim for forgery and that they did not attempt at any time to amend the pleadings to reflect the forgery claim. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Failure to Counterclaim as Bar of Later Action:

Affirmative defenses constituting compulsory counterclaims in an initial action that stated claims of creditor misconduct arose from the same transaction alleged in the original complaint, and therefore a later action on the same issues was barred by res judicata. First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987), followed in Zimmerman v. Connor, 1998 MT 131, 289 M 148, 958 P2d 1195, 55 St. Rep. 521 (1998).

Home owner's failure to plead design or construction defect as a defense or counterclaim in a prior suit by his builder to recover contract amount for the construction of a residence bars the home owner from later bringing action against the builder based on such defect. Such a claim is a compulsory counterclaim under this rule. The purposes of the compulsory counterclaim rule are to insure that only one judicial proceeding is required to settle all those matters determinable by the facts or law and to bring all logically related claims into a single litigation. Julian v. Mattson, 219 M 145, 710 P2d 707, 42 St. Rep. 1908 (1985), followed in Springs v. First Nat'l Bank of Cut Bank, 647 F. Supp. 1394, 43 St. Rep. 2397 (1986), Troglia v. Bartoletti, 266 M 240, 879 P2d 1169, 51 St. Rep. 783 (1994), and Zimmerman v. Connor, 1998 MT 131, 289 M 148, 958 P2d 1195, 55 St. Rep. 521 (1998), and affirmed in 835 F2d 1293 (9th Cir. 1988).

The purpose of the statute permitting the filing of a counterclaim is to enable and require the parties to adjust, in one action, their differences growing out of any given transaction. Hence where defendant fails to set up a counterclaim he may have, he is thereafter barred from maintaining an action thereon against the plaintiff. Friedrichsen v. Cobb, 84 M 238, 275 P 267 (1929).

Compulsory Counterclaims Res Judicata: When an original complaint was dismissed with prejudice, all preexisting claims between the parties were concluded; therefore, compulsory counterclaims arising out of the original transaction were res judicata on appeal. Robinson v. First Sec. Bank of Big Timber, 224 M 138, 728 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 2080 (1986).

Failure to Plead Compulsory Counterclaim in Foreign Jurisdiction — Barred in Montana in Proceeding to Enforce Foreign Judgment: Where appellant was represented by counsel in a proceeding in Florida, he could not, in an action in Montana to collect money from that judgment, prevail on a counterclaim that as a matter of law was a compulsory counterclaim in the original Florida action since Florida has rules of civil procedure similar to Montana's. O'Neal, Booth & Wilkes, P.A. v. Andrews, 219 M 496, 712 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 120 (1986).

Responsive Pleading Including Cross-Complaint, Counterclaim, and Third-Party Complaints — Motion to Strike Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed an action on four promissory notes on June 9, 1978, and defendant filed an amended answer on November 10, 1980, more than 20 days after it was served. The District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike the amended answer. After a responsive pleading is served or 20 days after an original pleading is served, a party may amend his pleading only by leave of court or written consent of the adverse party. Here, neither was obtained, and because the cross-complaint, counterclaim, and third-party claim were not severed from the amended answer, they were properly treated as part of that answer and properly dismissed along with the amended answer. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

Same Transaction or Occurrence — Counterclaim's Effect on Right to Jury Trial: Counterclaim was not compulsory and accordingly court did not err in denying defendant's request for a jury trial. Also, interposition of a legal issue in an equitable action gives the defendant no right to a jury trial of the case generally or of the issue raised by the counterclaim. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Claim for Damages in Action for Claim and Delivery Not as Counterclaim: A defendant's claim for damages from the wrongful seizure and detention of property, in an action of claim and delivery, is not a counterclaim. Hammond v. Thompson, 54 M 609, 173 P 229 (1918).

Eminent Domain Proceedings — Damages Not Counterclaim: In condemnation proceedings the defendant is not required to set up his claims for damages, either special or general, and they cannot be pleaded by way of counterclaim. Therefore, plaintiff cannot be heard to complain that, by defendant's failure to plead them, it had no notice of their character and amount, and was deprived of an opportunity to controvert them. Yellowstone Park R.R. v. Bridger Coal Co., 34 M 545, 87 P 963 (1906).

Action as Between Same Parties — Successor to Defendant: The action is between the same parties, within the meaning of the rules pertaining to counterclaims, when it appears from the complaint that the defendant in the action is the successor in interest of the defendant in a former action. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 28 M 451, 72 P 865 (1903).

SAME CONTRACT OR TRANSACTION

Applicability of Rule 13(a) to Pleading Replying to Counterclaim: Plaintiff filed a breach of contract action related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store. While that case was pending, plaintiff filed another action alleging that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment. The parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, and defendant moved for summary judgment for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted and contended that the second case was barred by Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., because it was a compulsory counterclaim that should have been raised in the first action. Plaintiff moved to consolidate the cases. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and held that the consolidation motion was mooted by dismissal of the action. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., a reply to a counterclaim is a pleading, triggering the need for the replying party to assert all counterclaims that arise out of the same transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the initial counterclaim. By not raising the claim, a party risks that Rule 13, M.R.Civ.P., will bar the claim in a subsequent action. Plaintiff failed to raise any counterclaims in its response to defendant's counterclaims and the second action was barred. The District Court did not err in considering the motion to consolidate without converting the motion to one for summary judgment prior to granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 287, 339 M 452, 171 P3d 690 (2007), distinguishing Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Judgment Against "State" Binding Against Two Agencies — Retirement Benefits Setoff Barred as Compulsory Counterclaim: During a longstanding dispute by firefighters employed by the Montana Air National Guard and involving several separate lawsuits, the plaintiff was fired and began receiving retirement benefits. The plaintiff sued "the State" for reinstatement of employment, lost wages, employment benefits during the period of termination, liquidated damages, and attorney fees and costs. After other firefighters' suits were decided in the firefighters' favor, the plaintiff settled with the Department of Military Affairs (DMA) for reinstatement, lost wages, lost annual leave and sick leave benefits, retirement contributions that the DMA would have made during the termination period, and attorney fees and costs of suit. After settlement, the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) claimed that it was entitled to repayment of the retirement benefits that the plaintiff had been paid before reinstatement. The DMA and PERS agreed to offset the settlement damages by the retirement amount. The Supreme Court held that the state's setoff claim was barred as a compulsory counterclaim, that both agencies were bound by the DMA's settlement agreement because they were the same party collectively known as the "State of Montana", and that the plaintiff was entitled to the full settlement amount without setoff. Peters v. St., 285 M 345, 948 P2d 250, 54 St. Rep. 1185 (1997).

Use of Damage Judgments to Offset Damages Against Assignor Arising From Breach of Wellhead Purchase Contracts: First Security Bank filed a complaint in which it sought to recover amounts allegedly owed by Northern Montana Gas Company (Northern) to Montana Pacific Oil & Gas Company (MOPOG) based on wellhead purchase contracts that Northern allegedly breached. Northern's answer included defenses under 27-1-502, claiming a right to offset against any recovery obtained by the bank the amount of judgments entered in its favor against First Security Bank's assignor, MOPOG, and defenses under 27-1-503, claiming that its right to offset could not be defeated when MOPOG assigned its claim to the bank and when that claim was ultimately asserted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). The trial court concluded that the FDIC, as the bank's receiver, was entitled to damages and that none of the judgments could be set off against FDIC. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that when read in the context of 27-1-502, "cross-demands" necessarily refers to claims between the parties and that 27-1-502 does not limit setoff to claims arising out of the same transaction, but refers only to counterclaims that could have been set up in the same action. Because at the time that MOPOG assigned its rights to First Security its obligation already existed and because Northern was entitled to assert that obligation as a basis for setoff, pursuant to 27-1-503, Northern's right survived the assignment. The District Court relied on the general rule that in the absence of an express assumption of liability, an assignee is not liable for an assignor's obligation. However, that holding fails to recognize the difference between a counterclaim for affirmative relief and a defense that simply seeks to reduce the plaintiff's recovery dollar-for-dollar based on a defense that could have been asserted against the assignor. Pursuant to Rules 13(b) and 13(c), M.R.Civ.P., any claim that Northern had against MOPOG could have been permissibly set up as a counterclaim if MOPOG had sued Northern for breach of the wellhead purchase contracts. Therefore, Northern's right to offset survived the assignment by MOPOG to the bank. Although a setoff requires mutuality, all mutuality requires is that the defendant have a right to assert the claim against the plaintiff or its assignor that forms the basis for setoff. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of damages to FDIC and reversed the District Court, holding that judgments could not be used to setoff the bank's damage award because pursuant to 27-1-502, Northern had a right to offset those amounts against any claim by MOPOG and pursuant to 27-1-503, the right to offset that amount survived the assignment by MOPOG of its rights to First Security Bank. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. N. Mont. Gas Co., 274 M 371, 908 P2d 1357, 52 St. Rep. 1276 (1995).

Compulsory Counterclaim to Be Pleaded Regardless of Legal or Equitable Nature of Plaintiff's Suit: The defendant, in a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce the covenants on land sold to the defendant, did not counterclaim that fraud induced him to buy the property. The defendant then initiated a second suit, claiming fraud and misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part. The Supreme Court held that a fraud claim constituted a compulsory counterclaim required to be raised in the first case. The court also held that it made no difference as to the compulsory nature of a counterclaim when the claim was legal in nature and the counterclaim was equitable in nature. Turtainen v. Poulsen, 243 M 355, 792 P2d 1089, 47 St. Rep. 1028 (1990), followed in Zimmerman v. Connor, 1998 MT 131, 289 M 148, 958 P2d 1195, 55 St. Rep. 521 (1998).

Mandatory Pleading of Counterclaim: Plaintiff brought suit alleging that the parties had executed a construction contract on a cost-plus basis, that plaintiffs had performed the work under the contract, and that defendant had failed to pay the final $6,832.33 owed. Defendant filed an answer generally denying all allegations. At trial, defendant attempted to introduce evidence of failure to correct and alleged defective performance. The District Court rejected the evidence because it appeared to be an attempt to raise a counterclaim that had not been pleaded. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that because defendant did not plead or otherwise give notice of his defects theory prior to trial, it was unclear whether he was attempting to prove failure of a condition precedent or was seeking recoupment. In either case, the District Court had properly excluded the evidence, because Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires that a party plead a counterclaim which arises out of the same transaction. Failure to follow the pleading procedures designed to give notice to the opposing party and narrow the issues for trial precluded the introduction of the evidence. Mattson v. Julian, 209 M 48, 678 P2d 654, 41 St. Rep. 544 (1984).

Action to Foreclose Mortgage — Fraud as Proper Counterclaim: In an action to foreclose a mortgage on roominghouse furniture and furnishings, a counterclaim for damages resulting from alleged fraudulent representations relating to the character of the house, the rentals paid by the tenants, etc., was properly pleadable as such, as arising out of the contract sued upon by plaintiff. Griffiths v. Thrasher, 95 M 210, 26 P2d 995 (1933).

Defining "Transaction" — Court Not Bound to Alleged Facts: In determining whether a counterclaim arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, the court is not limited to the facts alleged in the complaint but may look to all the facts and circumstances out of which the injury complained of by plaintiff arose. Griffiths v. Thrasher, 95 M 210, 26 P2d 995 (1933); Mulcahy v. Duggan, 67 M 9, 214 P 1106 (1923).

Tort Counterclaim Pleaded in Contract Action: A counterclaim sounding in tort may be pleaded as against a demand upon contract, provided it arises out of the transaction which gave rise to plaintiff's cause of action. Mulcahy v. Duggan, 67 M 9, 214 P 1106 (1923); Scott v. Waggoner, 48 M 536, 139 P 454 (1914).

"Transaction" Defined: "Transaction" is not synonymous with "contract". It is broader than "contract", and broader than "tort", although it may include either or both. It is "that combination of acts and events, circumstances, and defaults, which, viewed in one aspect, results in the plaintiff's right of action, and viewed in another aspect, results in the defendant's right of action". It "applies to any dealings of the parties resulting in wrong, without regard to whether the wrong be done by violence, neglect, or breach of contract". Scott v. Waggoner, 48 M 536, 139 P 454 (1914), followed in Julian v. Mattson, 219 M 145, 710 P2d 707, 42 St. Rep. 1908 (1985).

Same Transaction to Appear From Face of Complaint: To constitute a counterclaim, a failure to plead which will thereafter bar an action thereon, it must appear affirmatively from the pleadings that the cause of action asserted is one "arising out of the contract or transaction, set forth in the complaint, as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action". Kaufman v. Cooper, 39 M 146, 101 P 969 (1909).

The Williamses gave Watkins two checks for $2,500, but they stopped payment on the second check and refused to tender the rest of the money on the basis that one of the horses had been mistreated. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Watkins for $20,191 for services. The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in excluding evidence that Watkins had sold their horse trailer and forged the bill of sale. The Supreme Court held that the Williamses' pleadings did not assert a counterclaim for forgery and that they did not attempt at any time to amend the pleadings to reflect the forgery claim. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Malicious Prosecution Counterclaim — Allowed: The defendant in a personal injury case filed a counterclaim against the plaintiffs, alleging that their negligence was the cause of the automobile accident involving the parties. Subsequently, in his deposition, the defendant admitted that he had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, that he had been driving negligently, and that the plaintiffs had not been negligent. The plaintiffs sought summary judgment to dismiss the defendant's counterclaims, but prior to the hearing, the defendant voluntarily dismissed his counterclaims. The lower court ruled that the plaintiffs could not seek damages for malicious prosecution because the court believed that the defendant's dismissal of his counterclaims was part of the overall settlement and that therefore there had not been a termination of a proceeding in favor of the plaintiffs, one of the required elements of malicious prosecution claims. The Supreme Court, in a case of first impression, held that a claim resolved by settlement rather than by judgment did constitute a termination in favor of the plaintiffs. O'Fallon v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 260 M 233, 859 P2d 1008, 50 St. Rep. 1022 (1993).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Malicious Prosecution as Counterclaim: In this case, which was remanded because summary judgment was improperly granted, defendant's counterclaim for malicious prosecution was dismissed. An action for malicious prosecution may not be asserted by way of cross-complaint or counterclaim in the original proceeding prior to its termination, since it is essential that the original proceeding has been previously terminated in favor of the party bringing the malicious prosecution action. Thus, a counterclaim purporting to set forth the cause of action in malicious prosecution was properly dismissed as premature. First Trust Co. of Mont. v. McKenna, 188 M 534, 614 P2d 1027 (1980).

Malicious Prosecution Counterclaim: Bollinger v. Jarrett, 146 M 355, 406 P2d 834 (1965), states that malicious prosecution may not be the subject of a counterclaim. That opinion does not explain that such rule applies only when the counterclaim is made during the original proceeding. A counterclaim for malicious prosecution is not premature if the claim is based on a previously terminated proceeding (e.g., administrative proceeding). McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979).

Superseded Contract: A counterclaim must be in existence and matured at the time of the commencement of the action in which it is pleaded. Therefore, where a counterclaim was based upon a contract which had been superseded by a subsequent one, the court properly excluded testimony offered in support of it. Dick v. King, 73 M 456, 236 P 1093 (1925).

Copartnership — No Counterclaim by One Partner: In an action against an individual defendant to recover the price of livestock sold to him, a counterclaim for services rendered to plaintiff by a copartnership of which defendant was a member could not be set up even though the other partner consented thereto. Heinrich v. Kirby, 64 M 1, 208 P 897 (1922).

Sale of Goods — Chattel Mortgage: Where a chattel mortgage has been given to secure the unpaid purchase money for an automobile, but on the same day a new arrangement is made between the seller and purchaser, whereby the purchaser is to run the machine for hire, and the buyer afterward sues the seller for seizing the machine and converting it to his own use, the defendant may counterclaim for the balance of the purchase price. Kinsman v. Stanhope, 50 M 41, 144 P 1083 (1914).

Landlord and Tenant — Conversion: In an action by a landlord for rent due under a written lease and for damages for waste committed on the premises, it is proper for the defendant to interpose a counterclaim for the conversion of personal property placed by him on the premises. Scott v. Waggoner, 48 M 536, 139 P 454 (1914).

Assignee of Contract: A demand against the assignor of a nonnegotiable contract cannot be set off against the assignee, unless due and payable when the assignment was made. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905); Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

Foreclosure of Contractors' Lien: Orders on the property owner to laborers, given by the contractor for work done in the removal of buildings, are properly pleaded as counterclaims in an action by the contractor or his assignees to foreclose a lien for the contract price of such removal. Boucher v. Powers, 29 M 342, 74 P 942 (1904).

SUFFICIENCY OF COUNTERCLAIM

Counterclaim for Breach of Warranty Properly Denied — Failure to Prove Prima Facie Case: In an action to collect the purchase price of tires purchased on credit, the defendant (buyer) filed a counterclaim for breach of warranty against the plaintiff (seller). The defendant's counterclaim was properly denied because the defendant had failed to prove a prima facie case. Defendant appealed, alleging that there was no proof of some of the purchases. The Supreme Court said that an open account between the seller and buyer can be proved by evidence that the seller's records showed that the goods were sold, that invoices had been sent to the buyer who failed to object to them, and that the seller's records are accurate. Here the buyer's rebuttal testimony was indefinite, and the credibility of the buyer's witnesses was a question for the District Court. No breach of warranty was proven; only the testimony of the buyer was given and no solid evidence, such as any tires, records of the amount of use of the tires, or maintenance records, was produced. This, with findings of possible alternative causes of the problems with the tires, was a sufficient record to support the finding that breach of warranty was not proved by sufficient evidence. Defendant therefore was liable for the price of the tires. D & K Distrib. v. Ford, 189 M 505, 616 P2d 1097, 37 St. Rep. 1693 (1980).

Requirements for Valid Counterclaim: A counterclaim must contain a statement of such facts as would be sufficient in a complaint, must be in existence and matured at the time of the commencement of the action, and must be pleaded as such. If it is not so pleaded, evidence tending to establish it is inadmissible. Lappin v. Martin, 71 M 233, 228 P 763 (1924).

Counterclaim Must State Cause of Action: Matter in an answer is not a counterclaim, unless it states a cause of action, complete within itself, and tends in some way to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery. Hillman v. Luzon Cafe Co., 49 M 180, 142 P 641 (1914).

Defense Distinguished: An answer, in an action of replevin, to the effect that the defendant took possession of the chattels as the assignee of one who had been in possession thereof for a long time, that plaintiff knowingly allowed the defendant to sell the same, and that by reason thereof plaintiff was estopped from maintaining the action, does not state a counterclaim as the same is defined in this section. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898).

Former Rule 13(c). Counterclaim exceeding opposing claim

Use of Damage Judgments to Offset Damages Against Assignor Arising From Breach of Wellhead Purchase Contracts: First Security Bank filed a complaint in which it sought to recover amounts allegedly owed by Northern Montana Gas Company (Northern) to Montana Pacific Oil & Gas Company (MOPOG) based on wellhead purchase contracts that Northern allegedly breached. Northern's answer included defenses under 27-1-502, claiming a right to offset against any recovery obtained by the bank the amount of judgments entered in its favor against First Security Bank's assignor, MOPOG, and defenses under 27-1-503, claiming that its right to offset could not be defeated when MOPOG assigned its claim to the bank and when that claim was ultimately asserted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). The trial court concluded that the FDIC, as the bank's receiver, was entitled to damages and that none of the judgments could be set off against FDIC. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that when read in the context of 27-1-502, "cross-demands" necessarily refers to claims between the parties and that 27-1-502 does not limit setoff to claims arising out of the same transaction, but refers only to counterclaims that could have been set up in the same action. Because at the time that MOPOG assigned its rights to First Security its obligation already existed and because Northern was entitled to assert that obligation as a basis for setoff, pursuant to 27-1-503, Northern's right survived the assignment. The District Court relied on the general rule that in the absence of an express assumption of liability, an assignee is not liable for an assignor's obligation. However, that holding fails to recognize the difference between a counterclaim for affirmative relief and a defense that simply seeks to reduce the plaintiff's recovery dollar-for-dollar based on a defense that could have been asserted against the assignor. Pursuant to Rule 13(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, any claim that Northern had against MOPOG could have been permissibly set up as a counterclaim if MOPOG had sued Northern for breach of the wellhead purchase contracts. Therefore, Northern's right to offset survived the assignment by MOPOG to the bank. Although a setoff requires mutuality, all mutuality requires is that the defendant have a right to assert the claim against the plaintiff or its assignor that forms the basis for setoff. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of damages to FDIC and reversed the District Court, holding that judgments could not be used to setoff the bank's damage award because pursuant to 27-1-502, Northern had a right to offset those amounts against any claim by MOPOG and pursuant to 27-1-503, the right to offset that amount survived the assignment by MOPOG of its rights to First Security Bank. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. N. Mont. Gas Co., 274 M 371, 908 P2d 1357, 52 St. Rep. 1276 (1995).

Money Judgment — Claim for Possession: A claim for a money judgment, whether arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint or not, tended in no way to defeat or diminish the plaintiff's right of recovery of the possession of property wrongfully taken. Osmers v. Furey, 32 M 581, 81 P 345 (1905).

Former Rule 13(d). Counterclaim against the state

Malicious Prosecution as Counterclaim: In this case, which was remanded because summary judgment was improperly granted, defendant's counterclaim for malicious prosecution was dismissed. An action for malicious prosecution may not be asserted by way of cross-complaint or counterclaim in the original proceeding prior to its termination, since it is essential that the original proceeding has been previously terminated in favor of the party bringing the malicious prosecution action. Thus, a counterclaim purporting to set forth the cause of action in malicious prosecution was properly dismissed as premature. First Trust Co. of Mont. v. McKenna, 188 M 534, 614 P2d 1027 (1980).

Malicious Prosecution Counterclaim: Bollinger v. Jarrett, 146 M 355, 406 P2d 834 (1965) states that malicious prosecution may not be the subject of a counterclaim. That opinion does not explain that such rule applies only when the counterclaim is made during the original proceeding. A counterclaim for malicious prosecution is not premature if the claim is based on a previously terminated proceeding (e.g., administrative proceeding). McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979).

Former Rule 13(f). Omitted counterclaim

No Leave to Amend Granted After Final Judgment: Kincheloes sued the defendants over a royalty interest and were granted summary judgment in District Court, which was reversed on appeal. Kincheloes then moved to amend their pleading to allege a new theory of recovery, and the motion was denied. The Supreme Court noted that the litigation had gone on for nearly 14 years, that if the motion had been granted, it would mean that there was no finality to the case, and that the plaintiffs cannot now include a theory that they neglected with no good reason to include in their original pleading. Because there was no showing to the District Court as to why the new theory was omitted, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 254 M 474, 839 P2d 93, 49 St. Rep. 828 (1992), followed, with regard to failure to obtain leave of court, in Edgewater Townhouse Homeowner's Ass'n v. Holtman, 256 M 182, 845 P2d 1224, 50 St. Rep. 10 (1993).

Former Rule 13(g). Cross-claim against coparty

Statute of Limitations on Action for Contribution or Indemnity: A cause of action for contribution or indemnity is distinct from the underlying cause of action, and the time from which the statute of limitations for such a cause of action begins to run is when the underlying claim, judgment, or settlement is paid or discharged. Linder v. Missoula County, 251 M 292, 824 P2d 1004, 49 St. Rep. 26 (1992), citing Schiess v. Bates, 693 P2d 440 (Idaho 1984). See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Co. v. Thompson, 152 M 396, 451 P2d 98 (1969).

Cross-Claim — No Relation Back to Time Complaint Filed: The defendant, Freed, and a party named Egeland were limited partners in a real estate development project. The limited partners had received SID bonds from the city of Cut Bank. Egeland used the bonds to secure his personal trading account with D.A. Davidson. In December 1983, Freed informed D.A. Davidson that Egeland had no authority to make personal use of the bonds. D.A. Davidson responded that it held an interest in the bonds superior to Freed's interest. On January 16, 1985, Freed filed suit against Egeland, and judgment was entered on July 9, 1987, giving all of the limited partnership's interest in the bonds to Freed. On January 22, 1985, Egeland filed a mandamus petition to force the city of Cut Bank to pay interest on the SID bonds. The city answered and petitioned to interplead Freed and D.A. Davidson as parties claiming an interest in the bonds. On March 3, 1987, the District Court issued an order interpleading Freed and D.A. Davidson. On March 16, 1987, Freed filed his responsive pleading, alleged an interest in the bonds superior to any other person, and accused D.A. Davidson of bad faith. The District Court, using December 21, 1983, as the triggering date, applied a 3-year statute of limitations to Freed's bad faith claim and granted D.A. Davidson's motion for summary judgment. Freed argued that his cross-claim related back to the time the complaint was filed, which was within the applicable statute of limitations. The Supreme Court stated that it was adopting the federal rule that a counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim for affirmative relief does not relate back to the date of the original complaint and therefore must comply with the applicable statute of limitations. State ex rel. Egeland v. City Council of Cut Bank, 245 M 484, 803 P2d 609, 47 St. Rep. 2212 (1990).

Motion to Consolidate — Denied: When plaintiff made a valid assignment of his interest in a promissory note and filed a supplemental complaint dropping him as a party plaintiff, the action on the note could not properly be joined with another action to which he was a party. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Res Judicata Inapplicable: The Supreme Court dismissed allegations by appellants that respondents should have asserted their cross-claim to property in a federal foreclosure action or be barred by the doctrine of res judicata. It is discretionary with the party whether to assert his claim as a cross-claim or to reserve it for later independent litigation. Whittaker v. Schreiner, 174 M 232, 570 P2d 299 (1977).

Action by Insurer Not Barred by Insured's Failure to File Cross-Claim: Employer's insurer who paid judgment entered against employer and employee in automobile accident case did not lose its right of indemnity against employee by employer's failure to file cross-claim in accident action. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 152 M 396, 451 P2d 98 (1969).

Cross-Claims Are Not Compulsory: Cross-claims are not compulsory but are discretionary and may be reserved for an independent action. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 152 M 396, 451 P2d 98 (1969).

Failure to Serve Primary Party — No Jurisdiction of Cross-Claim: District Court did not have jurisdiction and power to adjudicate mechanics' liens (now construction liens) of cross complainants, materialmen, where they failed to serve the principal contractor with process. Greene Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Morris, 144 M 234, 395 P2d 252 (1964).

Mandamus Action — Limitation on Cross-Claim: Interveners in a mandamus action are not entitled to maintain their cross-complaint unless that cross-complaint relates to, or depends upon, the duties asserted by the plaintiff against the defendant public officer. Thus, where the plaintiff seeks by mandamus to require the recorder of marks and brands to record a brand in his name as administrator, whether the interveners are the owners of the brand, the animals bearing the brand, and of the proceeds of the sale of animals so branded presents a question which bears no relation to the duty of the general recorder of marks and brands to issue a certificate to the plaintiff. Benolken v. Miracle, 129 M 495, 289 P2d 953 (1955).

Forcible Entry and Detainer: Section 93-3415, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 13(g), M.R.Civ.P.), relating to cross-complaints, was made applicable to proceedings for forcible entry and unlawful detainer by 70-27-109 and 70-27-111. Hutchinson v. Burton, 126 M 279, 247 P2d 987 (1952).

Cross-Complaint — Requisites — Need Not Defeat Complaint: A cross-complaint need not defeat or diminish the relief sought in the action in which it is pleaded, but is sufficient if it relates to the transaction or subject matter thereof, and the relief sought may be distinct from the relief demanded by plaintiff. Jardine Min. Co. v. Bacorn, 113 M 416, 131 P2d 258 (1942).

Foreclosure Action — Subsequent Cross-Claim for Sale of Grain: Cross-complaint can be filed by defendant for price of grain sold after the filing of the complaint in a foreclosure suit. State ex rel. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. District Court, 102 M 371, 58 P2d 491 (1936).

Insufficient Cross-Complaint: A cross-complaint is defective where the pleader runs his affirmative defenses together rather than stating them separately, and where it includes an assigned claim without showing that it arose out of the same transaction on which the complaint is based. Flatt v. Norman, 91 M 543, 11 P2d 798 (1932).

Quiet Title Action — Foreclosure by Cross-Complaint: Defendant in an action by a mortgagor to quiet title may by cross-complaint seek foreclosure of the mortgage held by him on the property. Skillen v. Harris, 85 M 73, 277 P 803 (1929).

After-Acquired Claim Based on Contract: A cross-complaint in an action based on contract is not restricted to a cause or causes of action existing at the time of the commencement of the action. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929), overruled on other grounds in Pioneer Eng'r Works v. McConnell, 113 M 392, 130 P2d 685, 132 P2d 160 (1942).

Substance Determines Cross-Complaint: Whether a pleading is a cross-complaint must be determined from its allegations, not from the designation given it by the pleader, i.e., "a further and separate defense". Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929).

Insufficient Complaint and Counterclaim: In an action for an accounting, it may be that a defendant can, upon pleadings adequate to support a judgment, obtain affirmative relief against a codefendant by filing a pleading in the nature of a counterclaim. This cannot be done where the complaint does not set forth a cause of action, and the defendant's pleading in his own behalf is insufficient to support a judgment. Alywin v. Morley, 41 M 191, 108 P 778 (1910).

Former Rule 13(h). Joinder of additional parties

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Former Rule 14. Third-party practice

No Right to Third-Party Indemnity or Contribution in RICO Action: In a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) action there is no right to indemnification or contribution from a third party. Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986), citing Seminole Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Anthony Tanner, No. 85-1286-Civ-T-13 (M.D. Fla. 1986).

Former Rule 14(a). When defendant may bring in third party Agreement by Parties to Allow Third-Party Complaint — Error in Finding That Motion to Bring in Third Party Not Timely Filed: At a pretrial conference, the parties agreed that plaintiff would not object to allowing O'Neil to file a third-party complaint in an unauthorized practice case even though it was not timely filed within the time prescribed by this rule. Nevertheless, the District Court subsequently dismissed the third-party complaint as untimely. The Supreme Court held that dismissal of the complaint was error because plaintiff had agreed not to pursue any claims under this rule. However, it was not necessary to remand for further proceedings because the District Court later summarily dismissed the third-party complaint on its merits and the Supreme Court affirmed the summary judgment. Mont. Supreme Court Comm'n on Unauthorized Practice of Law v. O'Neil, 2006 MT 284, 334 M 311, 147 P3d 200 (2006).

Liability of Properly Impleaded Insurance Companies Not to Be Relitigated on Subrogation Theory: While making a delivery for his employer, Roach and Smith Distributors, Guiberson parked a delivery truck outside the Warm Springs store, leaving the keys in the ignition. Tintinger, a patient at Warm Springs state hospital, and another patient got in the truck and began to drive it away. Guiberson jumped in the truck and unsuccessfully attempted to persuade Tintinger to stop the truck. Eventually the truck overturned and Guiberson was injured. Guiberson sued Hartford Casualty Insurance, his personal insurer, under an uninsured motorist provision. Hartford joined, as third-party defendants, State Farm, Roach and Smith Distributors' insurer, and the state of Montana. State Farm's policy also contained uninsured motorist coverage. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Guiberson for $600,000, finding Tintinger and the state equally responsible for Guiberson's injuries. The court apportioned the $600,000 equally between Tintinger and the state. Based on the insurance policies, the court further apportioned the recovery of payments for the liabilities of Tintinger between Hartford and State Farm. On appeal, Hartford and State Farm claimed that they should be subrogated to Guiberson's rights against the real party responsible for the injuries, that is, the state, whose failure to supervise Tintinger was the actual cause of Guiberson's injuries. The Supreme Court rejected this argument, ruling that Rule 14, M.R.Civ.P., permits impleading of third parties before trial; it does not substitute for a jury determination of liability. The insurers are subrogated only to the rights of Guiberson against Tintinger, for his personal liability as determined by the jury. Guiberson v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co., 217 M 279, 704 P2d 68, 42 St. Rep. 1196 (1985).

Injunction Against Interference With Use of River — Severance of Property Owner's Third-Party Complaint: In an action seeking an injunction against interference with recreational use of the Beaverhead River, the District Court properly severed defendant property owner's third-party complaint. It was filed only a few days before trial on the primary action and was sufficiently different from the issues in the primary action to warrant severance. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

Intervention — Third-Party Practice: Plaintiff agreed to lend Prospect Associates, Inc. (Prospect) money to finance construction of a subdivision. As part of the security for the loan, Prospect was required to obtain a letter of credit with plaintiff as beneficiary. Prospect defaulted on the promissory note evidencing the loan. Defendant refused payment on the letter of credit, contending it was a guaranty on which it was not primarily liable. The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Prospect contended the District Court erred in denying its motion to intervene in the letter of credit action. The Supreme Court found that defendant's liability on the letter of credit arose without regard to the underlying instruments and therefore Prospect had no claim or defense that would have a common question of law or fact to the letter of credit suit. The letter of credit action could not be consolidated with the underlying action between Prospect and plaintiff for the same reason. Defendant, however, filed a third-party complaint against Prospect for indemnity on plaintiff's claim against it. The court held that Prospect could assert its claims against plaintiff as a third-party defendant in the underlying indemnity action following remand. Sherwood & Roberts, Inc. v. First Sec. Bank, 209 M 402, 682 P2d 149, 41 St. Rep. 787 (1984).

Change of Venue — Defendant's Personal Privilege in Main Action: Plaintiff (Novco) brought an action against the Graingers (defendants) on two counts, for payment for automobile parts delivered to Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., and against Harold Grainger individually to collect on a bad check drawn on the account of Sunset Automotive, Inc., upon which Novco alleged Grainger was personally liable. The Graingers defaulted, which default was subsequently set aside, and they filed an answer, a counterclaim, and a third-party complaint. The third-party complaint alleged that Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., was the real party in interest and liable to Novco. Sunset moved for a change of venue, which the District Court denied. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure do not permit a third-party plaintiff to implead as a third-party defendant a party who is not a party to the original action and who is or may be liable to the original plaintiff. Rule 14(a), M.R.Civ.P., only permits impleader of a party who "is or may be liable" to the third-party plaintiff. The Supreme Court followed the federal court rule and held that the privilege of objecting to venue in the main action is a personal privilege belonging to the defendant in the main action alone and not to a third-party defendant. Novco v. Grainger, 199 M 291, 649 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 1367 (1982).

Responsive Pleading Including Cross-Complaint, Counterclaim, and Third-Party Complaints — Motion to Strike Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed an action on four promissory notes on June 9, 1978, and defendant filed an amended answer on November 10, 1980, more than 20 days after it was served. The District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike the amended answer. After a responsive pleading is served or 20 days after an original pleading is served, a party may amend his pleading only by leave of court or written consent of the adverse party. Here, neither was obtained, and because the cross-complaint, counterclaim, and third-party claim were not severed from the amended answer, they were properly treated as part of that answer and properly dismissed along with the amended answer. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

Time of Impleader of Uninsured Motorist — Contingent Liability: In an action by an insured against her insurance company to recover damages under uninsured motorist coverage, the trial court erred in granting the uninsured motorist's motion to dismiss the insurance company's third-party complaint. Rule 14(a) expressly grants a defendant the procedural right to bring into a lawsuit as a third-party defendant anyone who "may be" liable to him. This can be done under the principle of subrogation even if the liability of the third-party defendant is contingent upon establishing the liability of the original defendant. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Solem, 191 M 156, 622 P2d 682, 38 St. Rep. 124 (1981).

Multiple Claims and Parties — Certification Required for Appeal Because of Impleader of Third Party: Where the plaintiff corporation brought an action against the defendant insurance company to collect an account and the defendant impleaded a third-party defendant, a final judgment against the defendant insurance company was interlocutory in nature and could not be appealed absent an express determination by the court that there was no just reason for delay. Rule 14(a), M.R.Civ.P., expressly provides that an entry of judgment upon either the original claim or the third-party claim must comply with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Because the court did not make the express determination required, the appeal is premature. Pioneer Concrete & Fuel, Inc. v. Apex Constr., Inc., 190 M 229, 620 P2d 854, 37 St. Rep. 2023 (1980).

Parties to Contract — Effect of Property Disposition: Because the obligations of a contract are limited to the contracting parties, plaintiff properly sued defendant for recovery on two retail installment contracts executed by defendant, even though the object of the contracts became part of a property disposition to defendant's wife in a divorce decree which transferred the indebtedness along with the subject property. Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977).

"Cross-Claim" Against Nonparties Not Permitted: Rules of Civil Procedure do not permit or even contemplate a cross-claim against a person or entity which is not a party. Such a "cross-claim" cannot be converted into a third-party claim under this rule where neither allegations nor relief sought could be stretched to state that nonparties might be liable to defendant for all or part of plaintiff's claim against him. Campanella v. Bouma, 164 M 214, 520 P2d 1073 (1974).

Third-Party Defendant — Negligence — When Dismissal Proper: Court erred in dismissing seller and manufacturer of truck as party defendants when many issues of material fact remained to be determined. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971).

Separate Trial of Third-Party Action: Third-party claim initiated by hospital, which was being sued by minor patient burned by defective television switch while in hospital, against lessor of television equipment should have been separated from main action between hospital and patient and tried separately. Crosby v. Billings Deaconess Hosp., 149 M 314, 426 P2d 217 (1967).

Pending State Action — Effect on Federal Action: Federal court dismissed declaratory judgment action because third-party complaint was pending in state action. W. Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Pinson, 255 F. Supp. 624 (D.C. Mont. 1966).

Liberal Joinder — Effect Upon: The provisions of this rule adequately protect defendants and thus allow a liberal use of joinder guided by the discretion of trial courts. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Use of Cross-Complaint — Not as Third-Party Complaint: A cross-complaint may not be used for the sole purpose of bringing into the case additional parties, or securing substitution of parties, which is the province of interpleader. It is to be used when a defendant is entitled to some relief against the plaintiff in respect to the subject matter of the action not obtainable by answer or counterclaim, or if plaintiff's judgment may determine, as between the defendants their respective rights to the subject matter of the action, controversial between them. The basis of a cross-complaint must be a demand upon which there may be a recovery. State ex rel. Bedord v. District Court, 112 M 192, 114 P2d 265 (1941).

GENERAL

Amended Complaint With Public Service Commission Not Procedurally Barred: Taxpayers who filed a complaint with the Public Service Commission (PSC) against NorthWestern Energy filed an amended complaint to include more parties after the PSC had dismissed their first complaint for lack of standing. The PSC rejected the amended complaint, concluding that an amended complaint is procedurally barred when the PSC has dismissed the prior complaint. The District Court affirmed and the taxpayers appealed to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court ruled that the PSC erred in dismissing the amended complaint without consideration. There is no categorical rule barring an amended complaint following an order of dismissal, and the PSC should have exercised its discretion in considering the amended complaint. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter to the PSC. Williamson v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

No Abuse of Discretion — Request to Amend Complaint with Punitive Damages Claim Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in denying the plaintiff's request to amend her complaint with a claim for punitive damages in a failure to warn case against the defendant pharmaceutical company. The plaintiff requested the amendment 3 weeks before the period for discovery ended, and the defendant did not have adequate time to defend against a charge of actual fraud or malice. The District Court properly exercised its discretion in denying the request. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Right to Amend Answer Properly Denied — New Defense Not Allowed: In a failure to warn case, the defendant sought to amend its answer shortly before trial to apportion liability between it and the physician for damages suffered by the plaintiff. The defendant did not seek to amend the answer until 2 months after the prescribing physician settled with the plaintiff. The District Court acted within its discretion when it denied the defendant's motion. The defendant could have sought to amend the answer earlier but failed to do so even though plaintiff's counsel clearly sought to ascertain whether the defendant planned to add apportionment as a defense. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

No Error in Allowing Amendment to Pleadings Absent Prejudice to Opposing Party: The trial court allowed an amendment to the pleadings by a third-party defendant to assert that both plaintiff and the third-party plaintiff caused or contributed to plaintiff's damages. The third-party plaintiff asserted that the amendment was too late and that it unfairly prejudiced the third-party plaintiff by adding a claim of comparative negligence. The jury found that the third-party defendant was not negligent and thus never reached the issue of comparative negligence. The third-party plaintiff was therefore not prejudiced by the amendment, and any error in allowing the amendment was harmless. Upky v. Marshall Mtn., LLC, 2008 MT 90, 342 M 273, 180 P3d 651 (2008).

Inadvertent Use of Previous Cause Number on New Complaint Considered Technical, Nonprejudicial Defect: One day before expiration of the statute of limitations, the Lundquists filed a pro se complaint against Shook, Hamilton, and McBeth for fraudulent transfer of property, but in preparing the complaint, the Lundquists used a template from a prior fraudulent transfer case involving Shook, Hamilton, and Pederson and included the same cause number from the prior case. The Lundquists' former counsel notified the District Court that he was not representing the Lundquists in the case involving McBeth. One day prior to service of process on McBeth, the District Court ordered the Clerk of the District Court to withdraw the Lundquists' complaint on grounds that the complaint was filed in the same cause of action previously pending, and the Lundquists did not obtain the court's consent to amend prior pleadings and have their attorney of record sign the complaint against McBeth. The Lundquists then moved to have the court assign a new cause number to the complaint and allow amendment of the complaint to retain the original filing date. The court denied the motion, holding that if a new complaint was to be filed and a new cause number assigned, it would be considered filed as of the date on which it was presented for filing and not the date on which it was originally attempted to be filed. Thus, a new complaint was filed with a new cause number and filing date, but the new complaint was filed after expiration of the statute of limitations for fraudulent conveyance actions, so the District Court granted McBeth's dismissal motion because the complaint was not timely filed. The Lundquists appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. In filing the new complaint, the Lundquists had notified the court that they intended to proceed against McBeth in an action that was independent of the transfer litigated in the previous cause, and their use of the cause number from the previous action was inadvertent and a technical rather than fundamental defect. The Lundquists did not need the District Court's permission to file a new complaint, nor did the new pro se complaint require their attorney's signature. Because the Lundquists named McBeth in the complaint, filed the complaint prior to the expiration of the fraudulent transfer statute of limitations, and served McBeth with a copy of the complaint, McBeth was not prejudiced by the technical defect and the District Court should not have ordered the complaint withdrawn. Lundquist v. McBeth, 2001 MT 311, 308 M 1, 38 P3d 831 (2001).

Error in Allowing Amendment of Pleadings in Parental Rights Termination Case to Include New Theory — Lack of Notice Violative of Due Process Rights: During a parental rights termination hearing, the District Court allowed the state to amend the pleadings to include a new theory that the mother had abandoned her children. The mother's counsel objected for lack of notice. The state asserted that although abandonment may not have been included in the original pleadings as a separate ground for termination, there were facts in the original petition that supported a claim for abandonment and that the mother was thus on notice that the state intended to present evidence that would support a theory of abandonment. The Supreme Court disagreed. The fundamental liberty interest associated with parental rights must be protected with fundamentally fair procedures, including the due process requirement that a parent receive notice and be allowed the opportunity to be heard. Generally, a District Court cannot grant leave to amend the pleadings arbitrarily or perfunctorily, and although there are cases when the Supreme Court will allow a party to amend pleadings in order for a case to proceed efficiently on the merits, this was not one of those cases. The termination petition as a whole did not provide the mother with sufficient notice on the charge of abandonment. Although some of the facts may have been applicable to abandonment, the mother should not have been required to glean from those facts which claims the state could bring. Rather, the state was required to articulate the claims that it expected to raise, and allowing amendment of the pleadings during the hearing to include a theory of abandonment was reversible error. In re T.C. & W.C., 2001 MT 264, 307 M 244, 37 P3d 70 (2001).

Dismissal of Amended Petition for Postconviction Relief — Failure to Address New Claims in Order Harmless Error — Postconviction Relief Claims Civil in Nature: On remand, petitioner amended the petition for postconviction relief, adding claims 16-18. By remanding to the District Court to allow petitioner to add proposed claims 16-18, the Supreme Court necessarily required the District Court to address the merits of those claims. However, the District Court's failure to address the new claims in its Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Order was harmless error. Petitioner's newly discovered evidence claims, Brady claim, and cumulative error claims were without merit. Postconviction relief proceedings are collateral attacks that are civil in nature and independent of the underlying criminal cause. If there is no showing of substantial injustice the error is harmless. Kills On Top v. St., 2000 MT 340, 303 M 164, 15 P3d 422, 57 St. Rep. 1444 (2000).

Pleadings Amended Without Prior Notice to Respondents — Remand Warranted: Petitioners sought a writ of mandate to compel compliance with restrictive covenants regarding respondents' residence and landscaping. Respondents presented no evidence at a hearing on the petition, but argued that a writ of mandate was not the appropriate remedy, based on the facts alleged and the private nature of the dispute. The District Court invited the parties to file briefs in connection with the question of the appropriateness of the writ, then subsequently signed its final judgment ordering that the pleadings be amended to state a claim for injunctive relief instead and requiring respondents to comply with the restrictive covenants. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred by forming an entirely new and dissimilar theory as a basis for its judgment without prior notice to respondents. The case was remanded for a hearing after proper notice to respondents regarding the nature of the relief being sought. Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. McMillan, 269 M 131, 887 P2d 249, 51 St. Rep. 1494 (1994), citing Shaw v. Kalispell, 135 M 284, 340 P2d 523 (1959), McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910 (1987), and In re Custody of C.J.K., 258 M 525, 855 P2d 90 (1993).

Failure to Amend Complaint — Dismissal Proper: Kudloff brought an action against the city of Billings, alleging that the city had wrongfully annexed his property. Two years later, the city moved to have the wrongful annexation claim dismissed because Kudloff no longer owned the property and was without standing to pursue the claim. Kudloff argued that he had sold the property in order to mitigate damages and was still entitled to recover for losses he alleged were due to the forced sale of his property. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had properly dismissed the claim because Kudloff had not amended his complaint and the purpose of a complaint and subsequent amendments is to provide adequate notice to the defendant of the nature of the action that must be defended against. Kudloff v. Billings, 260 M 371, 860 P2d 140, 50 St. Rep. 1108 (1993).

Reversal of Mislabeled Award — Validity Not Raised in Pleadings: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court award of $3,768.66 in damages related to freight adjustment, which the District Court had mistakenly labeled as invalid trailer charges. The award was improper because under the contract, plaintiff was responsible for the adjustments and because the validity of the charges was not properly raised in the initial or amended pleadings. Koontz v. Sky Country, Inc., 244 M 192, 795 P2d 980, 47 St. Rep. 1490 (1990).

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Plaintiff Allowed to Amend Prayer in Complaint: Under Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the plaintiff is allowed to amend the prayer in her complaint regarding punitive and compensatory damages. Under the provisions of 25-4-311 through 25-4-313, the defendant is entitled to have the amendments to the prayer include the dollar amount of special and general damages sought, including punitive damages, or in lieu of the amounts, a statement of damages under 25-4-312. In any amendment the dollar amount sought may not be open-ended by reference to a proportion of the financial condition or net worth of the defendant. The amendment, in addition to stating the dollar amounts, may include such language as "other and further relief to which the plaintiff may be entitled". State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Amendment Adding Theories and Increasing Damages Allowed: A complaint was filed in 1971 alleging negligence and lease violations by the defendant, resulting in damages to the plaintiff's land. In 1980, the plaintiff moved to amend the complaint to include further damages. The motion was denied because the amended complaint changed the theory of the case from two theories to seven and asked for damages of $750,000, an increase from $15,000 in the original complaint. On appeal, the court said that a party should be allowed to amend the complaint unless the moving party is guilty of undue delay, bad faith, or dilatory motive, none of which are present here. The court allowed the complaint to be amended. Lien v. Murphy Corp., 201 M 488, 656 P2d 804, 39 St. Rep. 2252 (1982).

Responsive Pleading Including Cross-Complaint, Counterclaim, and Third-Party Complaints — Motion to Strike Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed an action on four promissory notes on June 9, 1978, and defendant filed an amended answer on November 10, 1980, more than 20 days after it was served. The District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike the amended answer. After a responsive pleading is served or 20 days after an original pleading is served, a party may amend his pleading only by leave of court or written consent of the adverse party. Here, neither was obtained, and because the cross-complaint, counterclaim, and third-party claim were not severed from the amended answer, they were properly treated as part of that answer and properly dismissed along with the amended answer. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

No Substantive Changes in Amended Complaint — Dismissal Properly Granted: The court properly dismissed an amended complaint which was essentially the same as the original complaint filed before another District Judge. Plaintiff merely added sweeping alternative conclusions of law to his original complaint and claimed that they were substantive changes. Sovey v. Chouteau County District Hosp., 173 M 392, 567 P2d 941 (1977).

Service Upon Counsel of Record: Whether or not counsel agreed to accept service for his clients was immaterial. Service of an amended complaint is required to be made on the attorney. A reasonable time must be given for responsive pleadings before default, however. State ex rel. Leavitt v. District Court, 172 M 12, 560 P2d 517 (1977).

Amendment of Answer Properly Permitted: No prejudice was shown in permitting defendant to amend answer after notice had been given plaintiff of change in legal theories. Lahman v. Rocky Mtn. Phosphate Co., 161 M 28, 504 P2d 271 (1972).

Power to Grant Leave to Amend — Limited: Although judges have broad discretionary power to grant leave to amend the pleadings and granting leave is the rule rather than the exception, that power may be limited by a decision of the Supreme Court upon a former appeal of the same cause. St. Highway Comm'n v. Schmidt, 148 M 316, 420 P2d 153 (1966).

Amendment After Appeal Dismissing Pleadings: A party may not amend pleadings when appellate court affirmed their dismissal unless the appellate court permits amendment. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

"Responsive Pleading" Defined: A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is not a responsive pleading within this rule. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Striking of Amended Pleading — Reinstatement of Original Pleading: Even though an amended pleading ordinarily renders the original pleading functus officio, the original pleading is reinstated if the amended pleading is stricken. Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Continuance Denied After Amendment — Plaintiff Not Prejudiced: Where defendant, during trial, was permitted to amend his answer on motion supported by affidavits, over plaintiff's oral objections, but not opposed by counteraffidavits or controverted as to facts, the court cannot be put in error for allowing the amendment, which was not prejudicial to plaintiff, or for failing to grant a continuance, which plaintiff did not seek but waived by proceeding without objection. Walsh v. Kennedy, 115 M 551, 147 P2d 425 (1944).

Amendment of Estate Claim — Relation Back: A claim against an estate, upon being rejected, may be amended if claimant acts before the time has elapsed in which claims may be presented, or even where the time for amendment of pleadings or proceedings has elapsed, where the amendment does not change the essential grounds of recovery or increase the amount, but supplies elements necessary to express its full merits. In this event it relates back to the original presentation, and when done after the time has passed for presentation, a further rejection of the claim is neither necessary nor proper. State ex rel. Steinfort v. District Court, 111 M 216, 107 P2d 890 (1940).

Levy of Attachment — Substitution of Parties: Where an attachment had been levied in an action brought by plaintiff as trustee, the fact that he thereafter petitioned for leave to amend his complaint by substituting himself as owner of the cause of action would not affect the continuing force of the levy; the rule is that such an amendment may be allowed without affecting the attachment so long as it will not change the cause of action. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940).

Timely Motions to Be Granted: The rule as to amendments of pleadings proposed at an opportune time is to allow and the exception to deny them. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940).

Interpleader Petition — Amendment by Affidavit: The District Court, in an action between banks to recover on a cashier's check issued by defendant, in which the latter petitioned for an order requiring conflicting claimants to interplead, properly allowed amendment of the petition by the filing of an affidavit of one of the claimants. State ex rel. St. Bank of Townsend v. District Court, 94 M 551, 25 P2d 396 (1933).

Motion to Strike — Challenge of Amendment Without Leave: The only method of determining whether an amended pleading has been improperly filed, i.e., filed without leave of court when such leave is necessary, is by motion to strike. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933).

Probate Proceedings: Section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P.), providing for allowance of amendments to pleadings, had application to probate proceedings. State ex rel. Paramount Publix Corp. v. District Court, 90 M 281, 1 P2d 335 (1931); State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Liberal Allowance of Amendment: The matter of permitting amendments of pleadings lies within the sound discretion of the District Court, and the rule is to allow and the exception to deny them. Fowlis v. Heinecke, 87 M 117, 287 P 169 (1930).

Amendment to Relief Sought: The filing of an amended and supplemental complaint in one pleading is permissible and the relief asked therein could be different from that prayed in the original complaint. Nat'l Bank of Mont. v. Bingham, 83 M 21, 269 P 162 (1928).

Lack of Terms on Leave to Amend Not Abuse of Discretion: Section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P.), providing that the trial court may allow an amendment of any pleading upon such terms as may be just, did not under all circumstances require the imposition of terms as a condition to granting leave, the matter being left to the discretion of the court. Where it did not appear that the application to amend was untimely, or that the adversary was placed at any disadvantage or incurred any expense by reason of the amendment, the action of the court in granting leave without imposing terms was not an abuse of discretion. Wandel v. Wandel, 76 M 160, 248 P 864 (1926).

Attachment — Amendment of Affidavit Properly Allowed: Where the affidavit for a Writ of Attachment originally recited that the debt sued on had not been secured, the court properly permitted the affiant to amend to the effect that while the debt had originally been secured, the security had become valueless without any fault of his, and refusal to dissolve the attachment was proper. Hetrick v. Renwald, 73 M 426, 236 P 1089 (1925).

Motion Pending at Time of Amendment: Permission to amend the complaint pending determination of a motion to discharge an attachment procured in the action was proper. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 56 M 82, 181 P 332 (1919); Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894).

Amendment of Cross-Complaint: A defendant who demands relief against a codefendant must do so before the issues between him and the plaintiff have been made up. He cannot do it afterward by amended answer without first obtaining leave of court. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Delay in Amended Answer — Unauthorized Amendment: Delay in filing an amended answer, though entirely excusable, does not justify a change of the issues without permission of the court. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Direction of Amendment Sua Sponte: In proper cases the court may, even on its own motion, direct an amendment if in its opinion a nonsuit or mistrial may be avoided. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

Original Pleading Superseded — Default Judgment Improper: Where each of two defendants has been served, but before the time for appearance has expired and before any appearance has been made by either an amended complaint is filed and served upon one of them only, a default judgment cannot be properly entered against the one not served. Ben Kress Nursery Co. v. Oreg. Nursery Co., 45 M 494, 124 P 475 (1912), distinguished in Price v. Skylstead, 69 M 453, 222 P 1059 (1924), and Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Insufficient Pleading — Amendment Allowed: A complaint may be amended, even though it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Such a pleading is not a mere nullity, but is something which may be amended. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 38 M 177, 99 P 298 (1908).

Amendment Granted — Continuance Properly Denied: It was within the court's discretion to permit an amendment to a complaint after the cause had been called for trial, and to deny a motion for postponement, where it did not appear that movant was surprised by the presentation of an issue which he was not prepared to meet, or that he did not meet it with all the evidence available in any event. Dorais v. Doll, 33 M 314, 83 P 884 (1905), followed in Ward v. Vibrasonic Laboratories, Inc., 236 M 314, 769 P2d 1229, 46 St. Rep. 387 (1989).

Substitution of Parties Allowed — Lack of Prejudice: Where it appeared from an application for certiorari that the application was not made by the one beneficially interested, but by another on his behalf, and the defendant had not been misled or jeopardized by reason of the error, an amendment substituting the real party in interest as plaintiff should be allowed. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

Amended Pleading to Be Served: A pleading is amended by filing and serving the same as amended. Holter Hardware Co. v. Ontario Min. Co., 24 M 184, 61 P 3 (1900).

Attachment — Amendment Not Affecting Substantial Rights of the Parties: It is not error for the trial court to permit an attachment plaintiff to amend his complaint and affidavit on attachment, without an affidavit showing ground therefor, and pending a motion to dissolve, where the amendment does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894). See also Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 56 M 82, 181 P 332 (1919).

RIGHT TO AMENDMENT OF COURSE OR UPON LEAVE OF COURT

Denial of Motion to Amend Based on Motion for Summary Judgment — Abuse of Discretion: Leave to amend a complaint should be freely given absent prejudice to the opposing party. The plaintiffs' motion to amend their complaint regarding the standard of care for informed consent was filed before the defendant's motion for summary judgment was filed. The District Court addressed the motion for summary judgment before it addressed the motion to amend and then based its decision to deny the motion to amend upon its order of summary judgment. The District Court should have first considered the prior motion to amend under former Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and then addressed the summary judgment motion in the context of its ruling on the motion to amend. Griffin v. Moseley, 2010 MT 132, 356 Mont. 393, 234 P.3d 869. See also Hansen v. Bozeman Police Dept., 2015 MT 143, 379 Mont. 284, 350 P.3d 372, in which the motion to amend was denied when leave was requested after the close of discovery.

Proper Conversion of Counterclaim of Mutual Mistake to Affirmative Defense — Mutual Mistake Counterclaim Subject to Statute of Limitations: Johnson's loan agreement listed the loan interest rate as 13%, but the promissory note and accompanying payment coupons mistakenly listed the interest rate as 0.13%. Following Johnson's final payment, defendant recalculated the amount due and determined that Johnson still owed $16,612.09. Johnson filed a complaint requesting release of the lien, and defendant filed a counterclaim alleging mutual mistake. The District Court held that justice required that the counterclaim be treated as an affirmative defense in order to avoid the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-203, because applying the statute of limitations would constitute an undeserved windfall to Johnson in light of the fact that Johnson knew or should have known that the 13% interest rate in the loan agreement applied. Defendant then filed a counterclaim to reform the note to reflect a 13% interest rate, and the court then granted affirmative relief to defendant based on the mutual mistake counterclaim. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the interests of justice required conversion of the counterclaim to an affirmative defense, but the counterclaim could not be converted to an affirmative defense seeking affirmative relief without bumping against the statute of limitations. Defendant's affirmative defense of mutual mistake went well beyond a defensive claim, and the subsequent mutual mistake counterclaim presented a cause of action seeking affirmative relief that was subject to the 2-year statute of limitations for initiation of an action for relief on grounds of fraud or mistake. Defendant's counterclaim was not timely, therefore defendant was not entitled to recover anything beyond Johnson's last payment or to an award of attorney fees and costs. Additionally, in light of defendant's inability to collect any additional payments under the loan, Johnson was granted reconveyance of the property she had conveyed by deed of trust. Johnson v. Dist. VII, Human Resources Dev. Council, 2009 MT 86, 349 M 529, 204 P3d 714 (2009), following State ex rel. Egeland v. City Council of Cut Bank, 245 M 484, 803 P2d 609 (1990).

Right to Amend Pleadings Improperly Denied — Failure of District Court to Follow Scheduling Order: Defendants purchased lumber from plaintiff's retail lumber business. When payment was not received within 30 days, plaintiff sent a bill requesting payment in full and adding interest on the account at 18% a year. The District Court issued a scheduling order requiring that all amendments to the pleadings be filed by October 25, 1999, and that all motions for summary judgment be filed by February 4, 2000. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment on January 3, 2001, and the court set a hearing for February 7, 2001. At the hearing, defendants sought to amend the pleadings to add a claim of usury. The court denied defendants' motion to amend and granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Defendants appealed, asserting that the court erred in refusing to amend the pleadings. The Supreme Court agreed. Unless the moving party is guilty of undue delay, bad faith, or dilatory motive, leave to amend should be freely given. Here, the District Court abused its discretion when it neglected to follow its own scheduling order by permitting plaintiff to move for summary judgment 11 months after the scheduling date, while at the same time refusing to grant a similarly untimely motion by defendants to amend the pleadings prior to completion of discovery and the setting of a trial date. Because the case was reversed on other grounds, the Supreme Court directed that defendants be allowed to amend the pleadings to add the usury claim on remand. Aldrich & Co. v. Ellis, 2002 MT 177, 311 M 1, 52 P3d 388 (2002).

Leave of Court Required but Not Obtained — Failure to Consider Second Amended Complaint Held Not Error: After the Shieldses had already amended their section 1983 complaint once, they again filed an Amendment to Complaint. Earlier on the same day, the District Court filed its order dismissing the complaint. The Supreme Court held that since the Shieldses had already filed one amended complaint, they were required by this rule to obtain leave of the court for filing the Amendment to Complaint, which they failed to do. Because leave of the court was not obtained, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in ignoring the Shieldses' second amended complaint. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Failure to Amend Despite Opportunity to Do So: Third-party plaintiffs contended that the District Court abused its discretion by depriving the party of its opportunity to amend its complaint. However, the record showed that the party had ample, reasonable opportunities to amend the complaint both before and after hearing, but failed to do so. The assertion of abuse of discretion was therefore without merit. C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 262 M 321, 864 P2d 1253, 50 St. Rep. 1577 (1993).

Failure to Answer Motion to Strike Amended Complaint Following Extension — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: The District Court, despite defendant's objections, accommodated plaintiff by extending the time in which he could amend his complaint. Having granted the extension, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying further extensions or in denying leave to amend after plaintiff failed to file an answer to defendant's motion to strike the complaint. Gursky v. Parkside Professional Village, 258 M 148, 852 P2d 569, 50 St. Rep. 470 (1993).

Amendment to Assert New Information — Effect of Impeachment of Plaintiff's Witness by New Information: Cattle company requested leave to amend its complaint because it had new information on damages. The extent to which the new information would impeach the deposition of its principal was relevant to principal's credibility as a witness but should not have been used as one of two reasons for denying the amendment, especially because granting the amendment would not have harmed defendant. Denial of amendment on that ground and because the lower court thought it untimely was an abuse of discretion. The error was not harmless because cattle company was precluded from asserting a cause of action based on the alleged damage the amendment sought to claim. Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 249 M 322, 815 P2d 1153, 48 St. Rep. 764 (1991). See also Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000).

Test for Leave to Amend: Leave to amend is properly denied when the amendment is futile or legally insufficient to support the requested relief, but it is an abuse of discretion to deny leave to amend when the amendment should be allowed in furtherance of justice or when it cannot be said that the pleader can develop no set of facts under its proposed amendment that would entitle the pleader to the relief sought. The merits of a proposed amendment should usually not be considered unless the claim is frivolous, meritless, or futile. Leave to amend to correct a mistake should be freely given if the amendment will not harmfully mislead defendant. Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 249 M 322, 815 P2d 1153, 48 St. Rep. 764 (1991), followed in Hickey v. Baker School District No. 12, 2002 MT 322, 313 M 162, 60 P3d 966 (2002). See also Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000).

No Absolute Right to Jury Trial: Nothing in the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act gives an absolute right to a trial by jury. It is a recognized general rule of law that the nature of the issues determines the right to a jury trial. If the issues are strictly equitable, there is no right to a jury trial. Thus, it was not error for the District Court to deny jury trial in an action originally filed as a declaratory judgment but amended to enjoin interference with recreational use of the Beaverhead River. Furthermore, the court did not err in granting leave to file an amended complaint since the matter was clearly injunctive in nature and the issues equitable since inception. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

One Amendment of Course Per Pleading: This rule does not allow one amendment as a matter of course per defendant. Rather it allows one amendment as a matter of course per pleading. Any other interpretation would violate the purposes of the rule, to prevent poor pleading and to discourage harassment of the defendant. Haugen v. Warner, 204 M 508, 665 P2d 1132, 40 St. Rep. 1036 (1983).

Cash Sanction Improperly Imposed as Condition to Amending Complaint: The District Court has authority under Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P., to impose terms or conditions upon granting a motion for leave to amend a complaint upon plaintiffs. This is an appropriate means of balancing the interests of the party seeking an amendment and those of the party objecting to it. The imposition of such conditions or sanctions as here ($150 in attorney's fees to each defendant) requires a showing of extraordinary prejudice, and since neither extraordinary prejudice to the defendants was shown here nor a uniform degree of prejudice, the order imposing cash sanctions is vacated without prejudice. St. v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981).

Addition of Verification: The right of plaintiff to amend his complaint before demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer extends to correcting or supplying a verification. Claussen v. Chapin, 69 M 205, 221 P 1073 (1923).

No Right to Amend After Answer: After a cause is at issue and has been set for trial, defendant may not file an amended answer as a matter of right, but must obtain permission of the trial court to do so. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Right Not Subject to Court's Discretion: The right of a party to an action to amend his pleading once as a matter of course is one which the court cannot deny him, and respecting which it cannot exercise any discretion whatever. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Clancy, 30 M 529, 77 P 312 (1904).

TIMELINESS OF AMENDMENT

Denial of Untimely Motion to Amend Complaint — No Abuse of Discretion: Stipe contended that the District Court abused its discretion by denying Stipe's motion to amend a complaint to raise a claim of intentional interference with potential economic advantage. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion. The District Court noted that the parties had stipulated to a scheduling order that foreclosed changes absent good cause, and concluded that Stipe failed to show good cause. Additionally, Stipe filed no motion to amend the scheduling order, and filed the motion to amend 164 days after the deadline to amend had passed and 4 days before the close of discovery, even though Stipe's counsel had been aware of the claim for at least 4 years, so the District Court concluded that the motion to amend was untimely. The District Court justified its reasons for denying the motion and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the ruling absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. Stipe v. First Interstate Bank-Polson, 2008 MT 239, 344 M 435, 188 P3d 1063 (2008). See also Kershaw v. Dept. of Transportation, 2011 MT 170, 361 Mont. 215, 257 P.3d 358 (District Court's denial of motion to amend complaint filed after the deadline to amend pleadings had expired was not an abuse of discretion).

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001).

Attempt to Raise New Theory Five Days Before Trial Prejudicial: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. Five days before trial, Allison attempted to raise a new theory based on alleged violation of the governmental code of fair practices. The town moved to prohibit introduction of the new theory at trial, arguing that prejudice would result because of the lack of notice and the inability to prepare a defense. The District Court agreed and granted the town's motion to preclude introduction of the new theory. On appeal, Allison contended that the court erred in prohibiting raising of the new theory because the legal obligations in the governmental code of fair practices were not presented as a separate claim, but rather were intended as evidence of the discrimination claims. However, characterizing the newly alleged violations as evidence did not alter the fact that Allison attempted to introduce a new theory 5 days before trial. The court correctly found that the alleged violations were two distinct causes of action and that allowing introduction of the new cause of action so soon before trial would prejudice the town. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000).

Facts Regarding Spousal Maintenance Known Nearly Twenty-One Months Before Trial — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: Within one month before trial, a wife sought to amend her petition for dissolution of marriage to include a claim for spousal support. The trial court denied the motion as untimely, and the case went to trial as scheduled. The wife appealed on grounds that the court abused its discretion by not freely giving leave to amend the petition. However, the issue of maintenance was not previously part of the case, which had been pending for more than 2 years. The wife's claim was based on facts known to her nearly 21 months earlier, yet she did not raise the issue until the eve of trial. She offered no reason for the delay in filing the motion, nor did she do anything pretrial to bring her maintenance claim to the attention of the court or opposing counsel. To expect the husband to proceed to trial on the maintenance issue without adequate discovery or preparation would have been patently unfair and prejudicial, and the court properly denied the motion to amend. Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000), following Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 M 221, 911 P2d 1153, 53 St. Rep. 135 (1996).

Failure of Stucco Product — No Agency Relationship Between Contractor-Applicator and Manufacturer — No Negligence or Strict Liability Found — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Sunset Point Partnership (Sunset), a condominium developer, sued Wolstein, d/b/a Stuc-O-Flex Systems; Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc.; and Melton and Fischer, d/b/a Melton Fischer Construction (Melton/Fischer). Sunset's complaint alleged breach of contract, breach of warranty, indemnity, negligence, and strict liability in tort because a stucco-like product that Wolstein, as a subcontractor with Melton/Fischer, applied to the exterior of condominium buildings developed problems. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., on each of the five counts in Sunset's complaint, holding that there was no evidence of negligence or breach of contract or warranty by Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and no evidence of agency between Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and Melton/Fischer. Sunset appealed. Citing previous decisions by it to the effect that in order for there to be ostensible agency the principal and not the agent must have taken steps to lead a third party to the belief that an agency relationship existed, the Supreme Court held that there was no evidence of actual or ostensible agency between Melton/Fischer and Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc. As to Sunset's claim of negligence, the Supreme Court answered Sunset's argument that Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., was negligent in failing to provide adequate training, supervision, and instruction to Wolstein by pointing out that Sunset's complaint only alleged negligence against the defendants in the "manner in which they applied" Stuc-O-Flex and that there was no record evidence indicating a duty on the part of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., to train and supervise Wolstein. Concerning Sunset's claim for strict liability, the Supreme Court noted that Sunset had only alleged defective application of Stuc-O-Flex and had not alleged a defective product. Moreover, the Supreme Court pointed out that Sunset's own expert testified that: (1) there was nothing inherently defective about Stuc-O-Flex; (2) Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., did not sell a "system" consisting of the material on which the product was applied and the product, but only sold the product itself; and (3) therefore only that product was guaranteed. In its review of the District Court's denial of Sunset's motion to amend its complaint to add the seller of the product as a defendant, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision, pointing out that the litigation was 2 years old by the time that Sunset made its untimely motion to amend. Sunset Point Partnership v. Stuc-O-Flex Int'l, Inc., 1998 MT 42, 287 M 388, 954 P2d 1156, 55 St. Rep. 141 (1998).

Irrigation District's Amendment Alleging Governmental Immunity Timely Filed: The plaintiffs filed suit in August 1983, alleging that the irrigation district's actions had resulted in crop losses for the plaintiffs. In November 1989, the lower court allowed the defendant to amend its answer to include the defense that the irrigation district was a governmental entity immune from suit. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision on the basis that it was within the lower court's discretion and that the plaintiffs had failed to show that they were prejudiced by the amendment. Love v. Harlem Irrigation District, 245 M 443, 802 P2d 611, 47 St. Rep. 2190 (1990). After the 1990 Love decision, supra, Loves filed another amended complaint alleging contractual violations, negligence, fraud, and additional damages. Following Whirry v. Swanson, 254 M 248, 836 P2d 1227 (1992), and Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265 (1993), and distinguishing Boucher v. Dramstad, 522 F. Supp. 604 (D.C. Mont. 1981), the Supreme Court held that despite Loves' claims of issues of fundamental fairness and new theories of recovery, all four elements composing the doctrine of res judicata were met. The issues having been previously decided in the 1990 Love decision, judgment for the irrigation district on the issues raised by the amended complaint was granted. State ex rel. Harlem Irrigation District v. District Court, 271 M 129, 894 P2d 943, 52 St. Rep. 364 (1995), followed in Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 272 M 349, 900 P2d 929, 52 St. Rep. 823 (1995).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Defendant, who was successful in having an action dismissed on a Rule 12(b) motion, failed to file a notice of entry of judgment. The plaintiffs' 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal did not run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Amendment to State Alternative Basis of Liability and to Name Previously Unnamed Defendants: District Court improperly denied plaintiff's motion to amend his complaint 14 months after original filing in order to state an alternative basis of recovery and to name certain defendants previously unknown to him and referred to in the original complaint as John Does. This was because the previously unnamed defendants had not yet filed responsive pleadings, and there was no bad faith, dilatory motive, or undue delay in the plaintiff's motion to amend. Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Responsive Pleading Including Cross-Complaint, Counterclaim, and Third-Party Complaints — Motion to Strike Properly Granted: The plaintiff filed an action on four promissory notes on June 9, 1978, and defendant filed an amended answer on November 10, 1980, more than 20 days after it was served. The District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike the amended answer. After a responsive pleading is served or 20 days after an original pleading is served, a party may amend his pleading only by leave of court or written consent of the adverse party. Here, neither was obtained, and because the cross-complaint, counterclaim, and third-party claim were not severed from the amended answer, they were properly treated as part of that answer and properly dismissed along with the amended answer. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

No Substantial Prejudice: Granting of plaintiff's motion to amend the amended complaint on morning of trial was proper because substantial prejudice was not incurred by defendant, even though the effect of the amendments was to change the basis of recovery on particular claims from tort to contract. Kearns v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 173 M 239, 567 P2d 433 (1977).

Answer Amended on Day of Trial — Prerequisites: District Court's granting leave to file an amended answer on day of trial, admitting existence of partnership where original answer denied existence, was error without inquiring why contrary new facts were not pleaded in original answer, why there was a delay of nearly 2 years, or whether amendment would impose a prejudicial burden on plaintiff, without opportunity to afford plaintiff to adjust accordingly. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 169 M 134, 545 P2d 657 (1976).

Products Liability — Belated Change in Theory: Granting plaintiff's motion to amend complaint to include theory of implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose was error where motion was presented shortly before trial and plaintiff had relied upon theory of negligence through the entire course of the pretrial proceedings. Warranty theory was foreign to the proper pleading of the case and required defendant to be prepared for an entirely different defense theory. McGuire v. Nelson, 162 M 37, 508 P2d 558 (1973).

Amendment Allowed on Day of Trial: Trial court may permit defendants to make amendments to their answer on the date set for trial. Union Interchange, Inc. v. Parker, 138 M 348, 357 P2d 339 (1960), followed in Ward v. Vibrasonic Laboratories, Inc., 236 M 314, 769 P2d 1229, 46 St. Rep. 387 (1989).

Motion Six Months After Answer — Motion Properly Denied: Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion to amend answer made at the opening of the trial without prior notice, nearly 6 months after the original answer had been filed. Kraus v. Newman, 137 M 388, 352 P2d 261 (1960).

Abuse of Discretion and Prejudice Required: The power to allow amendments at any stage of the trial is within the discretion of the trial court, and its action in this behalf is not subject to review by the Supreme Court, unless it is affirmatively shown that it abused its discretion to the prejudice of the adverse party. Betor v. Chevalier, 121 M 337, 193 P2d 374 (1948); Nesbitt v. Butte, 118 M 84, 163 P2d 251 (1945); Sellers v. Montana-Dakota Power Co., 99 M 39, 41 P2d 44 (1935); Clack v. Clack, 98 M 552, 41 P2d 32 (1935); Besse v. McHenry, 89 M 520, 300 P 199 (1931); Callen v. Hample, 73 M 321, 236 P 550 (1925); Buhler v. Loftus, 53 M 546, 165 P 601 (1917).

Amendment Six Months After Complaint Filed Properly Denied: In a negligence action, where a motion to amend the complaint, made 2 days after commencement of trial and more than 6 months after the filing of the complaint, by addition of an allegation of negligence would have changed the whole theory on which the action was brought, the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Sellers v. Montana-Dakota Power Co., 99 M 39, 41 P2d 44 (1935).

New Defense Based on Record — Motion Properly Denied: Application to amend a pleading at commencement of trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, its discretion in that respect not being limited to the imposition of terms, and it will not be held to have abused it in denying defendant's motion for permission to amend the answer by inserting an entirely new defense based upon matters of record for many months in the court in which the action was pending. Parsons v. Rice, 81 M 509, 264 P 396 (1928).

Appeal From Justice Court — Delay of Two Months: Where defendant in a cause appealed to the District Court from a Justice's Court did not ask for leave to amend his answer until a jury had been sworn to try the cause, although the transcript from the Justice's Court had been on file with the Clerk of Court for over 2 months thus giving him ample time to seek permission to amend, and the amendment sought to be made changed the issues entirely, the court did not abuse its discretion in granting leave on condition that he pay plaintiff's costs. Apple v. Seaver, 70 M 65, 223 P 830 (1924).

Amendment in Discretion of Trial Court — Refusal for Indifference or Neglect: Application to amend the complaint after issue joined is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and the showing made in support of it must be sufficient to move that discretion, amendments being allowable in furtherance of justice but not where the applicant has been guilty of indifference or neglect. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 M 152, 206 P 430 (1922).

Appeal From Justice Court — Delay of Fifteen Months: Where the sufficiency of the complaint in a claim and delivery action had been challenged in the Justice Court and no effort to amend was made by plaintiff for 15 months thereafter or until the trial in the District Court on appeal had commenced and no showing was made or any excuse offered for the delay, refusal to permit the amendment then was not an abuse of discretion. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 M 152, 206 P 430 (1922).

Standard of Appellate Review: The power to allow or disallow amendments at any stage of the trial is within the discretion of the court, and if no abuse is shown the court's action will be approved on appeal. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

MISTAKE CORRECTED BY AMENDMENT

Incorrect Statutory Reference — Charge Not Invalid: A complaint which used the statutory language of 61-8-401 to describe the offense but which listed a citation to 61-8-406 was not made defective by the incorrect reference since the complaint adequately described and gave notice of the offense. The District Court did not err in granting a motion to amend the complaint to correct the statutory reference. St. v. Handy, 221 M 365, 719 P2d 766, 43 St. Rep. 897 (1986).

Abuse of Discretion — Denied Motion to Amend to Correct Inadvertent Error: It was an abuse of discretion for the trial court judge to deny defendant and third-party plaintiff the opportunity to amend the third-party complaint for a second time to include an allegation of damages that had been inadvertently left out. Haugen v. Warner, 204 M 508, 665 P2d 1132, 40 St. Rep. 1036 (1983).

Mistake in Legal Description — Amendment Properly Allowed: In an action for rent by the lessor of farm lands the complaint mistakenly described the land as located south of the Montana meridian instead of north. At the conclusion of all the evidence, and after the instructions had been settled, plaintiff asked for leave to amend the complaint in the particular mentioned and reopen the case for the purpose of introducing evidence in support of the amended description. Leave was granted, the case reopened, defendant being given permission to introduce any evidence he desired; he declined to introduce any. The mistake in the description was a mere clerical one; defendant under the circumstances could not have been misled to his prejudice by the amendment, and the court properly allowed it to be made. Besse v. McHenry, 89 M 520, 300 P 199 (1931).

Mistakes Made in Original Pleadings: The court may permit an amendment of a complaint, which amounts to nothing more than the correction of a mistake made in the pleading as originally drawn. Downs v. Cassidy, 47 M 471, 133 P 106 (1913).

Name of Parties: Where there is a misnomer of the name of the defendant in the complaint, the court should allow the plaintiff to correct the name of the defendant upon his request to do so. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 29 M 317, 74 P 734 (1903).

WAIVER OF OBJECTION TO AMENDMENT

Codefendants — No Standing to Object: Where the principal defendant, a corporation, defaulted in a foreclosure suit and its secretary by stipulation consented to the amendment, a codefendant objecting but not asking for a continuance on the ground of surprise was not in a position to complain on appeal of the failure to serve the amendment on the consenting defendant. Clack v. Clack, 98 M 552, 41 P2d 32 (1935).

Insertion of Legal Description — No Abuse of Discretion: In a mortgage foreclosure suit, the court's action in permitting plaintiff to amend his complaint at the opening of the trial, by inserting therein a description of a tract of land inadvertently omitted by the scrivener from both mortgage and pleading, was not an abuse of discretion, where appellant neither asked for a continuance on the ground of surprise nor suggested that she was not prepared to proceed to trial on the facts presented by the amendment. Clack v. Clack, 98 M 552, 41 P2d 32 (1935).

Answer as Waiver of Objection: Where no objection is made to the filing of an amended complaint and no motion interposed to strike it from the files, any objection is waived by answering. Fowlis v. Heinecke, 87 M 117, 287 P 169 (1930).

Continuance Not Requested — No Abuse of Discretion: Where an amendment to an answer in a divorce proceeding was permitted 15 days prior to trial and plaintiff did not apply for a continuance under a claim of surprise, he was in no position to urge abuse of discretion in allowing the amendment. Wandel v. Wandel, 76 M 160, 248 P 864 (1926).

SERVICE OF AMENDED PLEADING

Order to Plead Without Service as Error: Where the District Court sustains a motion of defendant to strike a portion of the complaint, permits plaintiff to amend and directs defendant to plead to it as amended, without requiring service of the amended pleading, it commits error, even though the substance of the cause of action is not changed by the amendment or the change does not seem important. State ex rel. NW. Eng'r Co. v. District Court, 114 M 179, 133 P2d 594 (1943).

Amendment of Right to Be Served — Default Improper: An amendment to a pleading made as a matter of right does not become effective for any purpose until it is filed and served. Hence, where an amended complaint was never served, judgment by default could not be rendered against defendant. Griffith v. Mont. Wheat Growers' Ass'n, 75 M 466, 244 P 277 (1926).

All Amendments to Be Served: An amended complaint must be served on all the adverse parties who are to be bound by the judgment, whether it materially affects them or not. If the amended complaint is not served upon a defendant, there is no pleading upon which a judgment against him can be sustained. Ben Kress Nursery Co. v. Oreg. Nursery Co., 45 M 494, 124 P 475 (1912), distinguished in Price v. Skylstead, 69 M 453, 222 P 1059 (1924), and Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Formal Amendments — Service Not Required: When the amendment is merely formal, such as to correct a clerical error, the name of the court, a party, or a date, it need not be served or any delay allowed for answering. Barber v. Briscoe, 8 M 214, 19 P 589 (1888).

Service of Material Amendments — Time for Answer: When an amended complaint differs from the original in a substantial matter, or adds a material averment requiring proof, it should always be served upon a defendant who should be allowed the statutory time to plead. Barber v. Briscoe, 8 M 214, 19 P 589 (1888).

RESPONSE TO AMENDED PLEADING

Amendment Not Requiring Answer — No Supersession of Complaint: Amendment of a complaint, after answer filed, by striking therefrom an allegation of a conclusion of law which defendant might properly have disregarded as surplusage and which did not require an answer, worked no change in the complaint as originally filed, and therefore the amended pleading did not supersede the original one. Johnson v. Herring, 89 M 156, 295 P 1100 (1931).

Answer as Waiver of Right to Demur: The right to answer an amended complaint includes the right to demur (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) thereto. Where the amendment, after answer filed, did not change the original pleading but removed an immaterial allegation therefrom, the right to demur to it for ambiguity and uncertainty was waived by answering. Johnson v. Herring, 89 M 156, 295 P 1100 (1931).

Divorce Complaint — Default to Amended Complaint: Where the amended complaint in an action for divorce added a new count, the allegations of which were not denied by the answer to the original complaint, it was incumbent upon defendant to answer or demur (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) anew, failing in which his default was properly entered. Danielson v. Danielson, 62 M 83, 203 P 506 (1921).

First Answer Applicable to Second Complaint: Where the answer to the original complaint puts in issue the material allegations of the complaint as amended, the defendant may rely upon his answer and his failure to plead to the amended complaint does not subject him to default. Danielson v. Danielson, 62 M 83, 203 P 506 (1921).

LEAVE TO AMEND DENIED

Motion to File Second Amended Answer Properly Denied: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to file a second amended answer given that: (1) defendant waited 9 months to file the motion; (2) plaintiff moved for summary judgment and to compel defendant's discovery responses at least 3 months before defendant moved to amend; (3) defendant did not present any new evidence that was not available at the time of the first amended answer; (4) all previous extensions were for defendant's benefit; (5) granting the motion would have caused undue delay; (6) if defendant had discovered new evidence, prompt action was not taken upon making the discovery; and (7) allowing a second amendment would have impeded the orderly and expeditious progression of the case to final judgment. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Belated Attempt to Amend Answer Properly Denied: Defendant waited almost 5 years until 3 months prior to trial before seeking to amend its complaint to include a statute of frauds defense. The District Court denied the request to amend, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The long delay, allegedly based on defense counsel's oversight, would have prejudiced plaintiff's case because discovery had already closed and reopening discovery would have cost plaintiff considerable money. The District Court acted within its discretion in denying the amendment, given the belated request and potential prejudice. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 M 145, 153 P3d 627 (2007).

No Abuse of Discretion in Disallowing Futile Amendment to Pleadings: Reier Broadcasting Co. (Reier) filed a three-count complaint in July 2002, alleging that defendant university had wrongfully failed to award Reier's radio station a contract to broadcast the university's athletic events. The next month, Reier filed an amended complaint as a matter of right, deleting one of the original claims and adding a new claim. The next month, Reier moved to amend the amended complaint to add a new tort claim. Defendant opposed the motion and sought dismissal of the amended complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Five months later, Reier filed a second motion to amend the amended complaint, requesting leave to seek a declaratory judgment that 18-4-242 was unconstitutional and seeking damages. The District Court dismissed the amended complaint and the first motion to amend because the tort claims had not been properly presented as required by the state tort claims act (Title 2, ch. 9, part 3). The court also dismissed the second motion to amend, and Reier appealed on grounds that it was error not to allow the amendment to address the constitutionality of 18-4-242. The Supreme Court noted that generally it is an abuse of discretion to refuse amendments to pleadings that are offered at a reasonable time and that would further justice, but also noted that futile amendments need not be permitted. Reier's proposed amendments to add a constitutional challenge were futile because Reier failed to take the steps necessary under 2-9-301 to preserve the tort claims, so dismissal of the second motion to amend was not an abuse of discretion. Reier Broadcasting Co., Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ.-Bozeman, 2005 MT 240, 328 M 471, 121 P3d 549 (2005), distinguishing Debcon, Inc. v. Glasgow, 2001 MT 124, 305 M 391, 28 P3d 478 (2001), and Hickey v. Baker School District No. 12, 2002 MT 322, 313 M 162, 60 P3d 966 (2002).

No Error in Denial of Motion to Amend Pleadings to Address Previously Decided Statutory Constitutionality: In Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2002 MT 269, 312 M 320, 59 P3d 398 (2002), the Supreme Court held that a process allowing a landowner to petition for exclusion from an irrigation district was constitutional. The dissent in Geil suggested an additional constitutional argument that was not previously considered, so the irrigation district attempted to amend the pleadings, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that although leave to file amendments to pleadings should be freely granted, a District Court also has discretion to deny amendments to pleadings when justice requires and that denial of a motion to amend will be upheld absent an abuse of that discretion. Noting the length of the proceeding and the fact that the irrigation district brought the new constitutional argument only after the dissent brought it to its attention, the Supreme Court determined that Geil had addressed the constitutionality issues, so further constitutional arguments were barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the irrigation district's effort to amend the pleadings, and the District Court was affirmed. RSG Holdings v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 214, 322 M 369, 96 P3d 1131 (2004). See also Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 217, 322 M 388, 96 P3d 1127 (2004), Petitioners I-549 v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2005 MT 100, 326 M 527, 111 P3d 664 (2005), and Hansen v. Bozeman Police Dept., 2015 MT 143, 379 Mont. 284, 350 P.3d 372.

No Error in Denial of Amended Complaint When Underlying Claim Moot: Plaintiff sought to file an amended complaint based on allegations of defendants' fraud in treating plaintiff's pet dog at defendants' animal clinic. The District Court denied the amended complaint, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The 2-year statute of limitations on the fraud claim had run, rendering the fraud claim futile, so denial of the amended complaint was not an abuse of discretion. Hawkins v. Harney, 2003 MT 58, 314 M 384, 66 P3d 305 (2003).

No Error in Refusal to Allow Amendment of Claim at Final Pretrial Conference to Set Forth New Theory of Recovery: A party may amend its pleading pursuant to this rule by leave of court, and leave must be freely given when justice requires. It is error for a District Court to refuse to permit amendments to pleadings that are offered at a reasonable time and that should be made in the furtherance of justice. Here, the District Court rejected plaintiffs' attempt to amend their claim at the final pretrial conference in order to argue a new theory of recovery, apparently to avoid unnecessary delay and possible prejudice to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs' initial claim addressed easement by necessity, and the amendment would have added a new theory of easement by implication that, although a subspecies of easement by necessity, would have addressed different elements and necessitated different defenses. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing amendments to the claim. Discovery had been closed, and there was no reason shown why plaintiffs could not have raised the issue earlier than in the pretrial memorandum. Loomis v. Luraski, 2001 MT 223, 306 M 478, 36 P3d 862 (2001).

Facts Regarding Spousal Maintenance Known Nearly Twenty-One Months Before Trial — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: Within one month before trial, a wife sought to amend her petition for dissolution of marriage to include a claim for spousal support. The trial court denied the motion as untimely, and the case went to trial as scheduled. The wife appealed on grounds that the court abused its discretion by not freely giving leave to amend the petition. However, the issue of maintenance was not previously part of the case, which had been pending for more than 2 years. The wife's claim was based on facts known to her nearly 21 months earlier, yet she did not raise the issue until the eve of trial. She offered no reason for the delay in filing the motion, nor did she do anything pretrial to bring her maintenance claim to the attention of the court or opposing counsel. To expect the husband to proceed to trial on the maintenance issue without adequate discovery or preparation would have been patently unfair and prejudicial, and the court properly denied the motion to amend. Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000), following Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 M 221, 911 P2d 1153, 53 St. Rep. 135 (1996).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction When Wrongful Discharge Claim Submitted to Arbitration — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator dismissed the arbitration on grounds that federal law applied. Dahl did not object to the District Court's confirmation of the arbitrator's decision but did move for leave to amend the complaint to remove the federal implications. However, the District Court lost jurisdiction when the parties agreed to arbitration, at which point the court had authority only to confirm, modify and confirm, or vacate and remand for hearing pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-314, but not the authority to allow Dahl to amend the complaint. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999).

No Justifiable Basis for Denial of Opportunity to Amend Petition for Postconviction Relief in Death Penalty Case: After being sentenced to death, Kills On Top proposed a number of amendments to his petition for postconviction relief within the time set by the District Court for proposing further amendments. Nevertheless, the court denied the motion to amend based on its determination that the proposed amendments would be futile. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the proposed amendments were timely made and that neither the District Court nor the state provided any justifiable basis for denying the opportunity to amend. Whether one person lives and another dies for conduct alleged to have occurred during the same transaction should not hinge on a District Court's discretionary denial of a motion to amend a petition for postconviction relief, particularly in light of this rule's admonition that leave to amend be freely given when justice requires and the fact that no prejudice to the state was established that would justify denial of the motion to amend. Kills On Top v. St., 279 M 384, 928 P2d 182, 53 St. Rep. 1197 (1996), followed in Nava v. St., 2011 MT 77, 360 Mont. 96, 255 P.3d 53. See Kills On Top v. St., 2000 MT 340, 303 M 164, 15 P3d 422, 57 St. Rep. 1444 (2000), holding that it was harmless error for the District Court to fail to address new claims in its Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Order dismissing petitioner's amended petition for postconviction relief.

Motion to Amend After Partial Summary Judgment Granted Properly Denied: The buyer sued the sellers for specific performance. The sellers moved for leave to amend their answer 2 years after the original pleadings were filed and after the buyer had been granted partial summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that the buyer would be unduly prejudiced by allowing the sellers to amend because the buyer's motion was based on the original pleadings that remained unchanged for 2 years. Litigants should be allowed to change legal theories after a motion for summary judgment has been filed only in extraordinary cases. The District Court was within its discretion in denying the motion to amend the answer. Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 M 221, 911 P2d 1153, 53 St. Rep. 135 (1996), distinguished in First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), in which, after summary judgment was granted and following the discovery of new evidence, leave to amend was allowed in the interests of justice and judicial efficiency, and followed in Stundal v. Stundal, 2000 MT 21, 298 M 141, 995 P2d 420, 57 St. Rep. 108 (2000). Peuse was also distinguished in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000), in which the plaintiff sought to amend his complaint only to add factual allegations to a complaint and not to change or add any legal theory.

No Leave to Amend Granted After Final Judgment: Kincheloes sued the defendants over a royalty interest and were granted summary judgment in District Court, which was reversed on appeal. Kincheloes then moved to amend their pleading to allege a new theory of recovery, and the motion was denied. The Supreme Court noted that the litigation had gone on for nearly 14 years, that if the motion had been granted, it would mean that there was no finality to the case, and that the plaintiffs cannot now include a theory that they neglected with no good reason to include in their original pleading. Because there was no showing to the District Court as to why the new theory was omitted, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. Stanford v. Rosebud County, 254 M 474, 839 P2d 93, 49 St. Rep. 828 (1992), followed, with regard to failure to obtain leave of court, in Edgewater Townhouse Homeowner's Ass'n v. Holtman, 256 M 182, 845 P2d 1224, 50 St. Rep. 10 (1993).

Failure to Provide Basis for Amendment — Leave Denied: Plaintiff filed a motion to amend his complaint after summary judgment was entered against him, but he failed to provide any basis for amendment. His motion consisted of a one-sentence request to amend without any explanation of why he wished to do so. It was within the District Court's discretion to deny the motion to amend. Trout v. Bennett, 252 M 416, 830 P2d 81, 49 St. Rep. 303 (1992).

Amended Complaint Containing New Cause of Action Offered Six Years After Original Complaint — Leave to Amend Properly Denied: t was not an abuse of District Court discretion in a workers' compensation case to deny leave to file a second amended complaint that included a new cause of action and that was filed 6 years after the original complaint and 4 years after the decision in Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), which disallowed retroactive application of certain workers' compensation claims. Donahue v. Convenience Disposal, Inc., 250 M 261, 818 P2d 839, 48 St. Rep. 916 (1991).

Failure, After Discovery, to Raise Facts Sufficient to Withstand Summary Judgment Motion: Bank refused an additional loan requested by borrowers who already had a line of credit, stating that borrowers' only business customer and sole source of income for repayment of the line of credit was 84 days late in payments and appeared incapable of paying its bills. The line of credit provided that it did not constitute a commitment to make future advances and that any future advances would be at bank's discretion. In bank's suit to recover under the line of credit, it was not error to refuse borrowers' motion to amend counterclaims to state a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The line of credit gave bank discretion to deny future loans. There was no evidence that the discretion was misused to deprive borrowers of the benefit of the line of credit. Borrowers, after discovery, failed to raise sufficient facts to withstand a motion for summary judgment on the issue. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

New Claim Lacking Relation Back to Earlier Complaints: Leave to file a proposed third amended complaint, which sought to add new defendants who had no way of predicting from the second amended complaint that the action would be amended to include them as defendants, was considered a new claim that did not relate back to the time of filing the other complaints and was properly denied. Higham v. Red Lodge, 247 M 400, 807 P2d 195, 48 St. Rep. 273 (1991).

Failure to Allow Second and Third Amended Complaints — No Abuse of Discretion: Almost 2 months after the deadline for amending pleadings, the trial court granted plaintiff's first motion to file an amended complaint. When plaintiff failed to file the amended complaint within the extended time granted, the court was well within its discretion in not granting plaintiff's motions to file second and third amended complaints. Had the motions been granted, defendants would have been substantially prejudiced and the trial unduly delayed. Lindey's, Inc. v. Professional Consultants, Inc., 244 M 238, 797 P2d 920, 47 St. Rep. 1570 (1990). See also Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 266 M 1, 878 P2d 870, 51 St. Rep. 610 (1994) , and Wolf v. Williamson, 269 M 397, 889 P2d 1177, 52 St. Rep. 51 (1995).

Amendment to Add Corporation as Plaintiff Against Lender Denied After Corporate Transfer of Interest to Lender: Shareholders' complaint, filed January 6, 1986, included counts of breach of loan agreements, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, negligence, tortious interference with business, and alleged vicarious liability against their lender, Norwest, Inc. (Norwest). On August 11, 1987, shareholders moved to amend their complaint to add their corporation, Nordak Industries, USA, Inc. (Nordak), of which they were sole shareholders and directors, as party plaintiff. The District Court denied amendment after finding that Nordak's claims against Norwest were barred because Nordak expressly and voluntarily transferred and assigned to Norwest all its assets, including legal claims, on August 25, 1983. The District Court also correctly found that any claim Nordak had against Norwest was barred by the statute of limitations because the cause of action against Norwest accrued at the time of the transfer, more than 3 years before the proposed amendment. The denial of leave to amend was clearly an appropriate exception to Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. Walstad v. Norwest Bank of Great Falls, 240 M 322, 783 P2d 1325, 46 St. Rep. 2160 (1989), distinguishing Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115 (1986).

Approach Applicable in Considering Requests to Amend: In refusing to allow leave for filing of a second amended complaint, the District Court relied on the approach outlined in Prentice Lumber Co. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972). In the absence of any apparent or declared reason, the leave sought should be freely given. Reasons include: (1) undue delay; (2) bad faith; (3) dilatory motive on the part of the movant; (4) repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed; (5) undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment; and (6) futility of amendment. Mogan v. Harlem, 238 M 1, 775 P2d 686, 46 St. Rep. 1043 (1989).

Attempt to Introduce Different Cause of Action on Eve of Trial — Amendment Denied: When plaintiff, 2 weeks before trial and more than 4 years after filing the original complaint, attempted to amend the pleadings to introduce a different cause of action, the motion to amend was properly denied. Yellowstone Conference of the United Methodist Church v. D.A. Davidson, Inc., 228 M 288, 741 P2d 794, 44 St. Rep. 1528 (1987).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Unlawful Detainer by Tenant in Common — Amendment of Pleading Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff and her sister leased farmland they owned as tenants in common to the defendant for a 6-year period and the sister conveyed her interest in the property to the defendant shortly before the expiration of the lease, the court did not err, in an action by the plaintiff brought in 1974 for an accounting of rents and profits from the defendant, in refusing to allow the plaintiff to plead and prove an unlawful detainer against the defendant. Leave of court should not be granted to allow amendments that present theories totally inapplicable to the case. As a tenant in common is an owner of an undivided interest in the property, a claim of unlawful detainer may not be asserted against a cotenant but only against a tenant for a term less than life. A cotenant is allowed to possess and use commonly held property, and an action will lie for waste but not unpermitted use. Fry v. Heble, 191 M 272, 623 P2d 963, 38 St. Rep. 228 (1981).

Amended Complaint Same as Dismissed Complaint — Leave Properly Denied: Where the court dismissed appellant's civil action collaterally attacking a previous decree of distribution allegedly based on fraud, there was no error in the order of the court denying leave to file an amended complaint that would raise the same issues again. Estate of Wallace v. McAlear, 186 M 18, 606 P2d 136 (1980).

Claim Against Estate — Statutory Period: In action to recover from an estate for services performed for decedent, the court did not err in denying plaintiffs' motion to amend and supplement a complaint based on contract to include gift theory because the services were performed without expectation of payment and the claim sued upon (gift theory) was not filed within the statutory period. Summary judgment was proper. Ziegler v. Kramer, 175 M 236, 573 P2d 644 (1978).

Judgment Set Aside — Lack of Knowledge by Defendant: Court's discretion was properly exercised when it refused to allow amendment to complaint in order to hold corporate board of directors personally liable for remainder of a default judgment, based on business dealings of which the directors were unaware. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Third Request to Amend Refused: District Court's refusal of leave to amend complaint, after such permission had been granted twice without avail, was not an abuse of discretion. Tillinger v. Frisbie, 138 M 60, 353 P2d 645 (1960).

Material Change of Issues No Abuse of Discretion: After plaintiff had put in his proof and rested his case and defendant introduced some evidence in support of his defense, the court cannot be said to have abused its discretion in refusing an amendment to the answer which would have materially changed the issues. Betor v. Chevalier, 121 M 337, 193 P2d 374 (1948).

Denial of Opportune Amendment as Abuse of Discretion: The matter of permitting amendments of pleadings after issue joined lies within the sound legal discretion of the trial court, but refusal to permit an amendment offered at an opportune time and which should be made in furtherance of justice is an abuse of discretion. State ex rel. Gold Creek Min. Co. v. District Court, 99 M 33, 43 P2d 249 (1935), followed in The Village Bank v. Cloutier, 249 M 25, 813 P2d 971, 48 St. Rep. 561 (1991).

Amendment for Lack of Information: An order refusing a defendant permission to file a second amended complaint on the ground that his attorneys did not have opportunity to secure certain desired information from records in the county seat, 80 miles away, but without a showing why the information could not be obtained or why an application for additional time within which to make filing had not been made to the court, was not an abuse of discretion. Granger v. Erie, 101 M 170, 53 P2d 443 (1935).

Amendment of Deficient Complaint Denied: Whether the court, after a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint has been sustained, will permit plaintiff to amend his pleading is a matter of grace, not of right, unless the circumstances are such that it would be an abuse of discretion to refuse permission to amend. Therefore, refusal to grant permission will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion. Shampagne v. Keplinger, 78 M 114, 252 P 803 (1927).

No Request Made — No Abuse of Discretion: Where the record did not disclose that plaintiff asked leave to amend her complaint after a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) thereto had been sustained or that permission to do so was denied her by the trial court, the court's failure to give her time to amend cannot be said to have been an abuse of its discretion. Shampagne v. Keplinger, 78 M 114, 252 P 803 (1927).

Standard of Appellate Review: After issue is joined, the matter of permitting amendments to pleadings is one addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and before the Supreme Court will hold a refusal of leave to amend to have been in error, appellant must show an abuse of such discretion. Cullen v. W. Mtg. & Warranty Title Co., 47 M 513, 134 P 302 (1913).

Former Rule 15(b). Amendments to conform to the evidence

General 731
Consent to Trial of Issues 733
Discretion of Court 734
Immaterial Variance 735
Material Variance 737

GENERAL

No Error in District Court Refusal to Supplement Record With Stipulated Information Not Addressed at Trial: The District Court decided that Boadle Road was a public road. About 2 months after trial, the parties stipulated that the District Court should supplement the record to apply the evidence pertaining to Boadle Road to also determine the status of another road to which Boadle Road connected, ostensibly to avoid future litigation. The District Court declined to supplement the record, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under this rule, parties may be entitled to an amendment of the pleadings only when the issue was tried by express or implied consent and there was sufficient evidence introduced at trial to support the amendment. In this case, the parties attempted to force the District Court through stipulation to decide an issue not presented at trial. The District Court therefore properly relied on a strict application of Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P., in adhering to the issues in the pretrial order and denying the motion to supplement the record on an issue not addressed at trial. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 394, 325 M 236, 104 P3d 496 (2004), following Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980), and distinguishing Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788 (1987), and Webb v. Wolfe, 230 M 322, 749 P2d 531 (1988).

Failure to Plead Estoppel — Estoppel Raised in Trial Brief — No Evidence of Consent — No Motion to Amend Pleadings: Marsha sought to enforce a written conveyance of partnership property against the estate of a deceased partner by arguing that promissory and equitable estoppel prohibit the estate from claiming that the conveyance was invalid for lack of consideration. The Supreme Court held that estoppel must be pleaded and that, while estoppel was raised in Marsha's trial brief, there was no evidence in the record that the issue of estoppel was tried with the express or implicit consent of the estate and no evidence that Marsha moved to conform her answer to any estoppel evidence adduced before the District Court. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in holding that the issue of estoppel was not correctly before it. Nitzel v. Wickman, 283 M 304, 940 P2d 451, 54 St. Rep. 684 (1997).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987).

Waiver of Provision in Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Properly Before Court: A declaratory judgment action was brought to construe a collective bargaining agreement. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment. The defendant opposed the motion and filed an affidavit in support of its opposition. The plaintiff argued that the affidavit submitted by defendant was inadmissible as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The trial court concluded that no material factual issue existed but denied the motion because of waiver by the plaintiff. The waiver issue was addressed in the affidavit but not in any of the other pleadings. The Supreme Court held that the waiver issue was not properly before the trial court and ordered the trial court to reconsider its denial of the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court also said that the defendant could amend its answer to affirmatively plead waiver. Butte Teachers' Union v. Bd. of Trustees, 201 M 482, 655 P2d 146, 39 St. Rep. 2248 (1982), followed in Columbia Grain Int'l v. Cereck, 258 M 414, 852 P2d 676, 50 St. Rep. 591 (1993).

Attorney Fees — Procedure for Determining Amount: Defendant leased a truck from plaintiff. Defendant defaulted on the lease. Plaintiff sued for amounts owing and prevailed. The lease agreement provided for attorney fees. A motion for fees was filed along with a supporting affidavit. A hearing was held, and the District Court reduced the amount of attorney fees awarded from what was requested. The Supreme Court found nothing improper in the award of attorney fees on appeal. R & W Leasing v. Mosher, 195 M 285, 636 P2d 832, 38 St. Rep. 1857 (1981), followed in Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992).

Amendment to Conform to Evidence — Affirmative Defense: This case was decided under contributory negligence. Plaintiff at the close of his case moved that the pleadings be amended to conform to the evidence and offered an instruction that contributory negligence was not a bar to recovery for injuries caused by the reckless or wanton misconduct of Sanders County. The offered instruction incorrectly defined reckless and wanton misconduct and was properly denied. Implicit in appellant's contention regarding this instruction is the argument that the District Court should have granted the motion to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence. This in effect raised the new issue of affirmative defense. Plaintiff would be entitled to the amendment and to instructions thereunder unless there was no evidence to support the motion to conform. In this case, while evidence of negligence was presented, the evidence was lacking to show the elements necessary to constitute willful, wanton, or reckless negligence. In that situation, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to change or add a legal theory or defense after the introduction of all the evidence. Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980).

Failure to Amend Pleadings — Evidence of Fraud Precluded: When sellers of land argued that the buyers misled them as to the effect of an escrow agreement and warranty deed, estoppel had no application since the court found that sellers possessed a copy of the instruments for a considerable length of time and had ample opportunity to examine them. Furthermore, since sellers failed to plead fraud by amending their pleadings, they were not entitled to present parol evidence to show that these instruments constituted an acceptance of the land under the doctrine of estoppel. Tschache v. Barclay, 172 M 415, 564 P2d 1299 (1977).

Due Process Implications: Leave to amend pleadings to conform to the evidence cannot be arbitrarily granted when issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by consent of the parties. Questions as to due process arise when a party may not have had adequate opportunity to prepare his case for new issues. Brothers v. Surplus Tractor Parts Corp., 161 M 412, 506 P2d 1362 (1973), followed in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 2111 (1987).

Change in Theories as Causing Change in Jury Instructions: Although this rule has been liberally applied in favor of allowing amendment of pleadings to conform to the evidence, where a change in the theory of liability from negligence to breach of contract caused the trial court to submit to the jury instructions based on both theories, which instructions when read as a whole were conflicting, inconsistent, and confusing, trial court erred in denying motion for new trial. Brothers v. Surplus Tractor Parts Corp., 161 M 412, 506 P2d 1362 (1973).

Notice of Claim of Deficiency: Where plaintiff failed to plead claim for deficiency judgment on balance remaining after sale of repossessed vehicles, the pleadings could not later be amended to conform to evidence that would have supported a deficiency judgment. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968).

Recovery Limited by Pleadings — No Implied Consent Without Notice: Generally, a complainant cannot recover beyond the amount prayed for in his complaint. Notwithstanding the provision for issues being tried by express or implied consent after pleadings closed, implied consent will not operate when one party was not put on notice. Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968).

Evidence Made Admissible by Subsequent Amendment: Assuming that the court ruled erroneously in the admission of evidence which was not within the issues of the pleadings at the time, the error was not reversible where the evidence became applicable to the issue as later amended during trial. Walsh v. Kennedy, 115 M 551, 147 P2d 425 (1944).

Delay in Amending — Refusal of Leave Upheld: Where defendant, without any showing in excuse of delay in asking for leave to amend, took no action until 4 weeks had expired after conclusion of the taking of the testimony, the court may not be held to have abused its discretion in refusing leave to amend. Sawyer v. Somers Lumber Co., 86 M 169, 282 P 852 (1929).

Bill of Particulars: Where evidence was admissible under the allegations of the complaint, and the bill of particulars furnished by plaintiff was to meet a definite request not affecting such evidence, the court properly overruled defendant's objection that plaintiff was barred from introducing any evidence upon matters not specifically mentioned in the bill. Rogness v. N. Pac. Ry., 59 M 373, 196 P 989 (1921).

Capacity of Parties Shown on Face of Complaint: Where it is disclosed by proof upon the trial of a cause that the plaintiff is a minor, and the complaint is then amended to show the minority and emancipation of plaintiff, it is error for the court to sustain a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint on the ground of want of legal capacity to sue, but the court, upon the suggestion of plaintiff's minority, should clothe him with capacity to sue by the appointment of a guardian, and allow amendment of his complaint by inserting the name of such guardian. Hoskins v. White, 13 M 70, 32 P 163 (1893).

CONSENT TO TRIAL OF ISSUES

Subdivision Covenant Containing One Hundred Foot Setback Restriction and One-Garage Restriction — Implied Consent to Trial of Garage Restriction — Amendment of Pleadings: Defendants constructed a building on their subdivision property. Plaintiffs sued because the building violated a 100-foot setback restriction. During trial, defendant testified that the building was intended to be used as a second garage. Plaintiffs sought to amend the pleadings to include a violation of a one-garage restriction that was also part of the covenants. The District Court did not rule on the motion to amend the pleadings, but nevertheless held in favor of plaintiffs, finding that defendants violated both the 100-foot restriction and the one-garage restriction, and ordered removal of the garage. On appeal, defendants contended that the trial court erred in addressing the garage issue because it was not included in the pleadings. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under this rule, issues not raised by the pleadings may be tried by the express or implied consent of the parties, in which case the pleadings may be amended to conform to the issues actually litigated. Having raised the issue during direct examination, defendants impliedly consented to its subsequent litigation. Defendants' argument that the motion to amend the pleadings was not timely, because it was not made at trial, also failed. The rule allows amendment of the pleadings at any time, even after judgment. Armbrust v. York, 2003 MT 36, 314 M 260, 65 P3d 239 (2003). See also Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046 (1992).

Rule Inapplicable to Change From Joint to Sole Custody When Parties Do Not Consent: The District Court cited this rule in concluding that the issue of modifying only the physical custody provisions of a joint custody decree, rather than a modification from joint to sole custody, was raised by express or implied consent of the parties at the hearing. The court's reliance on this rule was misplaced because the father clearly sought sole custody and thus did not consent to the issue, nor did the mother consent, objecting throughout the proceedings that the court was applying an improper standard in modifying custody. In re Marriage of Frydenlund, 255 M 474, 844 P2d 58, 49 St. Rep. 1074 (1992).

Failure to Consent to Trial of Suretyship Issue — No Abuse in Failing to Amend Pleadings: The record was replete with objections raised by plaintiff in response to defendant's attempt to interject evidence into trial concerning the issue of whether a surety relationship existed, making it clear that plaintiff did not consent either explicitly or implicitly to litigation of the suretyship issue. It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to not order the pleadings amended to reflect that issue. Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992).

Implied Consent to Determination of Rent Amount: Plaintiff requested only a declaratory judgment, not a court determination of the rent amount owed pursuant to the lease. Plaintiff, however, failed to object to the defendants' many exhibits concerning the cost-of-living index and property tax and utility expenditures, all relating to the rent amount. By failing to object, the plaintiff impliedly consented to the rent amount being determined by the court. Lemley v. Bozeman Community Hotel Co., 200 M 470, 651 P2d 979, 39 St. Rep. 1877 (1982).

Implied Consent: There was implied consent of the parties for the trial of issues not raised in the pleadings when evidence is introduced without objection. Reilly v. Maw, 146 M 145, 405 P2d 440 (1965).

Failure to Allege General Damages: Plaintiff's failure to allege general damages in a separate paragraph was not error because defendant never raised the issue during trial and this rule clearly allows nonpleaded issues to be tried by implied consent. Greenup v. Community Transit Co., 145 M 39, 399 P2d 418 (1965).

Life Insurance — Failure to Object to Admission of Incontestability Clause: Contention that plaintiff in an action to recover on a life insurance certificate issued by a fraternal society could not rely on an incontestable clause therein because of failure to plead it was without merit, where the certificate containing the clause was offered in evidence without objection and was before the court; plaintiff's pleadings were considered amended to conform to the proof, if necessary to sustain the judgment in plaintiff's favor. Stevens v. Woodmen of the World, 105 M 121, 71 P2d 898 (1937).

Failure to Object to Complaint — Evidence Admitted: Where complaint was not attacked for insufficiency as to the allegations of gross negligence until after plaintiff's testimony had been received, but evidence relating to such negligence was admitted without objection, the pleading will be considered amended at the trial to conform to the proof if necessary to affirm the judgment. Baatz v. Noble, 105 M 59, 69 P2d 579 (1937).

Constructive Amendment by Failure to Object: Where plaintiff is permitted, without objection by defendant, to introduce testimony not warranted by the allegations of his complaint, the pleading will on appeal be regarded as having been amended to admit the proof, if necessary to sustain the judgment. Baker v. Union Assurance Soc'y of London, 81 M 281, 264 P 132 (1928).

Failure to Object Not to Preclude Dismissal: Defendant is not precluded from moving for a nonsuit (nonsuit abolished by repeal, sec. 84, Ch. 13, L. 1961) upon the ground of a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof, by his failure to object to the introduction of testimony by plaintiff. Kalispell Liquor & Tobacco Co. v. McGovern, 33 M 394, 84 P 709 (1905).

DISCRETION OF COURT

Consideration of Timeliness, Good Cause, and Potential Prejudice — Motion to Amend Pleading Properly Denied: In a breach of contract case related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store, the parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, but plaintiff then asserted that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment and requested to amend the pleadings some 4 months after the deadline to amend. Defendant objected to the proposed amendment, and the District Court ultimately declined to allow plaintiff to amend the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court considered several factors in evaluating whether to allow amendment, including the timeliness of the request, whether plaintiff showed good cause to amend, and whether the late amendment would prejudice defendant. The initial complaint did not include an alleged violation of an oral agreement, and defendant's case rested on proof that the full purchase price had been paid. Allowing the amendment potentially prejudiced that defense, so denial of the motion to amend was not error. Once the motion to amend was properly dismissed, there were no issues of material fact remaining, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 286, 339 M 445, 171 P3d 690 (2007).

Amendment of Pretrial Order to Include Attorney Fees Not Listed in Pretrial Order — No Requirement to Plead Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution Case: During the second day of trial in a marriage dissolution case, the wife offered copies of her attorney fee bills, and the District Court, over the husband's objection, allowed the pretrial order to be amended on the issue of attorney fees. The husband cited Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729 (1992), and contended that because the wife made no showing of manifest injustice, as required by Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P., to modify the pleadings, the District Court erred by awarding the wife her attorney fees and costs when they were not listed in the pretrial order. The Supreme Court distinguished Naftco, noting that that case was not a dissolution action and that the trial court in Naftco never had the opportunity to consider amending the pleadings at trial. Further, Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P., must be read together with this rule, which requires a showing by the objecting party that amendment of the pleadings would be prejudicial. The husband never claimed prejudice or sought a continuance to enable him to meet the wife's attorney fee evidence. Although it is good practice to plead attorney fees, it is not required in marriage dissolution actions under 40-4-110. Rather, that section gives the trial court the discretion to order payment from time to time, after considering the financial resources of the parties. The husband failed to demonstrate an abuse of the court's discretion, and the Supreme Court affirmed the fee award. In re Marriage of Schmieding, 2000 MT 237, 301 M 336, 9 P3d 52, 57 St. Rep. 983 (2000).

Amendment of Answer at End of Trial — Discretion of Court to Allow Amended Pleadings to Conform to Evidence: At the end of trial, the District Court allowed defendants to amend their answer to raise a statute of limitations defense to plaintiff's fraud claim. Plaintiff contended that defendants' waived their statute of limitations defense by failing to set it forth in the pleadings. However, nothing in Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P., precludes the trial court from allowing a party to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence under this rule. Keller v. Dooling, 248 M 535, 813 P2d 437, 48 St. Rep. 554 (1991).

Prayer for Relief Amended — Evidence of Additional Damages Properly Allowed: Where the plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance to compel the defendant to convey certain real property to them in accordance with an option contract, the trial court did not err in allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint to include a prayer for damages occasioned by the defendant's refusal to convey the property and in allowing the plaintiffs to introduce evidence of damages suffered subsequent to the filing of the complaint. It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow amendment of the pleadings if the objecting party fails to demonstrate that he would be prejudiced thereby. Here, the defendant made no motion for a continuance to meet the evidence offered by the plaintiffs. No abuse of the discretion of the trial court was shown. Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376, 38 St. Rep. 194 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Welch/Phillips, 257 M 222, 848 P2d 500, 50 St. Rep. 240 (1993).

Prejudice to Be Shown for Reversal: Application to amend pleading to conform to proof is addressed to sound legal discretion of trial judge, and Supreme Court will not reverse a judgment on the ground of abuse of such discretion in absence of affirmative showing of prejudice to the adverse party. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

Allowance of Amendment as the Rule: The matter of allowing amendments to pleadings during trial rests in the discretion of the court, permission to make them being the rule, refusal of permission the exception. Hence, in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion, permission to amend the complaint to conform to the proof given at the close of the testimony may not be held error. Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933).

Standard of Appellate Review: A pleading may be amended so as to correspond with the proof. The application to amend is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and, in the absence of any abuse of such discretion, the action of the trial court will be approved on appeal. Sandeen v. Russell Lumber Co., 45 M 273, 122 P 913 (1912).

IMMATERIAL VARIANCE

Theory of Contract Action — Quantum Meruit and Express Contract: In action by contractors against defendants to recover for work and labor alleged to have been performed and for materials alleged to have been furnished and delivered to defendants, there was no fatal variance which misled or prejudiced defendants when the complaint, although based on theory of quantum meruit, alleged that the labor and materials were furnished at the special instance and request of defendants, and an express contract, full performance of which was prevented by defendants, was proven at trial. Puetz v. Carlson, 139 M 373, 364 P2d 742 (1961).

Lack of Prejudice — Nonsuit Unjustified: A variance which does not mislead the defendant to his prejudice is insufficient to warrant the granting of a nonsuit. Arrow Agency v. Anderson, 137 M 494, 355 P2d 929 (1960), overruled in Puetz v. Carlson, 139 M 373, 364 P2d at 747 (1961); Wilcox v. Newman, 58 M 54, 190 P 138 (1920).

Variance in Rental Values: Where, in action to recover value of use and occupancy, plaintiff claimed damages measured on a certain basis, and defendant denied that it had any rental value, the fact that a different rental value than that alleged in the complaint was proved was not a material variance. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

Variance in Value of Labor: In action to recover balance allegedly due for work performed in clearing land, variance between complaint alleging that value of clearing 9½ acres was $150 an acre and proof that value of such work was $225 an acre was not a material variation. Metcalf v. Barnard-Curtiss Co., 120 M 50, 180 P2d 263 (1947).

Waiver of Objection to Variance: Unless appellant relying upon an alleged variance between pleading and proof was misled thereby, it will be considered immaterial. In any event, if the question of variance was not called to the attention of the trial court, appellant will not be heard to complain thereof for the first time on appeal. Nadeau v. Texas Co., 104 M 558, 69 P2d 586 (1937).

Recovery of Rent and Damages for Breach of Contract: When the purpose of an action by a tenant was merely to recover an advance payment of rent because of refusal of defendant to deliver possession of the premises, and not one for damages for breach of contract, and the complaint alleged the renting of two rooms while plaintiff's evidence referred to the renting of but one, the variance was immaterial. Rhule v. Thrasher, 88 M 468, 295 P 266 (1930).

F.E.L.A. Action — Error to Grant Nonsuit: An action was brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act against a railway company by a section hand for personal injuries alleged in the complaint to have been sustained while unloading ties from a gondola car through the negligence of a fellow servant in dislodging a tie from the top of a pile which struck plaintiff, causing the injury. The plaintiff's proof was to the contrary, showing that the tie was pried loose by the fellow servant from another tie to which it was frozen, the two standing against the side of the car. This variance was immaterial and the court in holding it fatal and granting a nonsuit (nonsuit abolished by repeal, sec. 84, Ch. 13, L. 1961) committed error, particularly so in the absence of any suggestion that defendant was surprised or misled in maintaining its defense by having to meet issues not pleaded. Kakos v. Byram, 88 M 309, 292 P 909 (1930).

Motion for Directed Verdict Contrary to Defense: Where appellant does not claim that he was misled to his prejudice in making his defense or surprised by having to meet issues at the trial which were not pleaded, and especially where his motion for a directed verdict on the ground of variance appears contrary to the theory of the defense pleaded in his answer, the motion was properly denied. Webber v. Mass. Bonding & Ins. Co., 81 M 351, 263 P 101 (1928).

Injury at Railroad Crossing — Instruction on Variance Properly Refused: Where the complaint in a personal injury action charged that plaintiff was injured by the act of defendants in suddenly and without warning lowering and dropping upon plaintiff a gate arm while the latter was passing over a crossing in an automobile, while plaintiff's testimony showed that instead of the gate being dropped upon plaintiff, the driver saw it descending but was unable to stop the automobile, with the result that the end of the gate arm scraped by the windshield and struck plaintiff, an instruction that the jury should find for defendants because of a fatal variance was properly refused. Peabody v. N. Pac. Ry., 80 M 492, 261 P 261 (1927).

Lack of Surprise — Failure to Present Witness: Where an alleged variance between the allegations of the complaint and proof is so slight that it could not have misled defendant or prejudiced his defense, and it does not appear that his counsel was surprised or did not have present witnesses whom they could otherwise have had, it will be considered immaterial. Peabody v. N. Pac. Ry., 80 M 492, 261 P 261 (1927).

Damage to Irrigation Canal: If there was a variance between plaintiff's allegation that one of the banks of defendant's irrigating canal was not sufficient to withstand the pressure of the water in the canal and his proof indicating cutting away of the bank by overflow, it was immaterial, the record showing that defendant was neither surprised nor prejudiced thereby. Watts v. Billings Bench Water Ass'n, 78 M 199, 253 P 260 (1927).

Guaranty on Account Due: Where plaintiff sued on a guaranty of a note and the guaranty in terms showed that it was a guaranty of an account due plaintiff for which the note was given, the variance between the pleading and the proof was immaterial. Schauer v. Morgan, 67 M 455, 216 P 347 (1923).

Employment Contracts — No Prejudice to Defendant: Plaintiff alleged one contract in his complaint under which defendant employed him as a farm hand at a specified wage. His evidence disclosed that he worked under a number of different agreements as to the kind of work to be performed and wages to be paid. In view of the matters alleged in the answer which required defendant to go into the entire matter of his employment of plaintiff and the wages to be paid at different times and for different periods, defendant could not have been misled to his prejudice in maintaining his defense on the merits, and therefore the variance was immaterial. Wasley v. Dryden, 66 M 17, 212 P 491 (1923).

Negligent Injury by Hand Tools: In an action for personal injuries the complaint which alleged that while plaintiff, a section foreman, was assisting in moving a rail his coemployees negligently permitted it to drop and strike an iron bar plaintiff was using causing the bar to strike plaintiff, etc., whereas plaintiff's evidence showed that the bar was inserted in a hole in the rail which in turning carried with it the bar, striking plaintiff, the variance between pleading and proof was immaterial. Stevens v. Hines, 63 M 94, 206 P 441 (1922).

Assignment of Action or Assignment of Benefits: The variance between plaintiff's allegation asserting ownership of a claim for damages to livestock, by reason of an assignment of it to him by the owner thereof, and evidence to the effect that such owner had merely assigned the claim to plaintiff for the purpose of suit and collection, reserving in himself the beneficiary interest in the result of the action, was immaterial and not one of substance, the defendant not having been prejudiced in its defense by the fact that plaintiff held only a limited and not the actual ownership of the thing in action. Rice v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 59 M 570, 197 P 999 (1921).

Characterization of Facts — Action for Services Rendered: Where the plaintiff brought an action for services rendered, consisting of cooking, washing, and caring for the defendant, and for groceries, fuel, and other supplies furnished to the defendant, there was no variance where the evidence showed that the plaintiff "boarded" the defendant, and that the cooking and the furnishing of the food and fuel for that purpose were part of the "boarding". Even if there were a variance it would be immaterial as the defendant was not misled to his prejudice in making his defense upon the merits. Matoole v. Sullivan, 55 M 363, 177 P 254 (1918).

Libel and Slander: Section 93-3901, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 15(b), M.R.Civ.P.), declaring immaterial nonprejudicial variances between pleadings and proof, applied as well to cases of libel and slander as to all others. Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 M 222, 157 P 958 (1916).

Action for Ejectment — Time and Manner of Payment: Where, in an action for ejectment, defendants relied upon a contract for the sale of the premises and the evidence, though not technically corresponding to the allegations of the answer, did support them in their general scope and meaning, the divergence relating to the mode and time of payment of the final installment of the purchase money only, a finding in favor of plaintiff on the ground of variance was error. Milwaukee Land Co. v. Ruesink, 50 M 489, 148 P 396 (1915).

Reversal Not Required: An immaterial variance will not work a reversal. Milwaukee Land Co. v. Ruesink, 50 M 489, 148 P 396 (1915); Am. Livestock & Loan Co. v. Great N. Ry., 48 M 495, 138 P 1102 (1914), distinguished in Baron v. Botsford, 108 M 356, 90 P2d 510 (1939); Stewart v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 44 M 160, 119 P 568 (1911).

Substantial Rights Not Affected: Immaterial variances not affecting the substantial rights of the parties will be disregarded on appeal. Willoburn Ranch Co. v. Yegen, 49 M 101, 140 P 231 (1914).

Lack of Substantial Variation Required: If plaintiff's proof follows substantially the allegations of the complaint, a slight, technical variance is immaterial. Wertz v. Lamb, 43 M 477, 117 P 89 (1911).

Prejudice by Surprise at Trial: A party will not be heard to complain that he was misled to his prejudice by a variance unless he was surprised at the trial by having to meet issues not pleaded. Frederick v. Hale, 42 M 153, 112 P 70 (1910).

Technical Description of Accident: Where, in a personal injury action against a street railway company, the complaint alleged that plaintiff, in attempting to board a streetcar, was injured by the car suddenly moving forward, and the evidence revealed that he was thrown from the car by a backward movement, but it did not appear that defendant was misled or its counsel surprised by this technical departure in the proof, the court properly overruled a motion for a new trial on the ground of variance. Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry., 38 M 222, 99 P 837 (1909).

New Trial Not to Be Granted: A defendant is not entitled to a new trial on the ground of variance where he was not misled. Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry., 38 M 222, 99 P 837 (1909).

Water Rights Action Appellants Not Misled: The judgment in favor of plaintiff in a water right suit will not be reversed because of an alleged variance between the proof introduced to establish his right and an allegation in his replication, as indicated by a finding of the court, where the record does not disclose that appellants were misled to their prejudice. The variance will be considered immaterial. Vreeland v. Edens, 35 M 413, 89 P 735 (1907).

Allegation of Negligence — Substantial Justice Done: Where the complaint alleged that a railroad company so negligently managed its locomotive and cars as to kill an animal, and the proof showed that the animal had been fatally injured and was killed by a section boss of defendant to end its sufferings, defendant was not misled by the variance and, substantial justice having been done, a judgment in favor of plaintiff should not be reversed. Poindexter & Orr Live Stock Co. v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 33 M 338, 83 P 886 (1905).

Lack of Prejudice — Basis for Action Not Changed: It is not error for the court to allow an amendment to a pleading after the evidence is in, in order that the allegations may correspond with the proofs adduced, where such amendment does not change the nature of the action or mislead the adverse party to his prejudice. Williston v. Camp, 9 M 88, 22 P 501 (1889).

MATERIAL VARIANCE

Full-Time Employment Wage Disparity Not Pleaded in Sex Discrimination Case — Improper Amendment of Pleadings by Hearings Examiner to Include Full-Time Employment Claim — Reversal of Commission Order Affirmed: Sprow brought an employment discrimination case, claiming that because of her sex, she was paid less than other employees at plaintiff's corporation. Sprow had started the job as a full-time employee, but received a pay decrease upon moving to part-time work, at which time she discovered the pay disparity between part-time employees and filed the claim. The hearings examiner reported that plaintiff had provided a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for paying Sprow less as a part-time employee, but that Sprow had established that for full-time work, Sprow was as qualified as other workers. The hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff had discriminated against Sprow based on pay discrepancies in her full-time employment. In order to reach that conclusion, the hearings examiner amended the original pleadings, which only alleged discrimination regarding part-time employment. Plaintiff appealed to District Court, and the court reversed on grounds that the court had no jurisdiction to determine discrimination in full-time employment because Sprow's complaint concerned only part-time wage disparity. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Sprow never pleaded wage disparity in full-time employment, the hearings examiner erred by inserting the issue into the pleadings, and the Commission for Human Rights erred by concluding that Sprow had alleged full-time wage disparity based on the improperly amended pleadings. The District Court properly reversed in favor of plaintiff. Centech Corp. v. Sprow, 2006 MT 27, 331 M 98, 128 P3d 1036 (2006).

Contract Action — Failure of Proof Not Variance: Where contract alleged was not proven but rather an attempt was made to prove an entirely different contract, there was not a variance but a failure of proof on behalf of the plaintiff. Fraser v. Williams, 140 M 66, 367 P2d 769 (1962).

Substance of Cause of Action to Be Proved: Where there is such a divergence between the issues tendered by plaintiff and the evidence that it cannot be said that plaintiff has proved in substance the cause of action alleged, there is a variance which amounts to a failure of proof. Kakos v. Byram, 88 M 309, 292 P 909 (1930).

Conversion of Grain Crop — Right to Possession: In an action against a Sheriff for the conversion of a mortgaged crop of grain, there was a fatal variance between pleading and proof where the complaint of plaintiff mortgagee alleged that his right of possession to the crop was by virtue of the lien growing out of the mortgage, whereas the proof showed that he went into possession under an agreement entered into between him and the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage. Torgerson v. Stocke, 72 M 7, 230 P 1096 (1924), distinguished in Bennett v. Dodgson, 129 M 228, 284 P2d 990 (1955).

Joint Contract — Number of Defendants: The fact that a complaint in an action on a contract alleges a joint contract with several defendants, and the evidence discloses a separate contract with some of them, is not a variance amounting to a failure of proof. Chealey v. Purdy, 54 M 489, 171 P 926 (1918). See Lee v. Hayden, 63 M 589, 208 P 596 (1922).

Contract Pleaded in Complaint: Where the plaintiff has given notice in his complaint that he relies on a written contract pleaded therein, and that the defendant must be prepared to meet the claim of a breach of it, he may not at the trial prove the pleaded contract as materially modified unless the court has, on request, allowed him to amend and given time to the defendant to plead to the amended complaint. Ryan Co. v. Russell, 52 M 596, 161 P 307 (1916).

Contract Action — Variance as Failure of Proof: Where one contract is pleaded and another is proved, or where the complaint alleges one breach of duty and the evidence establishes a different one, the variance amounts to a failure of proof upon the occurrence of which a nonsuit is proper. Am. Livestock & Loan Co. v. Great N. Ry., 48 M 495, 138 P 1102 (1914), distinguished in Baron v. Botsford, 108 M 356, 90 P2d 510 (1939).

Variance First Raised on Appeal: The losing party will not be heard to assert on appeal, for the first time, that there was a fatal variance. Mosher v. Sutton's New Theater Co., 48 M 137, 137 P 534 (1913).

Cause of Action to Be Proved After Amendment: If, in the opinion of the court, the evidence presents a material variance, it may direct an amendment upon proper terms, but it cannot submit the case to the jury upon evidence tending to establish a cause of action wholly outside the issues, without according to the defendant full opportunity to controvert it with his proof. McCrimmon v. Murray, 43 M 457, 117 P 73 (1911).

Failure of Proof Not a Variance: When the cause of action pleaded is unproved, it is not a mere variance but a failure of proof. Knuckey v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 314, 109 P 979 (1910).

Different Contracts: Where the contract upon which recovery is had is wholly different from the one set forth in the complaint, the variance is not to be considered immaterial, but must be considered a failure of proof. Kalispell Liquor & Tobacco Co. v. McGovern, 33 M 394, 84 P 709 (1905), distinguished in Baron v. Botsford, 108 M 356, 90 P2d 510 (1939), and Bennett v. Dodgson, 129 M 228, 284 P2d 990 (1955).

Forcible Entry: Where, in an action for a forcible entry under subsection (1) of 70-27-102, the evidence showed a peaceable entry, and a subsequent forcible turning out of plaintiff, which conduct is made a forcible entry by subsection (2) of said section, the variance was such as to constitute a failure of proof. Spellman v. Rhode, 33 M 21, 81 P 395 (1905), distinguished in Frederick v. Hale, 42 M 153, 112 P 70 (1910). See Forsell v. Pittsburgh & Mont. Copper Co., 38 M 403, 100 P 218 (1909).

Former Rule 15(c). Relation back of amendments

Relation Back Doctrine — Error in Timely Filed Complaint — Equitable Factors to Consider — Reversed and Remanded for Further Analysis: The attorney for the plaintiff limited liability corporation (LLC) did not perform a final review of an agreement before his client signed it. Unknown to the plaintiff and its attorney, the other contracting party had made several substantive changes to the agreement. The LLC later sued its attorney for malpractice. The complaint was signed by a shareholder of the plaintiff LLC and filed in Lake County in 2007. Eleven days later, the plaintiff filed a complaint against the contracting party. This complaint, however, was filed in Flathead County and signed by an attorney. After settling with the other contracting party, the plaintiff filed a successful motion to transfer the malpractice action to Flathead County. The plaintiff then filed an amended malpractice complaint, in 2010, that was signed by counsel. The defendants filed a motion for the District Court to declare the 2007 Lake County complaint null and void because it had not been signed by an attorney. The defendants also filed a motion for summary judgment based on the expiration of the statute of limitations on the amended complaint. The District Court granted both motions and the plaintiff appealed. The plaintiff argued that even though a corporation cannot file a complaint pro se, the defect was curable and the 2010 amended complaint related back to the timely filed 2007 pro se complaint. In a matter of first impression, the Supreme Court concluded that when a corporation files a complaint pro se, a court will consider certain equitable factors to determine whether the complaint relates back to a timely filed pleading, such as when the corporation had knowledge that it could not file a pleading pro se, how much time elapsed before the corporation corrected the error, and whether the other party was prejudiced by the mistake. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court to consider those factors. H & H Dev., LLC v. Ramlow, 2012 MT 51, 364 Mont. 283, 272 P.3d 657.

Failure to Allow Amendment of Affidavit Contesting Air Quality Permit — Prejudice to Substantial Rights Warranting Reversal: Plaintiffs moved to amend an affidavit contesting the issuance of an air quality permit. The Board of Environmental Review denied the motion and the District Court affirmed the Board's decision. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P., did not prevent plaintiffs from amending the affidavit, and the error prevented plaintiffs from raising potentially meritorious claims, which prejudiced plaintiffs' substantial rights and warranted reversal under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. Additionally, 75-2-211(10) did not bar amendment of the original affidavit. The Supreme Court noted that it would make little sense and would not foster resolution of contested cases on the merits to foreclose the possibility of amendments before significant discovery occurred. Citizens Awareness Network v. Bd. of Envtl. Review, 2010 MT 10, 355 Mont. 60, 227 P.3d 583.

Applicability of Fictitious Name Statute and Misnomer Rule to Similarly Named Defendants — Relation Back of Amended Complaint: Molina was injured on a construction site, and filed a complaint against Panco, Inc., a Washington corporation that he believed to be the general contractor, for failing to supervise the job site and to provide a safe place to work. Molina also named fictitious defendants John Does I-III in the complaint. After the complaint was served but before Panco, Inc., filed a responsive pleading, Molina learned that there were two different corporations in Washington with similar names, so he filed an amended complaint naming the true contractor, Panco Construction, Inc., and retaining the additional fictitious defendants. Panco Construction, Inc., then filed its answer and moved for summary judgment, listing as an affirmative defense that the action was barred by the statute of limitations because the amended complaint was filed 3 months and 3 days after the limitation for negligence claims in 27-2-204. Molina asserted that the statute of limitations did not apply because under 25-5-103, a fictitiously named defendant is party to the action from its commencement so the statute of limitations stops running as to the fictitious party on the date that the original complaint is filed. Molina also contended that under this rule, an amended complaint relates back to the date of the original complaint when the amended complaint revolves around the same operative facts as the original complaint. Molina then moved to amend the complaint, asking that the District Court rule that the amended complaint sufficed to substitute Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I or, alternatively, that Molina be allowed to file a second amended complaint substituting Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I. Molina then moved to dismiss Panco, Inc., as a defendant. The District Court subsequently granted the motion of Panco Construction, Inc., for summary judgment without ruling on Molina's motion to amend the complaint. Molina appealed, contending that Panco Construction, Inc., was not a new party to the action, but rather a presently identified, formerly fictitiously named defendant that should be considered a party from the filing of the original complaint. Panco Construction, Inc., argued that: (1) Molina had attempted to entirely replace a mistakenly named defendant with a correctly named defendant without meeting the notice requirements of this rule; (2) it was not a fictitiously named defendant under 25-5-103 because due diligence on Molina's part would have revealed the true identity of the defendant; and (3) Molina was precluded from arguing the applicability of Rule 4E(2), M.R.Civ.P., on appeal because the issue was never raised in District Court. The Supreme Court reversed based on the District Court's incorrect assumption that it orally granted Molina's motion to file an amended complaint and on its failure to rule on the motion to amend the complaint. The case was remanded for consideration of the motion to amend the complaint in conjunction with Rule 4E(2), M.R.Civ.P., and of the effect that that rule may or may not have on 25-5-103, the fictitious name statute, and this rule, the misnomer rule. Molina v. Panco Constr. Inc., 2002 MT 136, 310 M 185, 49 P3d 570 (2002). On remand, the District Court concluded that Molina was not ignorant of defendant's name because, even though Molina was misinformed by the Washington Secretary of State, he nevertheless knew defendant's true corporate name, so summary judgment was granted to defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed and remanded again. Under a liberal interpretation of 25-5-103, Molina was allowed to substitute defendant's real name for one of the John Doe defendants in the original complaint because he had no reason to believe that the wrong name had been supplied by the Washington Secretary of State, and even though he knew that the identity of the defendant whom he sought to name from the outset was the general contractor of the job on which he was injured, he relied on the incorrect information and thus was ignorant of the contractor's true legal name at the time that the complaint was filed. Molina v. Panco Constr., Inc., 2004 MT 198, 322 M 268, 95 P3d 687 (2004).

Failure to Effectuate Insurance Settlement in Good Faith as Independent Cause of Action: Under 33-18-201, an insurer is required to attempt in good faith to effectuate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements of claims in which liability has become reasonably clear. A violation of this provision gives rise to an independent cause of action under 33-18-242. Because the continuing duty of good faith is not ended by commencement of a lawsuit by an insured, that duty can be breached by an insurer's postfiling conduct, including the actions of attorneys conducting the insurer's defense. Amendment of the claim to include an action under 33-18-242 related back to the original claim and was properly allowed. Further, third-party defendant's alleged failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and its subsequent refusal to pay the claim, although occurring more than 2 years before commencement of plaintiff's cause of action, were, if proved, ostensibly part of the bad faith postjudgment conduct. Thus, the evidence of those acts was not time-barred. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999), following Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), and Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Amended Complaint After Running of Statute of Limitations for Amended Complaint's Claim: L&R Spraying sprayed Semenza's land and Fitzgerald's land, which Semenza custom farmed. Semenza sued L&R for negligent spraying that allegedly damaged crops on both owners' farms. After the 2-year statute of limitations for injury to property ran out, Fitzgerald sought to be added as a party. Since Fitzgerald's claim arose out of conduct set forth in Semenza's original pleading, the amended complaint adding Fitzgerald as a party with the same cause of action related back to the date of Semenza's original pleading and thus was not barred by the statute of limitations. In addition, the 3-year negligent tort statute of limitations also applied, and when two statutes of limitations apply, the court should use the longer one. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Misnomer Rule Allowing Amendment of Complaint, Not Judgment — Inapplicable When New Party Would Be Added by Allowing Amendment: The "misnomer rule" derived from this rule allows a party to amend a complaint to name a defendant after the running of the applicable statute of limitations so that the amended complaint relates back to the date of the original complaint for statute of limitations purposes. The rule applies when the correct party is sued, but the name in the complaint is merely misspelled or a subsidiary corporation is named rather than the parent corporation. The rule does not apply to situations in which an entirely new party would be added to the litigation by allowing the amendment. Most importantly, the rule applies to the amendment of pleadings, not to the amendment of a judgment, including a default judgment. Jerry Martin & Associates, Inc. v. Don's Westland Bulk, 267 M 464, 884 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 1119 (1994).

Original Complaint and Proposed Amendment Not Sharing Same Operative Facts — Amendment Denied: When the original complaint and the proposed amendment did not share the same operative facts involving acts and omissions by different individuals, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that because the proposed amendment did not arise from the same conduct, transaction, or occurrence as the original complaint and the amendment did not relate back to the filing of the original complaint, amending the complaint to add additional claims was improper because the statute of limitations for those causes of action had expired. Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 266 M 1, 878 P2d 870, 51 St. Rep. 610 (1994).

Relation Back — Joinder of Additional Parties Not Barred by Statute of Limitations: Berlin sued Boedecker, and 7 ½ years after the transaction that was the basis of the suit joined Boedecker Resources, Inc., of which Boedecker was the owner. Boedecker argued that the joinder of the corporation was precluded by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that under this rule, parties may be dropped or added at any time and that when so added, the addition relates back to the date of filing of the original action. In this case, the requirements of this rule were fulfilled because the party to be joined was involved in the transaction at issue, the original action was filed within the period of time for bringing suit against the party to be joined, the party sued in the original action was acting as an agent for the party to be joined, and Boedecker had extensively intermingled his funds with those of the corporation. The joined party was therefore not prejudiced by a lack of notice. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994).

Amended Complaint for Retaliatory Termination as Relating Back to Employment Discrimination Complaint: After Simmons returned from a leave of absence from employment with Mountain Bell because of a back injury, she was demoted for absenteeism. She then filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission, alleging employment discrimination. Later, Simmons was terminated for insubordination, whereupon she filed an amended complaint with the Commission, approximately 1 year after the filing of her original complaint, alleging retaliatory termination. A hearing examiner for the Commission held that the second complaint by Simmons was barred as being beyond the 180-day limit contained in 49-2-501. The District Court reversed, holding that the second complaint related back to the filing of the first. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that under this rule, the amended complaint for termination arose from the filing of the employment discrimination charge and thus arose from the same conduct for the purposes of computing time under this rule. Simmons v. Mtn. Bell, 246 M 205, 806 P2d 6, 47 St. Rep. 1857 (1990).

Amendment to Add Corporation as Plaintiff Against Lender Denied After Corporate Transfer of Interest to Lender: Shareholders' complaint, filed January 6, 1986, included counts of breach of loan agreements, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, negligence, tortious interference with business, and alleged vicarious liability against their lender, Norwest, Inc. (Norwest). On August 11, 1987, shareholders moved to amend their complaint to add their corporation, Nordak Industries, USA, Inc. (Nordak), of which they were sole shareholders and directors, as party plaintiff. The District Court denied amendment after finding that Nordak's claims against Norwest were barred because Nordak expressly and voluntarily transferred and assigned to Norwest all its assets, including legal claims, on August 25, 1983. The District Court also correctly found that any claim Nordak had against Norwest was barred by the statute of limitations because the cause of action against Norwest accrued at the time of the transfer, more than 3 years before the proposed amendment. The denial of leave to amend was clearly an appropriate exception to this rule. Walstad v. Norwest Bank of Great Falls, 240 M 322, 783 P2d 1325, 46 St. Rep. 2160 (1989), distinguishing Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115 (1986).

Mistake as to Identity of Proper Parties: The District Court did not err in allowing plaintiffs to amend their complaint pursuant to this rule to name certain school district employees as new parties after the expiration of the statute of limitations. There was no mistake as to the identity of the school district employees who were involved in the circumstances that led to the filing of this negligence suit, but there was a mistake as to the identity of the proper parties as contemplated by this rule. State ex rel. Eccleston v. District Court, 240 M 44, 783 P2d 363, 46 St. Rep. 1929 (1989).

Rejecting Motion to Amend — Abuse of Discretion: In a personal injury action, the District Court abused its discretion by refusing to allow plaintiff to amend his original complaint to add a new plaintiff asserting a new cause of action. A motion to amend can properly add a plaintiff and a new cause of action. The new plaintiff's claim can relate back under Rule 15(c). Priest v. Taylor, 227 M 370, 740 P2d 648, 44 St. Rep. 1157 (1987).

Relation Back of Second Plaintiff's Cause of Action to Date Original Complaint Was Filed — Identical Claims and Interests: Father was original insured and was added as second plaintiff nearly 5 years after insurance coverage was denied his son. The insurance company claimed father's cause of action could not relate back to the date of the original complaint because he alleged separate claims and sought damages in his own right. The Supreme Court found that: (1) the claims of both plaintiffs were nearly identical and arose from the same conduct; (2) there was a clear identity of interest between father and son; (3) the pleadings contained the same causes of action; and (4) the only difference in the two pleadings was damages. The court held that the insurance company was not prejudiced or undermined in its ability to defend itself by permitting relation back of father's claims to the date of the son's original complaint. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Amendment of Complaint to State Alternative Basis of Liability: District Court denied plaintiff's motion to amend his complaint to state alternative basis of liability after the Statute of Limitations had run. Supreme Court reversed, finding that the alternative theory of liability was based on the same operative facts, that there was no bad faith or desire to delay, and that the amended complaint related back to the filing date of the original complaint under Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985), followed in Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Real Estate Fraud — Joinder of Parties Relating Back to Original Complaint: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of real property to the plaintiffs, the complaint was properly filed in August 1979 and the owners of the company were dismissed by stipulation from the action in June 1980. When the plaintiffs made a motion in 1982 to rejoin the owners as defendants, the defendant company argued that the joinder was barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the amendment satisfied the conditions of Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P., related back to the date of the filing of the action, and was therefore not barred. The owners were corporate officers, and both knew of the lawsuit and knew or should have known of their potential liability. The joinder is therefore not precluded by the Statute of Limitations. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Water Damage to Land — Accrual of Action at Time Damages Stabilize: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit, claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. At all times defendant denied any damage. The court found that a rising water table is a "taking" of land and actionable, and that the cause of action accrued at the time that damages stabilized and became permanent (1959-1960). The action was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, and the Statute tolled from the time the first complaint was filed. All amendments related back to the date of the original pleadings. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Service on State Governmental Division as Service on Board — Substance Over Form: Retail clerks went on strike against petitioner in a labor dispute. The clerks claimed unemployment benefits. Benefits are denied during a strike if unemployment results from a "stoppage of work" existing because of a labor dispute. A deputy of the Employment Security Division found claimants disqualified from benefits. Claiming strikers appealed to a referee who sustained the denial of benefits. Claimants then appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals (now the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board), which reversed the referee. Petitioner filed petitions for review with the District Court, naming as respondent the Board. Following a motion to dismiss the petition, the appellants and counsel for the Employment Security Division entered into an agreement to substitute the Division for the Board, and the court ordered the substitution. The clerks were not made parties, and at the time service was made on the Board, appellants did not provide sufficient copies. The clerks' union moved to intervene, and the motion was granted. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, concluding that failure to name all parties and failure to provide a sufficient number of copies of the petition for service were fatal jurisdictional flaws. Since the Board and the Division are housed within the same department of state government and were represented by the same counsel, granting summary judgment on purely technical grounds would be an unconscionable elevation of form over substance. F.W. Woolworth Co., Inc. v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Amended Petition for Judicial Review of Administrative Decision — No Relation Back Because of Lack of Service of Original Petition: An amended petition for judicial review of an adverse administrative decision initiated under 2-4-702, filed and served 16 months after the original petition was filed in District Court, cannot relate back to avoid dismissal for failure to promptly serve the agency if the original petition was never served. Rierson v. St., 188 M 522, 614 P2d 1020 (1980).

Notice Required to Toll Statute Under Fictitious Name Defendant: A plaintiff may utilize the fictitious name statute and may amend a complaint to substitute the true name of the defendant when discovered. If the amendment occurs after the Statute of Limitations has run, however, the real or intended defendant must have either been served or otherwise received notice of the institution of the action under the conditions for relation back provided in Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. It is fundamental that the purpose of the Statute of Limitations is to provide a cutoff point for stale claims. Rule 15(c) carries out this policy by requiring notice of the action within the time limitations of the Statute of Limitations before an amendment adding new parties will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Vincent v. Edwards, 184 M 92, 601 P2d 1184 (1979), reversed in Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

"Relation Back": Because plaintiff did not sue and serve the correct party before the statutory time limit had run, the "misnomer" rule does not apply. Also, the party sought to be sued did not have notice of the institution of the action. Thus the doctrine of "relation back" does not apply to this case and plaintiff's action is barred by the 3-year Statute of Limitations. LaForest v. Texaco, Inc., 179 M 42, 585 P2d 1318 (1978), followed in Keller v. Stembridge Gun Rentals, 221 M 352, 719 P2d 764, 43 St. Rep. 886 (1986).

Avoidance of Statute of Limitations to Be Considered by Court: Although the Statute of Limitations need not be negated in the complaint, the court should consider whether a motion to amend a complaint relates back to the original complaint and so avoids the bar of the Statute of Limitations. Prentice Lumber Co. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Amendment After Running of Limitations: If original complaint is timely filed, amended complaint dealing with same transaction set out in original complaint will relate back to original complaint even though amended complaint changes legal theory of action, adds claim arising out of same transaction, or states facts more specifically and even though amended complaint is filed after running of Statute of Limitations. Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Response to Amended Pleading Required — Default: Upon service and filing of a second amended complaint, the original and first amended pleadings became functus officio, and defendant was required to answer, and for failure to do so default was properly entered. Hansen v. Goodrich, 56 M 140, 181 P 739 (1919), distinguished in Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Original Pleading Functus Officio: Upon the filing of an amended complaint, the original pleading is superseded and becomes functus officio. Hansen v. Goodrich, 56 M 140, 181 P 739 (1919); Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917); Ben Kress Nursery Co. v. Oreg. Nursery Co., 45 M 494, 124 P 475 (1912), distinguished in Monarch Lumber Co v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961); Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 43 M 102, 115 P 25 (1911); Butte Butchering Co. v. Clarke, 19 M 306, 48 P 303 (1897); Gettings v. Buchanan, 17 M 581, 44 P 77 (1896); Newell v. Meyendorff, 9 M 254, 23 P 333 (1890), distinguished in Hansen v. Goodrich, 56 M 140, 181 P 739 (1919); Raymond v. Thexton, 7 M 299, 17 P 258 (1888).

Amendment After Demurrer Allowed: The effect of sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint is not to terminate the action. The court may allow the pleader in fault to amend, and when the amended complaint is filed, it supersedes the original. All issues are then determinable as of the date of the commencement of the original action, in absence of supplemental pleadings. Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917).

Former Rule 15(d). Supplemental pleadings

No Error in Denial of Untimely Supplemental Pleading: Although Rule 15, M.R.Civ.P., generally favors allowing amendments to pleadings, a trial court is justified in denying a motion to amend for an apparent reason, such as undue delay. Here, in light of the fact that the deadline for amendments to pleadings in the initial federal action had passed some 9 months earlier, summary judgment motions were pending, and plaintiff waited 3 months after revocation of his hospital work privileges before filing a state court supplemental complaint for tortious interference with prospective business advantage, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion to supplement the original complaint. Hughes v. Pullman, 2001 MT 216, 306 M 420, 36 P3d 339 (2001).

Lack of Notice — Effect: Appellant was properly denied leave to file a supplemental pleading because he gave insufficient notice of his motion. Montgomery v. Gehring, 145 M 278, 400 P2d 403 (1965).

Notice of Motion Required: Trial court was justified in refusing to grant defendants' motion to amend their answer by adding an affirmative defense of compromise and settlement, even though it was represented that some sort of compromise settlement had been reached after filing of complaint and answer, since defendants had not given plaintiffs notice of this motion as required by this section. Montgomery v. Gehring, 145 M 278, 400 P2d 403 (1965).

Amendment of Answer to Raise Testimony in Other Proceedings: Where two workmen brought separate suits against a construction company, one in federal court and one in state court, defendant in the latter case asked leave to amend its answer to conform to testimony of plaintiff in federal court indicating the existence of a partnership between the two claimants, by alleging such relationship, as well as payment of the claim by satisfying the federal judgment. The court abused its discretion in denying the motion to amend. State ex rel. Barnard-Curtiss Co. v. District Court, 113 M 107, 122 P2d 419 (1942).

Original and Supplemental Complaints to Be Combined: Where a supplemental complaint was made necessary by acts of the defendant subsequent to filing of the original complaint, the supplement is merely an addition to the original and the two pleadings are to be taken as one. Merchants Fire Assurance Corp. v. Watson, 104 M 1, 64 P2d 617 (1937).

Purpose of Supplemental Pleading — Discretion of Court: The proper method of pleading a fact material to a cause occurring after the filing of a former pleading is by way of a supplemental pleading; such application is addressed to the discretion of the trial court. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 106 M 166, 76 P2d 73 (1935).

Refusal of Amendment to Include Counterclaim as Abuse of Discretion: Where, in an action for services rendered, defendant company 2 weeks before trial applied for permission to amend its answer by the insertion of a counterclaim, acting promptly after its existence became known to it and presenting a reasonable showing why it had failed to include it in the original answer, refusal to grant permission was an abuse of discretion. State ex rel. Gold Creek Min. Co. v. District Court, 99 M 33, 43 P2d 249 (1935).

Different Relief Sought by Supplemental Pleading: The filing of an amended and supplemental complaint in one pleading is permissible and the relief asked therein may be different from that prayed in the original complaint. Nat'l Bank of Mont. v. Bingham, 83 M 21, 269 P 162 (1928).

Delay in Defense of Bankruptcy — No Abuse of Discretion: Where defendant in an action on an open account did not move for leave to file a supplemental answer for the purpose of setting up his discharge in bankruptcy, until 20 months after he had been adjudged a bankrupt and 6 months after his final discharge, and did not offer any excuse for the delay, refusal to grant the motion was not an abuse of discretion. Pue v. Bushnell, 72 M 265, 233 P 124 (1925).

Time of Motion for Supplemental Pleading: The matter of filing a supplemental pleading is not one which a party may demand as of right, but is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and in order to entitle the movant to favorable action the motion must be made within a reasonable time after the facts material to the cause come to his knowledge. Pue v. Bushnell, 72 M 265, 233 P 124 (1925).

Continuation of Nonpayment of Rent: Where, in an action on the defendant's guaranty for the payment of rent, the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case of nonpayment of the rent by means of his deposition read in evidence but a new trial is had, the burden is upon the defendant, on the second trial, in which the same deposition is put in evidence, to overcome such prima facie case. This is true though the plaintiff has filed no supplemental pleading. Isman v. Altenbrand, 42 M 188, 111 P 849 (1910).

Former Rule 16. Pretrial conferences — scheduling — management

Admissibility of Theory or Issue Implied From Pleadings or Pretrial Order: When a legal theory or factual issue is at least implicitly included in a pretrial order or in pleadings, a District Court may allow the introduction of evidence to support the theory or issue. In the present case, the District Court acted within the scope of the pleadings when it considered whether a financing contingency was included in a buy-sell agreement, and the interpretation of whether the agreement contained an express financing contingency was preserved for the court's consideration. Sec. Abstract & Title Co. v. Smith Livestock, Inc., 2006 MT 265, 334 M 172, 146 P3d 732 (2006), following Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003).

Admission in Pretrial Order Not Considered Judicial Admission Precluding Introduction of Evidence in Support of Defense at Trial: Plaintiffs alleged that defendant failed to make a downward adjustment in the price of their home and subsequently overcollected $3,383.30. Defendant's counterclaim alleged that plaintiffs owed in excess of $3,800 for services related to the construction of the home. In defendant's written contentions in the pretrial order, he admitted owing plaintiffs $1,441 for changes made during construction, but claimed that that amount was intended to be an acknowledgment of a credit against what plaintiffs owed and that he intended to introduce evidence at trial disputing the overcollection claim. The District Court determined that there was conflicting evidence on the issue and allowed the jury to resolve it. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that defendant's admission in the pretrial order constituted a judicial admission and that the District Court thus erred in allowing defendant to introduce contrary evidence at trial because defendant did not claim an affirmative defense of setoff. The Supreme Court disagreed. In order for a judicial admission to be binding on a party, the admission must be an unequivocal statement of fact rather than a conclusion of law or the expression of an opinion. Defendant's pretrial contention was an admission that money was owed, but did not say that the matter was closed to the extent that the sum could not be used as an offset. The District Court did not err in allowing the issue to go to the jury and in allowing defendant to offer evidence on the defense of setoff. Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Nentwig v. United Indus., Inc., 256 M 134, 845 P2d 99 (1992), DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246 (1997), and Point Serv. Corp. v. Myers, 2005 MT 322, 329 M 502, 125 P3d 1107 (2005).

Jury Instruction Regarding Contractor's Involvement in Trade or Commerce — Waiver of Defense by Failure to Include in Final Pretrial Order: Defendant objected to a jury instruction stating defendant's involvement in trade or commerce, contending that that determination and the applicability of the Consumer Protection Act to his business were questions of fact for the jury. However, the final pretrial order did not contain any factual issue, legal theory, or defense that defendant was contesting the applicability of the Montana Unfair Trade practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 to his business, so that theory or defense was waived as an issue to be determined by the trier of fact at trial. The Supreme Court found that the agreed facts in the pretrial order supported a determination that defendant was in fact engaged in trade or commerce, as defined in 30-14-102, so giving of a jury instruction to that effect was not in error. Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003).

No Error in City Court's Denial of Motion for Continuance After Similar Motions Granted: Over 2 years after charges were filed and after numerous motions of continuance were granted, a trial date was set pursuant to Robertson's motion for continuance to permit him to make travel arrangements after moving to California. Three weeks before trial, Robertson again moved for a continuance on the same grounds, but the City Court declined to grant it, and Robertson was tried in absentia. However, it was Robertson, not the court, who caused the trial to go forward without him. Not only did he have ample time to arrange for an appearance in Montana, but rescheduling trial dates upon motion is within the trial court's discretion and will be affirmed absent a showing that the court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceeding the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268 (1998).

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees When Issue Not Contained in Pretrial Order or Raised at Trial: Plaintiff sought $900,000 in attorney fees, posttrial, based on a request for attorney fees by defendant in its pleading, arguing that under 28-3-704, the award of attorney fees should be reciprocal. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the request because it was not contained in the pretrial order or raised at trial and thus was not properly before the court. Simmons Oil Corp. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 1998 MT 129, 289 M 119, 960 P2d 291, 55 St. Rep. 508 (1998), distinguished in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

No Error in Granting Motion In Limine — Plaintiff Allowed to Introduce Evidence Allegedly Excluded: The lower court granted the Butte Water Company's motion in limine to exclude evidence regarding the authority of the newly elected board of directors. The Supreme Court held that a review of the trial transcript revealed that Mannix had been allowed to introduce the evidence that he claimed had been wrongly excluded and that therefore there had been no error on the lower court's part. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Issue Not in Pretrial Order Raised by Court — No Abuse of Discretion: After reviewing the provisions of a disputed lease contract, the District Court recognized that the issue of vagueness or indefiniteness had not been raised in a timely fashion in the pretrial order, but nevertheless, in the interests of preventing manifest injustice to the parties, the court dismissed the jury and provided the parties an opportunity to argue the issue in briefs. Nentwig contended that failure to raise the issue in the pretrial order resulted in waiver of consideration of the issue. However, the issue was implicit in the issues that were raised, and the court overcame any prejudice to Nentwig by allowing a full opportunity to brief the issue without requiring any new evidence or the development of further facts. The court did not abuse its wide discretion by raising the issue of vagueness. Nentwig v. United Indus., Inc., 256 M 134, 845 P2d 99, 49 St. Rep. 1172 (1992).

No Ruling on Motion In Limine Prior to Trial — Waiver of Objection: Plaintiff presented District Court with a motion in limine during pretrial conference, seeking to preclude defendant's mention at trial of a collateral source of insurance. The court reserved ruling on the matter. Plaintiff did not request a ruling prior to trial, object during trial, or present the court with any motions for mistrial or to strike the alleged testimony when insurance was first mentioned by defendant at trial. Failure to object or request corrective action after the subject was mentioned constituted a waiver of objection on the issue. Stewart v. Fisher, 235 M 432, 767 P2d 1321, 46 St. Rep. 116 (1989).

Disqualification of Judge Upon Failure of Pretrial Settlement Negotiations: Where a judge is to be the trier of fact and he participates in pretrial settlement negotiations that subsequently fail, he should, upon request, disqualify himself from sitting as the trial judge. Shields v. Thunem, 220 M 449, 716 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 518 (1986).

Former Rule 16(a). Pretrial conferences — objectives

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Unwarranted When Delay Reasonable and No Prejudice Shown: The District Court set a scheduling conference, but plaintiff's counsel did not attend because of a computer problem. The District Court then dismissed the complaint with prejudice and denied a motion to reopen the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, applying the factors in Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011 (1990), and Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531 (1995), to determine whether the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the action for failure to prosecute. In this case, plaintiff's delay in prosecuting the case was reasonable, and defendant suffered no actual prejudice, so the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. Vermeer of Wash., Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 77, 320 M 435, 87 P3d 516 (2004), distinguishing E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931 (1997). See also A.M. Welles, Inc. v. Montana Materials, Inc., 2015 MT 38, 378 Mont. 173, 342 P.3d 987.

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Discretion of Court: Pretrial procedure is optional, it being left to trial court's discretion whether to utilize procedure and to what extent. Lenz v. Mehrens, 149 M 394, 427 P2d 297 (1967).

Constitutionality: The permission granted the court to require a pretrial conference does not violate the constitutional guarantee of a jury trial. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Purpose of Pretrial Conference — Bill of Particulars: A pretrial conference is not especially for the purpose of disclosure or discovery and the fact that plaintiff furnished defendant with a bill of particulars does not dispense with the reason for a pretrial conference. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Requirement for Conference as Affected by Disqualification of Judge: Where a rule is adopted requiring a pretrial conference before a jury trial, such rule is not revoked in a particular case when the judge of the court is disqualified to act. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Rule Requiring Conference Before Trial: The District Court has power to establish by rule a pretrial calendar, and to make the rule effective it is within the power of the District Court to provide that no jury case shall be set for trial until pretrial conference thereon is had. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Time of Trial After Conference: Where rule required pretrial conference before setting jury cases for trial it was not required that the rule contain any definite time for the calling of a jury after the pretrial conference. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Calling of Pretrial Conferences — Time: Where District Court determined by court rule that all actions must be subjected to pretrial conference before being set for trial, either by the District Court alone or before a jury, the District Court should, as a matter of routine, call such pretrial calendars as cases become at issue in order to accomplish their speedy disposition. State ex rel. Carlin v. District Court, 118 M 127, 164 P2d 155 (1945).

Right to Jury Trial: The effect of the rule is not such as to deprive a litigant, in a case involving questions of fact, of the right to have controverted fact questions disposed of by a jury as prescribed by Art. III, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 26, 1972 Mont. Const.). State ex rel. Carlin v. District Court, 118 M 127, 164 P2d 155 (1945).

Former Rule 16(b). Scheduling and planning

Repeated Failure to Comply With Rules of Civil Procedure — Default Judgment and Sanctions Proper: As a sanction against West, the District Court dismissed West's answer to Watson's complaint, entered default judgment against West, and awarded attorney fees and costs to Watson for preparing a pretrial order and a motion for sanctions. West appealed on grounds that the sanctions were too harsh. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the sanctions based on West's substantive failures to comply with procedural rules and the scheduling order, failure to seek a timely continuance of a status conference, failure to attend a status conference scheduled at West's request, failure to submit a timely proposed pretrial order, failure to prepare for the pretrial conference, failure to communicate with the District Court regarding the missed status conference or to seek a continuance of deadlines in the third amended trial preparation order, and failure to respond to Watson's request for sanctions. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009), following McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168 (1997).

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

Consideration of Timeliness, Good Cause, and Potential Prejudice — Motion to Amend Pleading Properly Denied: In a breach of contract case related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store, the parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, but plaintiff then asserted that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment and requested to amend the pleadings some 4 months after the deadline to amend. Defendant objected to the proposed amendment, and the District Court ultimately declined to allow plaintiff to amend the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court considered several factors in evaluating whether to allow amendment, including the timeliness of the request, whether plaintiff showed good cause to amend, and whether the late amendment would prejudice defendant. The initial complaint did not include an alleged violation of an oral agreement, and defendant's case rested on proof that the full purchase price had been paid. Allowing the amendment potentially prejudiced that defense, so denial of the motion to amend was not error. Once the motion to amend was properly dismissed, there were no issues of material fact remaining, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 286, 339 M 445, 171 P3d 690 (2007).

No Estate Inventory and Inventory Discovery Required Prior to Grant of Statutory Homestead, Exempt Property, and Family Allowances to Surviving Spouse: No estate inventory or scheduling order was filed prior to the District Court award of a homestead allowance, an exempt property allowance, and a family allowance to the surviving spouse. The decedent's son and sister contested the award, relying on this rule for the proposition that they were entitled to an inventory and related discovery before the allowances were granted. The Supreme Court found that application of the rule to probate proceedings would be administratively inefficient and contrary to the purposes of the rule. The District Court properly found that the surviving spouse was entitled to the allowances as a matter of law, and because these were legal issues, it was within the court's discretion to decide them prior to a scheduling order or estate inventory. In re Estate of Martelle, 2001 MT 194, 306 M 253, 32 P3d 758 (2001).

Products Liability Case Elements — Failure to Comply With Case Management Order — Reliance Upon Material Safety Date Sheets Unjustified — Summary Judgment Held Proper:

In this companion case to Schelske, id., involving identical case management orders and similar affidavits and reports from the same doctors, the District Court reviewed the Schelske affidavits and concluded that the affidavits in this case did not go further than the deficient affidavits in Schelske; therefore, the court struck one of the doctors' affidavits in its entirety, which in turn became the basis for summary judgment as to all products and all manufacturers. On appeal, the Supreme Court distinguished Schelske and recognized that, based on the information provided, some of the products in question could properly be considered for dismissal. However, it was error to strike the entire affidavit because plaintiff provided sufficient information in pretrial proceedings to allow the case to move forward and to enable the cosmetic manufacturers to proceed with discovery by further deposition of the experts who submitted affidavits, which could have served to eliminate those products for which insufficient information was provided. Although plaintiff may not have completely complied with the case management order as to every product listed, the four requirements of the case management order were satisfied by the information as to many of the products, so summary judgment was improper. Meyer v. Creative Nail Design, Inc., 1999 MT 74, 292 M 46, 975 P2d 1264, 56 St. Rep. 306 (1999).

Mischelle, a plaintiff in a products liability lawsuit, was required by the terms of a case management order (CMO) entered by the District Court to provide a list of products that she had come in contact with, the circumstances of the alleged exposures, an identification of each specific chemical that caused harm, and a physician's opinion of the causal connection between the exposures and the injuries. In response to the CMO, her attorney filed affidavits by several physicians and material safety data sheets (MSDS). The Supreme Court held that the issuance of the CMO was totally within the discretion of the District Court. The District Court dismissed the action on the motions of defendants based upon the plaintiff's affidavits. The case was properly dismissed because the affidavits failed to establish the elements of a products liability case, as required by the CMO. The Supreme Court noted that in violation of the CMO, the affidavits listed only generic products and not toxic substances within those products, failed to note the specific times Mischelle came in contact with the products, and failed to provide a medical opinion that specific chemicals actually caused Mischelle's illnesses. The medical affidavits stated only that the chemicals listed on the MSDS were "associated with" certain diseases. The Supreme Court also held that Mischelle was not entitled to rely solely upon the MSDS to prove the elements of her case. The MSDS did not demonstrate that the products were defective and did not demonstrate a medical basis for the chemicals having caused Mischelle's diseases. Additionally, the Supreme Court held that although a plaintiff does not have to apportion damage among several defendants, Mischelle must still show that the defendants caused her diseases, which she failed to prove. Schelske v. Creative Nail Design, Inc., 280 M 476, 933 P2d 799, 54 St. Rep. 21 (1997).

Lack of Good Cause to Modify Discovery Order: The parties were given 6 months to complete discovery and, during that time, failed to move to extend the discovery deadline. After the deadline passed, no formal advisement was given the court of the status of discovery or a motion made to reopen discovery. Accordingly, good cause did not exist to modify the discovery order and the court did not abuse its discretion by adhering to the discovery order. In re Marriage of Smith, 270 M 263, 891 P2d 522, 52 St. Rep. 174 (1995).

Insufficient Cause to Amend Scheduling Order: The date allowed for discovery and listing expert witnesses was set by stipulation as June 1, 1989. Plaintiff learned on June 21, 1989, that the expert it had retained would not provide expert testimony, but plaintiff did not move to extend discovery and add experts until August 29, 1989. The motion was not timely and appeared to be the result of plaintiff's procrastination and failure to act diligently. The District Court did not err in finding there was not good cause to amend the scheduling order. Lindey's, Inc. v. Professional Consultants, Inc., 244 M 238, 797 P2d 920, 47 St. Rep. 1570 (1990).

Deposition Taken After Court's Deadline: Where a deposition is taken after the time the District Court establishes as a deadline for pretrial discovery, the District Court cannot be held in error on the basis of documents not before it at that time. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Granting Motion In Limine: Authority for granting of motion in limine rests in inherent power of court to admit or exclude evidence and to take such precautions as are necessary to afford a fair trial for all parties. Wallin v. Kenyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974).

Purpose of Pretrial Conference — Bill of Particulars: A pretrial conference is not especially for the purpose of disclosure or discovery and the fact that plaintiff furnished defendant with a bill of particulars does not dispense with the reason for a pretrial conference. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Rule Requiring Conference Before Trial: The District Court has power to establish by rule a pretrial calendar, and to make the rule effective it is within the power of the District Court to provide that no jury case shall be set for trial until pretrial conference thereon is had. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Time of Trial After Conference: Where rule required pretrial conference before setting jury cases for trial it was not required that the rule contain any definite time for the calling of a jury after the pretrial conference. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256 (1948).

Calling of Pretrial Conferences — Time: Where District Court determined by court rule that all actions must be subjected to pretrial conference before being set for trial, either by the District Court alone or before a jury, the District Court should, as a matter of routine, call such pretrial calendars as cases become at issue in order to accomplish their speedy disposition. State ex rel. Carlin v. District Court, 118 M 127, 164 P2d 155 (1945).

Former Rule 16(c). Subjects to be discussed at pretrial conferences Easement by Grant Upheld on Basis of Stipulation and Circumstantial Evidence: Tanners and others purchased property on Flathead Lake. Tanners and the others obtained access to their property by driving on roads located on Daly's property to the north. When Daly erected a fence across the roads and blocked access to their property, Tanners and the others brought suit, alleging that they had purchased with their properties an easement by grant for the use of the roads. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Daly had stipulated to the admissibility of the chain of title documents without foundation testimony and had not objected to introduction of the exhibits at trial, Daly could not now refute the authenticity of the deeds of Tanners' predecessors by arguing that the deeds bore no signatures or notary seal. The Supreme Court also noted that Daly testified that she knew of the roads at the time that she purchased her property and could therefore not claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice. The Supreme Court also held that even though there was no direct evidence that the present roads were the ones referred to in the 1932 deed, there was circumstantial evidence in the form of testimony from two elderly witnesses that the same roads existed in the mid-1930s and were well traveled at that time, and Daly's attorney had admitted in correspondence that road A existed in 1932. Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Violation of Motion In Limine Not Warranting Reversal: In a suit for wrongful termination of employment, the lower court ruled that statements made in newspaper articles were not admissible. The appellant argued that reference to the articles had been made by the plaintiff and his counsel and that the lower court erred in failing to grant a mistrial. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in finding that the references were not so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Objection to Matter Agreed to at Pretrial Properly Denied: An objection to a fire department report on a fire, on grounds of hearsay, was properly denied when objecting party had agreed in pretrial order to the admission of the report as requiring no foundation or proof. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981). See also Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Failure to List Exhibit in Pretrial Order — Evidence Improperly Admitted: Where defendant's counsel agreed to a pretrial order purporting to list all exhibits the parties intended to introduce but failed to include an exhibit consisting of a movie, failed to show any justification for his failure to mention the movie at the pretrial conference, and failed to allow the plaintiff to preview the movie as a condition of its admission into evidence, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to allow the movie into evidence. The purpose of pretrial orders and pretrial discovery is to prevent surprise, simplify the issues, and permit counsel to prepare their case for trial on the basis of the pretrial order. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980), followed in Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999).

Pretrial Stipulation — Stipulated Matter Raised on Appeal: Prior to trial, all parties agreed that documentary evidence pertaining to warning devices at the railroad crossing where the accident occurred was unnecessary if the State and Burlington Northern would admit to the date they received notice of the dangerous nature of the crossing. All parties then entered into a stipulation regarding the date of notice. The stipulation was properly before the jury during the trial. It is improper to raise an issue on appeal as to a question of law or fact after the parties have entered into a stipulation as to that law or fact. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Hearsay — Waiver of Objection by Stipulation: In an action by the respondent for damages occasioned by wrongful discharge from employment, the court correctly received a copy of a report of the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) into evidence over the objection of appellant that the report constituted hearsay. The report was not hearsay since it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but only to show that the EEOC had not terminated its investigation. Counsel for appellant also waived any valid hearsay objection by agreeing to a pretrial stipulation of exhibits. Strong v. St., 183 M 410, 600 P2d 191 (1979).

Rules Regarding Effect of Stipulations: Court did not go beyond agreed statement of facts in making its findings. In considering an agreed statement of facts a court may make any reasonable inference of which the facts might be susceptible as if the facts had been gleaned from testimony. When a court feels it needs evidence beyond that in the agreed statement to make its decision, it may refer to evidence outside of the agreed statement. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Advance Disclosure of Rebuttal Witness: District Court's instruction that rebuttal testimony be limited to affecting weight and credibility of defendant's evidence and for impeachment purposes was error as the substantive effect of rebuttal evidence cannot be diminished to accomplish full disclosure of witnesses in advance of trial. Wilson v. Swanson, 169 M 328, 546 P2d 990 (1976).

Granting Motion In Limine: Authority for granting of motion in limine rests in inherent power of court to admit or exclude evidence and to take such precautions as are necessary to afford a fair trial for all parties. Wallin v. Kenyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Right to Jury Trial: The effect of the rule is not such as to deprive a litigant, in a case involving questions of fact, of the right to have controverted fact questions disposed of by a jury as prescribed by Art. III, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 26, 1972 Mont. Const.). State ex rel. Carlin v. District Court, 118 M 127, 164 P2d 155 (1945).

Former Rule 16(e). Pretrial orders

Awarding of Unrequested Monetary Damages Invalid When Based on Unlitigated Theory of Equity: After 20 years of living in the defendant mother's home rent free but making various improvements to the home, the defendant's son and daughter-in-law as plaintiffs filed an action to acquire title under alternative theories of adverse possession, gift, and estoppel. The District Court awarded the plaintiffs monetary damages in the form of a lien against the defendant's home. The only issue listed in the District Court's pretrial order was the ownership of the defendant's home; no request for damages was referenced by the parties or by the District Court. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that because monetary damages were not addressed in the pretrial order and the pretrial order was never subsequently modified by the District Court pursuant to former Rule 16(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the defendant was not provided fair notice that she would need to oppose a monetary judgment. Baston v. Baston, 2010 MT 207, 357 Mont. 470, 240 P.3d 643, distinguished in In re Estate of Quirin, 2015 MT 132, 379 Mont. 173, 348 P.3d 658.

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

No Abuse of Discretion in Hearing Evidence on Nature of Agreements Described in Pretrial Order: Plaintiff contended that the trial court erred by considering issues outside the pleadings by allowing evidence of the nature of the parties' agreement for concrete work on plaintiff's building project. The Supreme Court noted that although the pretrial order stated as an agreed fact that the parties verbally agreed on certain work on a time and material basis, the order also recognized the parties' differing allegations regarding the nature of the agreement, so the trial court did not abuse its discretion by hearing evidence on the nature of the agreements. Weimar v. Lyons, 2007 MT 182, 338 M 242, 164 P3d 922 (2007), distinguished in In re Estate of Quirin, 2015 MT 132, 379 Mont. 173, 348 P.3d 658.

Doctrine of Foreseeability Not Sufficiently Raised in Context of Construction Contract: Defendants in a construction contract dispute attempted to raise the issue of foreseeability as a defense, asserting that if plaintiff suffered damages, the damages were the result of plaintiff's own negligence. The District Court determined that foreseeability had no place in the lawsuit because foreseeability had not been pleaded, in that foreseeability to determine the size of a particular construction contract was not the same as foreseeability from the standpoint of causal relationship in a negligence claim. The Supreme Court concluded that defendants did not sufficiently raise the foreseeability issue either in pleadings or in the pretrial order, even assuming that it had a place in the case, so the District Court did not err in barring the foreseeability defense. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

No Error in District Court Refusal to Supplement Record With Stipulated Information Not Addressed at Trial: The District Court decided that Boadle Road was a public road. About 2 months after trial, the parties stipulated that the District Court should supplement the record to apply the evidence pertaining to Boadle Road to also determine the status of another road to which Boadle Road connected, ostensibly to avoid future litigation. The District Court declined to supplement the record, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Rule 15(b), M.R.Civ.P., parties may be entitled to an amendment of the pleadings only when the issue was tried by express or implied consent and there was sufficient evidence introduced at trial to support the amendment. In this case, the parties attempted to force the District Court through stipulation to decide an issue not presented at trial. The District Court therefore properly relied on a strict application of this rule in adhering to the issues in the pretrial order and denying the motion to supplement the record on an issue not addressed at trial. Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 394, 325 M 236, 104 P3d 496 (2004), following Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980), and distinguishing Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788 (1987), and Webb v. Wolfe, 230 M 322, 749 P2d 531 (1988).

Introduction of Evidence of Acts Not Referred to in Pretrial Order — Not Grounds for New Trial: As a result of a dispute, the relationship between neighbors Lopez, Monroe, and Josephson deteriorated until assault charges were filed against Josephson. The operative contentions in the pretrial order were that Josephson assaulted Lopez by pointing a firearm at Lopez's face and assaulted Monroe verbally and fired a weapon toward Monroe's property. The District Court found it impossible to determine from the allegations the dates, times, and places that the alleged assaults took place, but the court concluded that the pretrial order nevertheless placed Josephson on notice that he was being accused of assault on multiple occasions over an unspecified period of time. Josephson moved for a new trial on grounds that plaintiffs were improperly allowed to introduce evidence of acts not referred to in the pretrial order, evidence of bad character, and evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts. However, because Josephson waited until the day of trial to clarify which assaults formed the basis of the case against him, rather than using available pretrial motions and rules of discovery, the District Court was not found to have abused its discretion in giving plaintiffs latitude in their proof of the various assaults at trial, including allowing evidence of bad character to impeach Josephson's testimony. The District Court did properly preclude evidence of assaults by Josephson on nonparty persons. Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Amendment of Pretrial Order to Include Attorney Fees Not Listed in Pretrial Order — No Requirement to Plead Attorney Fees in Marriage Dissolution Case: During the second day of trial in a marriage dissolution case, the wife offered copies of her attorney fee bills, and the District Court, over the husband's objection, allowed the pretrial order to be amended on the issue of attorney fees. The husband cited Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729 (1992), and contended that because the wife made no showing of manifest injustice, as required by this rule, to modify the pleadings, the District Court erred by awarding the wife her attorney fees and costs when they were not listed in the pretrial order. The Supreme Court distinguished Naftco, noting that that case was not a dissolution action and that the trial court in Naftco never had the opportunity to consider amending the pleadings at trial. Further, this rule must be read together with Rule 15(b), M.R.Civ.P., which requires a showing by the objecting party that amendment of the pleadings would be prejudicial. The husband never claimed prejudice or sought a continuance to enable him to meet the wife's attorney fee evidence.

Although it is good practice to plead attorney fees, it is not required in marriage dissolution actions under 40-4-110. Rather, that section gives the trial court the discretion to order payment from time to time, after considering the financial resources of the parties. The husband failed to demonstrate an abuse of the court's discretion, and the Supreme Court affirmed the fee award. In re Marriage of Schmieding, 2000 MT 237, 301 M 336, 9 P3d 52, 57 St. Rep. 983 (2000).

Failure to List Fire Marshal's Report in Pretrial Order — Report Not Considered Rebuttal Evidence and Thus Properly Excluded: At an arson trial, Andersen sought to introduce into evidence a report written by a Deputy State Fire Marshal who had assisted local law enforcement in investigating the fire but who had died prior to trial and was unavailable to testify. Andersen contended that, even though it had not been endorsed as an exhibit in the pretrial order, the report was admissible under Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), as a record kept in the ordinary course of business. The District Court disallowed the report under Rule 803(8)(i), M.R.Ev., because it was an investigative report. The Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether the report was admissible under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., because Andersen conceded that the report had not been endorsed as an exhibit in the pretrial order; moreover, the report could not be considered rebuttal evidence because it was not offered to counter new evidence, but rather had been presented during plaintiff's case in chief. Because Andersen failed to list the report in the pretrial order, it was properly excluded. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999). See also Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980), and State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

No Requirement That Stand-Alone, Statutorily Mandated Attorney Fees Be Included in Pretrial Order: It was not error for the District Court to award attorney fees to the personal representatives in a will contest pursuant to 72-12-206, despite the fact that the issue of attorney fees was not included in the pretrial order. The purposes of pretrial orders are to prevent surprise, simplify the issues, and permit the parties to prepare for trial. However, in the case of a stand-alone, statutorily mandated award of fees to the prevailing party, as contained in 72-12-206, requiring inclusion in the pretrial order would accomplish none of these purposes and thus is not required. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999), distinguishing Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729, 49 St. Rep. 644 (1992), and Simmons Oil Corp. v. Wells Fargo Bank, 1998 MT 129, 289 M 119, 960 P2d 291 (1998).

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees When Issue Not Contained in Pretrial Order or Raised at Trial: Plaintiff sought $900,000 in attorney fees, posttrial, based on a request for attorney fees by defendant in its pleading, arguing that under 28-3-704, the award of attorney fees should be reciprocal. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the request because it was not contained in the pretrial order or raised at trial and thus was not properly before the court. Simmons Oil Corp. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 1998 MT 129, 289 M 119, 960 P2d 291, 55 St. Rep. 508 (1998), distinguished in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Appellate Review Not Limited to Uncontested Facts in Pretrial Order: A pretrial order includes only facts that are uncontested and does not preclude a party from attempting to prove additional facts that remain in dispute. A pretrial order does not, in and of itself, limit the scope of review by the Supreme Court to the uncontested facts in the pretrial order. On appeal, the Supreme Court may consider any evidence that is part of the record although it was not part of the pretrial record. Heisler v. Hines Motor Co., 282 M 270, 937 P2d 45, 54 St. Rep. 345 (1997), distinguishing Johnson v. Killingsworth, 271 M 1, 894 P2d 272 (1995).

Pleading of Statute of Limitations Superseded by Pretrial Order: In response to a civil action brought against him by the State Fund, Berg pleaded the affirmative defense of the statute of limitations. Later, in response to interrogatories propounded by the State Fund, Berg indicated that it was his intent to drop the defense of the statute of limitations and did not object to the failure of a pretrial order to include the statute of limitations as an issue. After judgment against him, Berg raised the defense of the statute of limitations on appeal. Citing Zimmerman v. Robertson, 259 M 105, 854 P2d 338 (1993), the Supreme Court held that Berg had waived the defense of the statute of limitations and that the pretrial order superseded the pleading and governed the subsequent course of the civil action. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Extraneous Conclusions of Law Not Affecting Substantial Rights — Harmless Error: Issues of negligence that were not explicitly or implicitly raised in the pretrial order or at trial were not properly before the trial court, and it was error for the court to enter conclusions of law on the irrelevant issues. However, because the court's entry of extraneous conclusions did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, the error was harmless. Ducham v. Tuma, 265 M 436, 877 P2d 1002, 51 St. Rep. 595 (1994).

Failure to Raise Issue in Pretrial Order: Zimmerman argued that the lower court had erred in refusing to allow testimony on the issue of whether he had given his informed consent to a surgical procedure used on his horse. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had not abused its discretion in refusing to allow testimony on the consent issue because Zimmerman had not identified it as an issue in the pretrial order. Zimmerman v. Robertson, 259 M 105, 854 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 703 (1993), distinguished in King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994). Zimmerman v. Robertson was followed in State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable Under Contract — Failure of Either Party to Raise Issue of Attorney Fees in Pretrial Order as Precluding Reciprocal Award: Although both parties claimed attorney fees in the pleadings, the final pretrial order did not include any reference to attorney fees, the fees were not listed as a contention at trial, and the amount to be awarded to the prevailing party was not listed as a fact to be considered at trial. Because attorney fees were not recoverable by defendant under the contract language and no evidence was presented on the issue at trial, failure by either party to raise the issue in the pretrial order placed the issue outside the record of the District Court and it was error for the court to amend the judgment to grant fees to defendant on grounds of reciprocity. Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729, 49 St. Rep. 644 (1992), distinguishing Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788 (1987), and distinguished in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Allowing Witness Not Listed in Pretrial Order to Testify — Abuse of Discretion: Neither a scheduling order nor a pretrial order listed Goacher as a witness; rather, Stokes was listed as the witness who would provide foundation for the survey of an accident scene. One week before trial, defendant learned it was Goacher who had prepared the survey and would testify, but there was not time to depose Goacher prior to trial. At trial, defendant objected to Goacher's testimony on the grounds of surprise and prejudice. The objection was overruled, and defendant did not request a continuance. Failure to reveal the information regarding witness testimony in a timely fashion resulted in surprise and prejudice to defendant and constituted reversible error, notwithstanding defendant's failure to request a continuance. Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992), overruling Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27 (1988), and Sikorski v. Olin & Rolin Mfg., 174 M 107, 568 P2d 571 (1977), to the extent that they held that failure to request a continuance at trial constituted a waiver of the right to claim error on appeal, and followed in Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992).

Failure to List Amount of Loss in Pretrial Order — Hearsay Insufficient to Prove Costs — Dismissal for Failure to Prove Damages: Plaintiff alleged that because a title company failed to disclose a sanitary restriction, she was entitled to recover for the cost of a new well. The agreed statement of facts in the pretrial order did not raise any specific contention or agreement as to the cost of the well. Plaintiff did not introduce specific evidence of damages, contending by hearsay as to what the cost would be. She later argued that because the cost of the well was not a factual issue enumerated in the pretrial order, she did not have to present evidence on costs. That the issue was not listed in the pretrial order was immaterial. Damages were listed as a plaintiff's contention, and as part of the pleadings, the question was properly before the court. Because her hearsay statement was insufficient to prove the cost of the well and was inadmissible as proof of costs, the trial court properly concluded that no evidence was presented on the issue and dismissed the case for failure to prove damages. Adlington v. First Mont. Title Ins. Co., 245 M 304, 800 P2d 1051, 47 St. Rep. 2132 (1990).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987), followed in Ottersen v. Rubick, 246 M 93, 803 P2d 1066, 47 St. Rep. 2274 (1990).

Issues Raised in Pretrial Order — Effect Upon Appeal:

Appellant raised for the first time, on appeal, an issue that was not included on the pretrial order as an issue in dispute. The Supreme Court refused to review that issue since it was not raised in the trial court. Morse v. Cremer, 200 M 71, 647 P2d 358, 39 St. Rep. 1162 (1982).

When party makes certain contentions in pretrial order and attempts to appeal based upon inconsistent contentions, the Supreme Court will not review those questions as they were not raised at trial. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Issues of waiver and breach of contract not covered by pretrial order could not be raised on appeal. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Objection to Matter Agreed to at Pretrial Properly Denied: An objection to a fire department report on a fire, on grounds of hearsay, was properly denied when objecting party had agreed in pretrial order to the admission of the report as requiring no foundation or proof. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Failure to List Exhibit in Pretrial Order — Evidence Improperly Admitted: Where defendant's counsel agreed to a pretrial order purporting to list all exhibits the parties intended to introduce but failed to include an exhibit consisting of a movie, failed to show any justification for his failure to mention the movie at the pretrial conference, and failed to allow the plaintiff to preview the movie as a condition of its admission into evidence, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to allow the movie into evidence. The purpose of pretrial orders and pretrial discovery is to prevent surprise, simplify the issues, and permit counsel to prepare their case for trial on the basis of the pretrial order. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980). See also Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999).

Former Rule 16(f). Sanctions

Repeated Failure to Comply With Rules of Civil Procedure — Default Judgment and Sanctions Proper: As a sanction against West, the District Court dismissed West's answer to Watson's complaint, entered default judgment against West, and awarded attorney fees and costs to Watson for preparing a pretrial order and a motion for sanctions. West appealed on grounds that the sanctions were too harsh. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the sanctions based on West's substantive failures to comply with procedural rules and the scheduling order, failure to seek a timely continuance of a status conference, failure to attend a status conference scheduled at West's request, failure to submit a timely proposed pretrial order, failure to prepare for the pretrial conference, failure to communicate with the District Court regarding the missed status conference or to seek a continuance of deadlines in the third amended trial preparation order, and failure to respond to Watson's request for sanctions. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009), following McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168 (1997).

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

No Error in Denial of Assignment of Liability as Sanction for Alleged Violation of Pretrial Rulings: White sued her doctor for alleged negligence in treatment. Prior to trial, the District Court made several rulings, including restricting defense counsel from arguing or attempting to shift the blame to White or her mother for any alleged lack of diligence in pursuing a diagnosis, although counsel was allowed to address and explain the standard of care. White subsequently asserted that during trial defense counsel repeatedly violated the pretrial orders, and she requested that liability be assigned to defendant as a sanction. The District Court denied sanctions and White appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Once White's mother testified that she had expressed concern about White's height and development, the door was opened to challenge this assertion, and as long as counsel did not directly blame the mother for any delayed diagnosis, defense counsel was allowed to present evidence to challenge the mother's credibility. Inquiry for this purpose was properly allowed in the effort to present a defense. White v. Johnson, 2009 MT 254, 351 M 534, 215 P3d 11 (2009).

Sanctions for Alleged Bad Faith in Settlement Negotiations Properly Denied: The District Court ordered a settlement conference between plaintiff and defendant city regarding denial of plaintiff's conditional permit request for a liquor and gambling establishment. The city sent a representative with limited settlement authority and made no settlement offer. Plaintiff requested sanctions against the city for failing to participate in settlement in good faith, but the District Court denied the request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that sending a representative with very little authority and failing to settle a case, without more, do not necessarily constitute grounds for sanctions. Here, the city participated in the conference as required, informed plaintiff of the representative's limited authority and of the city's opinion that the case had little settlement value, and even suggested delaying the conference to allow the representative to gain additional settlement authority. The city's actions were not made in bad faith, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying sanctions. The District Court was affirmed. Germann v. Stephens, 2006 MT 130, 332 M 303, 137 P3d 545 (2006).

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Unwarranted When Delay Reasonable and No Prejudice Shown: The District Court set a scheduling conference, but plaintiff's counsel did not attend because of a computer problem. The District Court then dismissed the complaint with prejudice and denied a motion to reopen the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, applying the factors in Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011 (1990), and Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531 (1995), to determine whether the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the action for failure to prosecute. In this case, plaintiff's delay in prosecuting the case was reasonable, and defendant suffered no actual prejudice, so the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. Vermeer of Wash., Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 77, 320 M 435, 87 P3d 516 (2004), distinguishing E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931 (1997).

Wait of Thirteen Months to Question Whether Sanctions Should Be Imposed — Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard: Defendant sought sanctions against Palmer, plaintiff's attorney, under Rules 11 and 37, M.R.Civ.P., for Palmer's defiance of scheduling and pretrial orders, and the District Court awarded sanctions under Rule 37. Palmer alleged that his due process rights were violated because he did not receive notice and an opportunity to be heard, but the due process arguments were not supported in the record. The Supreme Court agreed that when a person is sanctioned with attorney fees and costs under Rule 37, that person is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard before sanctions are imposed. However, in this case, Palmer waited more than 13 months after defendants moved for sanctions to question whether they should be imposed. Notice was adequate, and Palmer also was allowed to argue the appropriateness of sanctions at a hearing. Palmer's argument on appeal, that Rule 37 did not apply to him because he was a nonparty deponent, was not addressed because the issue was raised for the first time on appeal. The Supreme Court noted that this rule clearly allows sanctions in cases like this one, in which an attorney defies a District Court's scheduling and pretrial orders. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000).

Failure to Comply With Scheduling Order — Sanction Appropriate: The purpose of this rule is to deter parties from being unresponsive to the judicial process, regardless of the intent or lack of intent behind the unresponsiveness. Here, plaintiff failed to comply with a scheduling order despite having substantial time within which to prepare an expert witness list, so it was not an abuse of District Court discretion to sanction plaintiff by prohibiting the testimony of a proposed expert witness. Seal v. Woodrows Pharmacy, 1999 MT 247, 296 M 197, 988 P2d 1230, 56 St. Rep. 959 (1999), distinguishing Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91, 53 St. Rep. 421 (1996).

Party's Continuous Delay and Failure to Mediate — Sanctions Proper: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions in the form of an $18,000 default judgment against a party who continually delayed litigation and repeatedly failed to participate in court-ordered mediation. E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931, 54 St. Rep. 1058 (1997).

Former Rule 17(a). Real party in interest

General 756
Assignments 762
Insurance Companies 764
Corporate Stockholders 765

GENERAL

Dismissal Proper — Trustee of Invalid Trust Not Real Party in Interest: The plaintiff purchased real property from the defendants and requested that the defendants name him as a "trustee" in the deed based upon legal advice the plaintiff had received years ago in another state. Subsequently, the plaintiff, as a "trustee", sued the defendants for property damages and asserted numerous tort claims. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants under former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), on the basis that the plaintiff was not the trustee of any valid trust and, therefore, was not a real party in interest. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the District Court properly determined that the plaintiff was not the trustee of a valid trust and that the plaintiff could have saved the lawsuit from dismissal simply by suing in the plaintiff's individual capacity, rather than as the "trustee" of an invalid trust. Boehm v. Cokedale, LLC, 2011 MT 224, 362 Mont. 65, 261 P.3d 994.

Standing of Person in Zoning District to Bring Action Against Developer of Condominiums in Same District: To establish standing to bring suit, a complaining party must clearly allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or a civil right that is distinguishable from an injury to the public generally. Thus, a property owner who lived in the same zoning district as a proposed condominium development and who would be directly affected by a subdivision review or the lack of a subdivision review had standing to challenge the development. Shults v. Liberty Cove, Inc., 2006 MT 247, 334 M 70, 146 P3d 710 (2006), following Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

Lack of Standing of Person Who Fails to Allege Personal Interest or Injury: Fleenor brought an action for violation of her right to know and right to participate in a school district's decision to hire a new superintendent on grounds that she was not properly notified of votes. The suit was brought by Fleenor as a citizen of Montana and resident of the county and the school district. The District Court dismissed the suit for lack of standing, and Fleenor appealed, asserting that standing existed by virtue of her status as an interested party and that a liberal interpretation of the constitution regarding a citizen's right to know and participate included anyone with an interest in enforcing the broad constitutional policies and protections. The Supreme Court disagreed. To establish standing, a complaining party must clearly allege a past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or a civil right and allege that the injury is personal to the claimant and distinguishable from injury to the public generally. Additionally, the challenged action must result in a concrete adverseness personal to the party staking a claim in the outcome. However, simply being an informed and interested citizen is insufficient to confer standing. Fleenor made no assertion of injury and did not establish a personal, concrete adverseness that would result from the school district's action and thus failed to meet the threshold for establishing standing. The District Court was affirmed. Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006), following Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4 (1990), Carter v. Dept. of Transportation, 274 M 39, 905 P2d 1102 (1995), and Bryan v. Yellowstone County Elementary School District No. 2, 2002 MT 264, 312 M 257, 60 P3d 381 (2002), and followed in Lohmeier v. Gallatin County, 2006 MT 88, 332 M 39, 135 P3d 775 (2006), and, with regard to criteria to establish standing, in Bd. of Trustees, Cut Bank Pub. Schools v. Cut Bank Pioneer Press, 2007 MT 115, 337 M 229, 160 P3d 482 (2007). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

No Standing to Recover Damages by Party Not Owner of Property — Fax Not Considered Valid Assignment of Damage Claim: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a complaint seeking compensation from the companies. Dale's parents eventually filed for bankruptcy, and the Lewises finally became the owners of record in 1998. When the companies discovered that the Lewises were not the owners of the inn at the time that the suit was filed, they moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court on grounds that the Lewises had no standing to assert a claim for damages arising before they acquired title. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the general rule that persons cannot recover for damages to property that they do not own. Further, even though property damage claims have long been recognized as assignable, the fax did not meet the statutory requirements of a valid assignment and was unenforceable. Thus, on the issue of prepurchase damages, no material question of fact existed regarding ownership or assignment, so the Lewises had no standing to bring a claim for damages prior to their ownership of the inn. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Assignee of Vendor's Interest in Contract for Deed as Real Party in Interest: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence. First Security alleged that Ranch Recovery was not the real party in interest and thus should not be entitled to assert its proposed counterclaims. Citing this rule, the Supreme Court held that as successor to the vendor's interest in the agreement, Ranch Recovery assumed not just the vendor's obligations but also inherited the vendor's rights and was therefore the real party in interest for purposes of asserting those rights. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Vagueness of Statute — Standing to Challenge Vagueness — "Reasonable and Prudent" Speed Limit Held Void: Stanko was arrested by Officer Breidenbach of the Montana Highway Patrol for driving 85 miles an hour on a stretch of Highway 200 that was narrow, that had no shoulders, that had occasional frost heaves in the surface of the highway, and where Stanko's view of the road was occasionally obstructed by hills and curves in the highway. Relying on Parker v. Levy, 417 US 733 (1974), the Supreme Court held that Stanko's conduct was, under the circumstances, not so clearly prohibited that Stanko lacked standing to challenge the speed limit on the basis of facial vagueness. The Supreme Court held, citing Grayned v. Rockford, 408 US 104 (1972), Kolender v. Lawson, 461 US 352 (1983), Whitefish v. O'Shaughnessy, 216 M 433, 704 P2d 1021 (1985), and St. v. Crisp, 249 M 199, 814 P2d 981 (1991), that 61-8-303(1) was void for vagueness because there was no numerical speed limit in the statute and because it was dependent upon each driver of a motor vehicle or each law enforcement officer to determine what the speed limit was under any given set of circumstances. St. v. Stanko, 1998 MT 321, 292 M 192, 974 P2d 1132, 55 St. Rep. 1302 (1998).

Capacity of Plaintiff Not Stated in Notice of Filing of Foreign Judgment — Foreign Judgment Not Defective: After a foreign judgment of a Missouri Bankruptcy Court was filed against him, Lurie argued that the judgment was defective because the notice of filing failed to disclose that the plaintiff, a liquidating bankruptcy trustee, acted in his capacity as trustee. The Supreme Court held that there is nothing in 25-9-504 that requires the capacity of the plaintiff to be stated. The Supreme Court also noted that under this rule, Blackwell, the bankruptcy trustee, was allowed to bring suit in his own name and pointed out that the judgment of the Bankruptcy Court clearly identified Blackwell as the liquidating trustee and that because of the prior bankruptcy proceedings in which Lurie participated, Lurie must have known or should have known that Blackwell was bringing the action in his capacity as liquidating trustee and not in his individual capacity. Blackwell v. Lurie, 284 M 351, 943 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 916 (1997). See also Lurie v. Blackwell, 285 M 404, 948 P2d 1161, 54 St. Rep. 1215 (1997).

Option of Real Party to Bind Itself by Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: In order to protect individuals from harassment and multiple suits by persons not bound by the claim, under this rule, an action must be prosecuted by the real party in interest. The real party in interest has the option of binding itself to litigation by ratification, joinder, or substitution, although the real party in interest does not have the option of ratification as the assignee of plaintiff's claim. The District Court must ensure that one of these methods is adhered to after an objection is made under this rule. Once the objection to appellant as plaintiff is made, the real party has the option of binding itself to the suit through substitution. Gordon v. Hedman, 277 M 96, 918 P2d 680, 53 St. Rep. 558 (1996), following State ex rel. Bohrer v. District Court, 171 M 116, 556 P2d 899 (1976).

Chippewa-Cree Tribal Member Without Standing to Challenge Gas Tax — Incidence of Tax Upon Distributor: Carter, an enrolled member of the Chippewa-Cree Tribe, sold gasoline from a convenience store on the Rocky Boy's Reservation. Carter held a business license issued by the tribe and was not licensed by the state. She alleged that the gasoline tax was unconstitutionally applied to sales by tribal members inside the reservation because the tax is preempted by federal law. The District Court granted summary judgment, holding that Carter lacked standing. Citing Okla. Tax Comm'n v. Chickasaw Nation, 515 US 450, 132 L Ed 2d 400, 115 S Ct 2214 (1995), the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the incidence of the tax fell upon the distributor and not upon the retailer and that the distributor is not a member of the tribe. For this reason, Carter was not directly and adversely affected by the tax and had no standing to bring the action. Carter v. Dept. of Transportation, 274 M 39, 905 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 1111 (1995), and followed in Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

Person Not Party to Action May Not Be Party to Judgment: The lower court ruled that a prescriptive easement existed for Dawson even though he was not a party to the lawsuit. The Supreme Court held that a person who is not a party to an action may not be a party to the judgment. Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715, 51 St. Rep. 739 (1994), followed in Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Involuntary Dismissal of Action in Bankruptcy Estate — Substitution of Parties and Notice of Dismissal of Action Not Required: Plaintiffs filed a lender liability action against several banks after plaintiffs had filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. On motion of the plaintiffs' creditors, the Bankruptcy Court involuntarily converted that a proceeding from Chapter 11 to a Chapter 7 liquidation. Pursuant to federal case law, upon the conversion to a Chapter 7 proceeding, the lender liability action in District Court became an asset of the trustee in bankruptcy. The trustee and defendants in the lender liability action reached a stipulated settlement for a dismissal of that action, and plaintiffs appealed the dismissal. Citing Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Reilly, 240 M 147, 783 P2d 917 (1989), the Supreme Court held that it has no authority to substantively review issues that are appropriately before the Bankruptcy Court and that the only issue the Supreme Court could review was the propriety of a lack of notice of the dismissal to the plaintiffs. On this issue, the Supreme Court held that the trustee was not required to give notice because all of plaintiffs' interest in the state court action was transferred to the trustee and held that plaintiffs therefore lacked standing to object to the dismissal. The Supreme Court also held that the trustee was not required to substitute the bankruptcy estate as the real party in interest in the state court proceeding because Rule 25(c), M.R.Civ.P., rather than this rule, governed substitution and because under this rule, substitution was not mandatory. Reilly v. Citizens St. Bank, 251 M 155, 822 P2d 1088, 48 St. Rep. 1140 (1991).

Who Considered Proper Parties When Party Not Before the Court Benefits by Contracting Party's Conduct: A contract binds no one but the contracting parties. Therefore, if the contracting parties are before the court, they are the proper parties even though a party not before the court had the benefit of one contracting party's performance. Fordyce v. Musick, 245 M 315, 800 P2d 1045, 47 St. Rep. 2137 (1990), following Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977).

Bar Owner Not Real Party in Interest — Injunction Denied: Employees of a bar were arrested for violating a city ordinance that prohibits nude dancing in establishments selling alcoholic beverages. The bar owners sought a preliminary injunction, alleging that the ordinance violates the employees' constitutional right of free speech. The Supreme Court held that under 27-19-103, an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the execution of a public statute for the public benefit without a showing of irreparable harm or a violation of a constitutional right as required by 27-19-201. Money damages are not considered to be irreparable harm because recovery of money damages is available in an action at law without resort to equity. The question of whether the ordinance is a violation of the constitutional right of free speech was not properly before the court because the bar owners were not directly affected by enforcement of the ordinance. Under this rule, the persons actually arrested and prosecuted are the real parties in interest and they are not parties to this action for an injunction. The bar owners' interest in the enforcement of ordinances against bar employees is monetary, not constitutional. The New Club Carlin, Inc. v. Billings, 237 M 194, 772 P2d 303, 46 St. Rep. 731 (1989), followed in Dicken v. Shaw, 255 M 231, 841 P2d 1126, 49 St. Rep. 914 (1992).

Use Right of State in Bean Lake — Standing of Stockgrowers Association to Enter Suit — General Test for Any Association: As part of the statewide water rights adjudication process, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks filed a claim for a pre-1973 "use" water right appropriation for recreation, fishing, and wildlife purposes in the waters of Bean Lake. The Montana Stockgrowers Association was a proper party in the case. The Water Court required statewide notice and invitation for others to appear. The Association stated that its members could be affected, and the two other potential appropriators in Bean Lake were members of the Association. The Supreme Court adopted the following as the test to determine the standing of an association to appear as a party on behalf of its members: (1) its members would otherwise have standing in their own right; (2) the interests it seeks to protect are germane to the organization's purpose; and (3) neither the claim asserted nor the relief requested requires the participation of individual members in the suit. In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228, 45 St. Rep. 1948 (1988).

Plaintiffs Not Parties to Loan Contract: Plaintiffs, who were not parties to the loan contract in issue, were not the real parties in interest so far as issues concerning the loan contract were concerned. Lythgoe v. First Sec. Bank of Helena, 222 M 163, 720 P2d 1184, 43 St. Rep. 1140 (1986).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Deceased Defendant in Tort Action — Unmarried Without Children or Estate — Action Against Parents as Successors in Interest: Where the defendant in a tort action was deceased, it was not error to dismiss the deceased and his estate and substitute his parents as successors in interest to the deceased. The deceased was unmarried and childless at the time of his death and left no estate. There was no representative, and under this section his parents, as successors in interest, are the proper parties. Such substitution is permitted under this rule without adversely affecting any applicable Statute of Limitations. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Determination of Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Standing of Coalition of Citizens: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether the Montana Coalition for Stream Access, Inc., had standing to bring suit was immaterial because the Department of State Lands (functions now transferred to Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks were also plaintiffs. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Citizen Taxpayer — Standing: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. Plaintiff, in his complaint, alleged that he was a citizen, resident, elector, and taxpayer. Prior cases held that in order to establish standing to sue a governmental entity: (1) the issue for review must represent a case or controversy; (2) the complaining party must allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property or civil rights; and (3) the alleged injury must be distinguishable from injury to the public generally, but need not be exclusive to the complaining party. The Supreme Court added a further exception. The court stated that it would recognize the standing of a taxpayer, without more, to question the constitutional validity of a tax or use of tax money where the issue or issues presented directly affect the constitutional validity of the state or its political subdivisions acting to collect the tax, issue bonds, or use the proceeds thereof. The court said it would accept original jurisdiction of such suits when special circumstances, presenting issues of urgent or emergency nature, exist requiring speedy determination. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984), followed in Montanans for the Coal Trust v. St., 2000 MT 13, 298 M 69, 996 P2d 856, 57 St. Rep. 73 (2000).

Rights of Legal Heir Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

Parties to Contract — Effect of Property Disposition: Because the obligations of a contract are limited to the contracting parties, plaintiff properly sued defendant for recovery on two retail installment contracts executed by defendant, even though the object of the contracts became part of a property disposition to defendant's wife in a divorce decree which transferred the indebtedness along with the subject property. Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977).

Election Cases — County Clerk and Recorders: County Clerk and Recorders are not necessary parties in disputes regarding election ballots because the Secretary of State has the statutory duty of prescribing the form of ballots. Yunker v. Murray, 170 M 427, 554 P2d 285 (1976).

Out-Of-State Bank Not Party to Be Joined: Interest in loans transferred to out-of-state bank under participation agreement between lending Montana bank and out-of-state bank prior to commencement of action does not make out-of-state bank true party in interest or person to be joined if feasible when borrower sued on loan agreement and notes payable to lending Montana bank. This is because loan agreement only establishes rights and liabilities between lending Montana bank and borrower, while participation agreement only establishes rights and liabilities between lending Montana bank and out-of-state bank. Neither establishes any contractual relationship, rights, or liabilities between borrower and out-of-state bank. Additionally, lending Montana bank is owner and sole payee on notes and as holder of notes is entitled to sue in its own name. State ex rel. Drum v. District Court, 169 M 494, 548 P2d 1377 (1976).

Method of Joinder Optional With Real Party in Interest: District Court does not have discretionary power to determine mode of compliance as the rule provides that the method of compliance is optional with the real party in interest. He may bind himself to the suit by ratification, joinder, or substitution. State ex rel. Nawd's T.V. & Appliance, Inc. v. District Court, 168 M 456, 543 P2d 1336 (1975).

Insurer With Subrogation Rights: Plaintiff should be given the opportunity to join a real party in interest when defendant objects to the failure to join an insurance company as a real party in interest on the basis of its subrogation interest. Bergh v. Rogers, 167 M 243, 536 P2d 1190 (1975).

Action on Account — Undisclosed Transferee: Son was not real party in interest in action on stated account, based on oral gift to son, where buyer of goods was never aware that son was owner but dealt entirely through father. Hanlon v. Anderson, 160 M 279, 502 P2d 51 (1972).

Necessary and Proper Writ: When Liquor Control Board members petitioned the Supreme Court to dismiss removal petition, notwithstanding availability of appeal, issuance of a Writ of Supervisory Control was necessary and proper. State ex rel. Arnot v. District Court, 155 M 344, 472 P2d 302 (1970).

Party's Loss of Interest After Commencement of Action: Judge properly used discretion in not dismissing party as real party in interest although agreement was made after commencement of the case which relieved party of any interest in the outcome of the case. Lapke v. Hunt, 151 M 450, 443 P2d 493 (1968).

Real Party in Interest — Effect of Assignment: An assignee for collection of another's claim against a third party can maintain an action in its own name against the third party. Legal title to the claim is the only requirement to constitute the assignee the real party in interest. Wash. Water Power Co. v. Morgan Elec. Co., 152 M 126, 448 P2d 683 (1968).

Real Party in Interest — Effect of Assignment of Chose in Action: Court's order denying motion to dismiss when plaintiff had irrevocably assigned his chose in action was without foundation in law and an abuse of discretion. Plaintiff was not real party in interest. State ex rel. Cominco Am. Inc. v. District Court, 147 M 412, 412 P2d 577 (1966).

Real Party in Interest — Surety Bonds: The Department of Agriculture was not the only real party of interest in actions based on surety bonds for grain sales because the surety bond was entered for the benefit of the seller of grain, not of the State. State ex rel. Farmers' Elevator Co. v. District Court, 147 M 72, 410 P2d 160 (1966).

Parties Not "Necessary" — Trustees and Tenants in Common Distinguished: Court was correct in finding that third parties were not necessary parties. Lowe v. Flank Oil Co., 144 M 499, 398 P2d 608 (1965).

Action by Divorced Wife: District Court was directed to deny petition of decedent's divorced wife, guardian ad litem of decedent's and her children, to intervene in action for wrongful death under 27-1-513 commenced by the widow as administratrix and trustee for the decedent's minor children, and to strike from the files the complaint in intervention as an attempted substitution of party plaintiffs in a wrongful death action. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 139 M 367, 364 P2d 739 (1961).

Authority of Ward After Attaining Majority: In a suit by a minor brought by his guardian, the ward is the plaintiff and the real party in interest, and upon the ward attaining his majority, the guardian's authority to conduct lawsuits in his behalf automatically ceases, but a suit brought does not abate. After the ward attains his majority, he has the right to conduct the litigation, including the selection of his attorney, and thereafter he is no longer authoritatively represented either by his guardian or by the attorney employed by the guardian. Mitchell v. McDonald, 114 M 292, 136 P2d 536 (1943).

Requirement for Action by Trustee: All that is necessary to constitute a party plaintiff the real party in interest is that he be vested with the legal title. The trustee of an express trust can maintain an action in his own name. Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), overruling in part State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937), Streetbeck v. Benson, 107 M 110, 80 P2d 861 (1938), and N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940), explained in 300 F2d 88 (9th Cir. 1962), affirming McNeil Constr. Co. v. Livingston St. Bank, 185 F. Supp. 197 (D.C. Mont. 1960).

Litigation Discouraged: Section 93-2801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P.), providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, and subsection (1) of 37-61-408, declaring that an attorney must not directly or indirectly buy or be in any manner interested in buying a thing in action with the purpose of bringing an action thereon, by clear implication intend to discourage litigation and keep it within certain bounds in the interest of a sound public policy. Streetbeck v. Benson, 107 M 110, 80 P2d 861 (1938), explained in N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940), and Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941).

State Action on Warehouseman's Bond: An action on a public warehouseman's bond in favor of the State for the use and benefit of holders of warehouse receipts is properly brought in the name of the State. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Mont., 92 F2d 693 (9th Cir. 1937), affirming St. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 16 F. Supp. 489 (D.C. Mont, 1936).

Form of Ownership Immaterial: In an action by several individuals allegedly copartners to recover on a trade acceptance, the fact that plaintiffs failed to prove that they constituted a partnership, which allegation was denied by defendant, was unimportant. If they were the owners of the paper they were the real parties in interest, and as such entitled to sue. Best v. Boyer, 98 M 40, 37 P2d 331 (1934).

Enforcement of Bond for Benefit of Others: Irrigation district under contract and bond was entitled to enforce bond for benefit of laborers and materialmen. Cove Irrigation District v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 42 F2d 957 (9th Cir. 1930).

Action on Bond — Recovery by County: In action against surety on robbery and burglary policy issued to County Treasurer to recover for loss of county money and securities stolen from Treasurer, county was proper, though not necessary, party plaintiff, where surety agreed to pay assured for loss sustained by assured or by owner, and county paid premiums on policy and was owner of property stolen. Nat'l Sur. Co. v. Sheridan County, 33 F2d 473 (9th Cir. 1929).

Action on Notes by Trustee: A bank taking a mortgage in its own name but for convenience assigning two of the notes secured thereby to two of its directors, became a trustee of an express trust to the extent that the two notes and security were owned by the directors and as such was entitled to maintain suit in foreclosure without joining them as parties plaintiff, and to secure judgment in its own name. First St. Bank v. Mussigbrod, 83 M 68, 271 P 695 (1928).

Action for Accounting: In an action for an accounting and to have defendant bank declared trustee of a resulting trust, the finding that plaintiff's husband and not she was the real party in interest was correct, and therefore the court properly rendered judgment in favor of defendant. Kelly v. Gullickson, 75 M 66, 241 P 623 (1925).

Pleading of Incapacity — Waiver: Where it does not appear from the face of the complaint that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, the defect can only be reached by answer and is waived by failure to so plead. La Bonte v. Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co. of Richland County, 75 M 1, 241 P 631 (1925).

Action Over Public Funds — Taxpayer's Suit Improper: An action to recover county funds unlawfully paid must be brought by the County Attorney in the name of the county, it being the real party in interest, and it cannot be maintained by a taxpayer. Gregg v. Bayers, 73 M 165, 235 P 337 (1925).

Complaint to Show Interest: To state a cause of action, plaintiff must disclose his interest in the subject matter of the litigation, i.e., he must make it appear that he is the real party in interest. Lefebure v. Baker, 69 M 193, 220 P 1111 (1923).

Action on State Bail Bond for Benefit of County: In an action on a bail bond in the form prescribed by section 94-8717, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed), running to the state, the state and not the county is the proper party plaintiff though under 46-18-603 and 61-12-703 (since repealed) the money recovered goes to the county and not to the state. Wheatland County v. Van, 64 M 113, 207 P 1003 (1922).

Action by Devisees for Fraud: Devisees may maintain an action for damages for fraud practiced upon them in the procurement of an agreement to sell the real property of testator, even though at the time the estate was in process of administration and distribution had not been made. Rumney v. Skinner, 64 M 75, 208 P 895 (1922).

Evidence of Another's Benefit Excluded: Plaintiff, vested with the legal title to the judgment on which he sought to recover, was the real party in interest within the meaning of section 93-2801, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P.), and evidence that he had bought it for the benefit of another was properly excluded. Genzberger v. Adams, 62 M 430, 205 P 658 (1922).

Landlord and Tenant — Actions Upon Interests: While a landlord has a right of action against a third person for a permanent injury to the reversion, the right of action for a trespass upon the possession of the tenant, or for an injury to his estate, is in the tenant; but for a wrong that affects both of these distinct interests, the law gives a right of action to the owner of each. Custer Consol. Mines Co. v. Helena, 45 M 146, 122 P 567 (1912).

Trespass Action Brought by Administrator: An administrator has a right to the possession of the real estate of the decedent and may bring ejectment in his own name as administrator against a trespasser. Black v. Story, 7 M 238, 14 P 703 (1887). See also In re Higgins' Estate, 15 M 474, 39 P 506 (1895); Kohn v. McKinnon, 90 F 623 (9th Cir. 1898).

ASSIGNMENTS

Standing to Compel Release of Oil and Gas Leases Gained by Assignment: Lessors of five oil and gas leases assigned plaintiff the right to sue defendant to compel release of the oil and gas leases. Defendant asserted that plaintiff lacked standing to sue, because under 82-1-202, the owner of the leased premises may sue, but plaintiff was not the owner of the leases. The Supreme Court noted the longstanding rule that rights assigned from contracts between private individuals are assignable, that nonassignability is the exception, and that in the absence of a nonassignability clause, either party may generally make an assignment of contract rights. Further, under this rule, a party vested with legal title is considered a real party in interest. Each of the leases in question provided for assignment of rights, one of which was the right to compel termination of a lessee's interest. Thus, plaintiff, having been vested with legal title by assignment, had standing to compel release of the leases. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2002 MT 141, 310 M 221, 49 P3d 598 (2002).

Unresolved Issues Regarding Royalty Interests — Summary Judgment Precluded: Prior to 1955, McDonald & Eide, Inc. (M&E) owned the entire working interest in a lease on a producing oil well. On July 12, 1955, M&E assigned 100% of its interest in the south half and 50% of its interest in the north half to H. W. McDonald, but this assignment was not recorded until 1963.

After M&E's corporate charter was repealed for failure to pay taxes, corporate officers of M&E purported to assign M&E's total working interest to V. Eide and J. Von DeLinde in 1961, but this assignment conflicted with the one previously made to McDonald, who filed a quiet title action. Thereafter, all three entered an agreement with Continental Oil Company (Continental) assigning to the company an undivided one-half interest in the lease. While the quiet title action was pending, McDonald assigned undivided interests to G. Huntley, D. Iverson, and A. Larson with the intent to convey to each the respective share "held in suspense by Continental". In 1964, final judgment quieted title in McDonald subject to the agreement with Continental. In 1965, M&E stockholders appointed F. Gunnip as receiver, and he sued M&E corporate officers to recover the lease and other property. A 1970 judgment voided the 1961 agreement, and in 1976, final judgment provided that Gunnip owned one-half interest in the north half of the lease while Eide, Von DeLinde, and Continental were held to have no interest. Shell Oil Company, responsible for disbursing the lease proceeds, continued to pay Continental one-half of the proceeds under the agreement with McDonald, and although Gunnip was owner of a 50% interest, he received only a 25% share of proceeds. In 1981, Gunnip assigned a 3.75% interest in the north half to Huntley and a 2.5% interest in the north half to R. Schwinn. Huntley became aware that Gunnip was not receiving his full share, so Gunnip, Huntley, and Schwinn sued Continental, requesting an additional one-eighth of the proceeds. The District Court granted summary judgment to Continental in 1985, but the Supreme Court reversed on appeal, holding that: (1) unresolved issues of material fact remained regarding Continental's interest; (2) a trial must be had to assess Continental's interest considering potential application of adverse possession, waiver, and estoppel; and (3) Continental's asserted 50% interest in the north half of the lease must be tested against the interest of McDonald's assignees and successors in interest. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Gunnip v. Cont. Oil Co., 223 M 141, 727 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 1605 (1986). On remand, the District Court neglected to assess Continental's interest as directed. On later appeal, the Supreme Court granted supervisory control and determined that: (1) plaintiffs failed to present substantial evidence to support a theory of adverse possession, waiver, or estoppel against Continental; (2) Continental owned an undivided one-half interest in the working interest in the north half of the lease; and (3) Gunnip and his assigns owned the remaining half of the working interest in the north half. Cont. Oil Co. v. Elks Nat'l Foundation, 235 M 438, 767 P2d 1324, 46 St. Rep. 121 (1989).

Unlawful Detainer — Right of Lessor With Unrecorded Title to Sue: Plaintiff leased land to defendants and assigned her interest in the land to a trust. The assignment was recorded. The trust later reassigned the interest back to plaintiff through an unrecorded quitclaim deed. Plaintiff sued defendants when they refused to vacate at the end of the lease. Record title and legal title are not synonymous, and plaintiff had valid legal title even though it was not record title. Recording has the purposes of giving notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers and of establishing priority, but has nothing to do with conveying title. Defendants' only interest in the property was a lease, and they were not within the scope of the recording statutes' protection. Plaintiff, contrary to defendants' claim, was the real party in interest, not the trust, and was entitled to bring the suit. The party with legal title is the real party in interest in real property disputes. Blakely v. Kelstrup, 218 M 304, 708 P2d 253, 42 St. Rep. 1601 (1985).

Assignee for Collection as Real Party in Interest: Assignees of claim paid by their liability insurer were real parties in interest and entitled to sue their indemnitor and its insurer in their own names because the assignees had legal title to the claim and this was sufficient to constitute the assignees the real parties in interest. Wash. Water Power Co. v. Morgan Elec. Co., 152 M 126, 448 P2d 683 (1968).

Transfer of Interest by Assignment: Though every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, where an action on a claim is pending at the time of its assignment it may under 27-1-501 be continued in the name of the assignor. White v. Connor, 138 M 1, 354 P2d 722 (1960); Osborne v. McDonald, 91 M 83, 5 P2d 568 (1931).

Assignment for Collection Only: An assignment for collection, without any consideration being paid by the assignee, vests the legal title in the assignee, which is sufficient to enable him to recover, although the assignor retains an equitable interest in the thing assigned. Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941), overruling in part State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937), and Streetbeck v. Benson, 107 M 110, 80 P2d 861 (1938), explained in 300 F2d 88 (9th Cir. 1962), affirming McNeil Constr. Co. v. Livingston St. Bank, 185 F. Supp. 197 (D.C. Mont. 1960).

Purchase of Accounts by Trustee: In an action by plaintiff trustee upon various accounts which defendant owed to five companies it was error to deny plaintiff's motion to file its amended and supplemental complaint showing that it had, subsequent to filing of action, purchased the accounts and was the legal owner, and to deny its motion to strike the word "trustee" from the papers in the action. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940).

Simulated Assignment Ineffective: A simulated assignment of a chose in action cannot make the assignee the real party in interest in an action to recover thereon. Streetbeck v. Benson, 107 M 110, 80 P2d 861 (1938), distinguished in N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940), and Rae v. Cameron, 112 M 159, 114 P2d 1060 (1941).

Assignee of Oil and Gas Permittee as Real Party in Interest: The assignee of an oil and gas permittee whose lease had been assigned to an operator who had obligated himself to pay a sum of money when a paying well was brought in, was the real party in interest and entitled to bring action against the operator for the recovery of said sum of money. Herigstad v. Hardrock Oil Co., 101 M 22, 52 P2d 171 (1935).

Action on Notes by Trustee: A bank taking a mortgage in its own name but for convenience assigning two of the notes secured thereby to two of its directors, became a trustee of an express trust to the extent that the two notes and security were owned by the directors and as such was entitled to maintain suit in foreclosure without joining them as parties plaintiff, and to secure judgment in its own name. First St. Bank v. Mussigbrod, 83 M 68, 271 P 695 (1928).

Action Brought by Assignee Directly: An assignment of a judgment may not only be made for the benefit of a cosurety, but it may be made directly to the person who is to benefit by it, and he may enforce it in his own name. This is in conformity with the spirit of the statute providing that the real party in interest shall prosecute the action in his own name. Merchants Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 33, 57 P 445 (1899).

INSURANCE COMPANIES

Required Ratification by Bond Underwriter Held No Different in Substance Than Substitution of Underwriter: Holm-Sutherland contracted with the town of Shelby to construct sewer and water improvements within the town. When a dispute arose, Holm-Sutherland sued Shelby for breach of contract. During the litigation, Shelby discovered that Holm-Sutherland had assigned all of its rights under the contract to its bond underwriter, Safeco, as collateral security to repay all loss and expense to Safeco. After the discovery of the assignment, Shelby moved to substitute Safeco as the real party in interest pursuant to this rule. The District Court instead required Safeco to ratify the action against Shelby. The Supreme Court noted that the rule provides that "ratification . . . or substitution shall have the same effect as if the action had been commenced in the name of the real party in interest". Because of this language in the rule, the Supreme Court held that Safeco's ratification relates back to the beginning of the action against Shelby, that Safeco would be treated as if it were the party originally performing each action or causing each filing by Holm-Sutherland, and that the District Court did not err when it required that ratification. Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999).

Insurance Company Cannot Be Sued Directly by Third-Party Claimant in Place of Insured Tortfeasor: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment and granted the plaintiff's motion to add the owner's insurance carrier as a party defendant. The general rule is that a direct action against an insurer does not lie until the liability of the insured has been established. This rule is not a direct action statute. The District Court erred in allowing the joinder of the insurer as a party defendant. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Joinder of Insurance Company: Partially subrogated insurers who had joined as parties plaintiff were entitled to change of mind and to proceed by ratification because defendants were not subjected to double jeopardy or otherwise prejudiced. State ex rel. Bohrer v. District Court, 171 M 116, 556 P2d 899 (1976).

Substitution of Plaintiffs: Insurer which has paid the entire loss suffered by its insured thereby becomes fully subrogated to his claim against the wrongdoer who caused it and, because the insured no longer has a right of action, becomes a real party in interest in any litigation concerning the loss. Therefore, the District Court properly ordered the named plaintiff's insurer substituted for it as a party. State ex rel. Nawd's T.V. & Appliance, Inc. v. District Court, 168 M 456, 543 P2d 1336 (1975).

Plaintiff's Claim Paid by Insurance Company — Joinder: Where plaintiff's insurance company paid all but $25 of plaintiff's loss, so recovery from defendant would inure to benefit of insurance company, plaintiff's motion to add insurance company as real party in interest should have been granted by District Court, even though Statute of Limitations had run on plaintiff's claim. Bergh v. Rogers, 167 M 243, 536 P2d 1190 (1975).

Real Party in Interest — Subrogated Interest of Insurer: In an action for the recovery of damages for property damage and personal injury, an insured may prosecute an action for the full amount of the loss or either the insured or the insurer may separately sue for his portion of the loss. If the action is instituted by either one alone, the defendant can compel joinder of the other or may waive joinder. State ex rel. Slovak v. District Court, 166 M 485, 534 P2d 850 (1975).

CORPORATE STOCKHOLDERS

Corporation Considered Real Party in Interest on Claim for Lost Corporate Profits — No Exception for S. Corporations: Gullett paid $10,000 earnest money for the purchase of real property. The money was drawn on the account of Gullett's corporation. When defendants refused to return the money after the purchase agreement failed, Gullett filed a complaint for return of the money and for profits allegedly suffered by the corporation's business through lack of the funds. Although the money was ultimately repaid to Gullett, the District Court summarily dismissed the claim for lost business profits on grounds that the corporation, not Gullett, was the real party in interest. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The cause of action for recovery of lost business profits belonged to the corporation, not to a shareholder. Gullett's argument that he should not be barred from the claim because the corporation was an S. corporation also failed because even though an S. corporation is treated differently for taxation purposes, it remains a corporation in all other ways, and the corporation and its shareholders remain separate entities. Gullett v. Van Dyke Constr. Co., 2005 MT 105, 327 M 30, 111 P3d 220 (2005), following Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045 (1991). See also Smith Setzer & Sons, Inc. v. S.C. Procurement Review Panel, 20 F3d 1311 (4th Cir. 1994).

No Right of Individual Guarantor to Sue on Behalf of Corporation: Under this rule, an action must be brought by the person who is entitled to enforce the right according to the governing substantive law and will not necessarily be brought in the name of the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery. In the case of corporations, neither the Montana Business Corporation Act nor the Montana Close Corporation Act provides for an individual guarantor to sue on behalf of the corporation. Therefore, the District Court did not err in determining that claims for misuse and misappropriation of corporate funds could not be brought by individual plaintiffs. Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687, 50 St. Rep. 874 (1993).

Contract Action — Sole Owners Asserting Wrongs Done to Corporation: In bank's action against corporation to collect on corporation's note, two sole owners of the corporation did not, as individuals and sole owners, have a right to assert any cause of action arising from bank's refusal to continue financing the corporation because sole owners were attempting to assert as wrongs to themselves claims that belonged to the corporation. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991), followed in Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687, 50 St. Rep. 874 (1993), and Johnson v. Booth, 2008 MT 155, 343 M 268, 184 P3d 289 (2008).

Action by Stockholders — General Rule: As a general rule stockholders may not sue upon a cause of action belonging to their corporation whether in their own names or in the name of the corporation itself. Nor generally may they defend for it an action brought against the corporation as defendant. Malcom v. Stondall Land & Inv. Co., 129 M 142, 284 P2d 258 (1955), followed in Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989), and in Moats Trucking Co., Inc. v. Gallatin Dairies, Inc., 231 M 474, 753 P2d 883, 45 St. Rep. 772 (1988). See also Walstad v. Norwest Bank of Great Falls, 240 M 322, 783 P2d 1325, 46 St. Rep. 2160 (1989), and Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687, 50 St. Rep. 874 (1993).

Corporate Remedy Adequate: Sole or majority stockholders of a corporation cannot maintain an action for the corporation. Equity will deny them any such relief, if asked, because their remedy within the corporation is adequate. Malcom v. Stondall Land & Inv. Co., 129 M 142, 284 P2d 258 (1955).

Action by Single Stockholder: Single stockholder has no authority to bring action to quiet title where he alleges that corporation "is the sole and exclusive owner in fee simple title of the lands". Noble v. Farmers Union Trading Co., 123 M 518, 216 P2d 925 (1950), distinguished in Malcom v. Stondall Land & Inv. Co., 129 M 142, 284 P2d 258 (1955).

Former Rule 17(b). Capacity to sue or be sued

One Governmental Subdivision Not Subject to Suit by Another: School districts sued the county for recovery of lost revenue and investment income on decreased reserve funds. The Supreme Court found that dismissal of the suit was proper because absent specific statutory or constitutional authority, one governmental subdivision may not sue another for damages. School District No. 55 v. Musselshell County, 245 M 525, 802 P2d 1252, 47 St. Rep. 2249 (1990).

Certified Question — Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: In an original proceeding for declaratory judgment on two certified questions from U.S. District Court, the Supreme Court held that it abolished the defense of interspousal tort immunity in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986), because historical reasons for that immunity were no longer valid. Therefore, that doctrine did not bar claim of wife-passenger against her husband-driver for negligence in operation of motor vehicle. (See also 40-2-109 enacted in 1979.) Noone v. Fink, 222 M 273, 721 P2d 1275, 43 St. Rep. 1258 (1986).

Partnerships — Capacity to Sue in Own Name: On certification from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the Montana Supreme Court held that a joint venture between two out-of-state corporations had the capacity to bring suit as a plaintiff against a corporation under Montana law. Relying on the Uniform Partnership Act and Montana statutes that allow a partnership to be sued in its own name and to sue in Small Claims Court, the Supreme Court found clear legislative intent to treat partnerships as distinct entities with the power to sue. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 220 M 251, 714 P2d 155, 43 St. Rep. 337 (1986).

Former Rule 17(c). Infants or incompetent persons

Rule Held Not to Require Appointment of Counsel: After a husband's attorney in a marital dissolution action was allowed to withdraw, the husband's sister was appointed as his guardian ad litem. The husband then determined to represent himself, even though he suffered from a mental illness. In rejecting his appeal of the property distribution, the Supreme Court held that nothing in former Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), required the District Court to appoint counsel for the husband, noting that at no time at trial did the husband or his guardian request that counsel be appointed for him. In re Marriage of Kessler, 2011 MT 54, 359 Mont. 419, 251 P.3d 147.

Failure to Appoint Guardian Ad Litem for Minor — Abuse of Discretion: Petitioners were granted a temporary protective order against a minor. The District Court scheduled a hearing to make the order permanent. The minor was unable to attend the hearing and was not represented by counsel or by a guardian. Nevertheless, the District Court made the order permanent. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion by not appointing a guardian ad litem for the minor as required by 40-15-102 and this rule. The Supreme Court remanded for appointment of a guardian ad litem to represent the minor's interests. In re Keller v. Trull, 2007 MT 108, 337 M 188, 158 P3d 439 (2007).

No Power of Guardian to Bring Dissolution Proceeding on Behalf of Incapacitated Person: When George's health began to fail, his daughter Judy was appointed temporary guardian. George subsequently filed for divorce from Agnes, but the District Court ultimately found that George lacked the capacity to bring a dissolution action. Judy requested and was granted permanent guardianship and conservatorship over George and filed an amended dissolution petition on George's behalf. The petition was granted, and Agnes appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under 72-5-321, a guardian of an incapacitated person has the same powers, rights, and duties respecting the ward that a parent has respecting an unemancipated child. The court also cited this rule as authority for a guardian to litigate on the behalf of a ward. However, the specific provisions of 72-5-321 control over the general provisions of this rule, so the only proceedings that the guardian of an incapacitated person may bring on behalf of the ward are those types of proceedings that a parent may bring on behalf of an unemancipated minor child, and this does not include the right to bring a dissolution proceeding. Therefore, because nothing in 72-5-321 grants a guardian of an incapacitated person the authority to bring a dissolution action on behalf of a ward, the District Court committed reversible error in holding otherwise. In re Marriage of Denowh, 2003 MT 244, 317 M 314, 78 P3d 63 (2003).

Parents Sued in Capacity of Guardians — Notice Insufficient to Establish Individual Liability: Defendants were sued in their capacity as guardians of their minor son for the expenses incurred in connection with the birth of an illegitimate child fathered by their son. A default judgment was rendered against defendants. The Supreme Court reversed and vacated the default judgment, holding that the guardians' duty to safeguard the rights of their son during the legal proceeding did not subject them to personal liability for their son's allegedly wrongful acts. The Supreme Court also held that because the title of the case, the allegations in the complaint, and all motions at trial addressed the defendants in their capacity as guardians, they had insufficient notice of any likelihood of personal liability. Breuer v. Poe, 245 M 22, 797 P2d 944, 47 St. Rep. 1812 (1990).

Termination of Parental Rights — Appointment of Guardian for Incompetent Parent or Waiver of Right to Appear Required: Where mother was under order of commitment and was confined at Montana State Hospital at time of entry of order terminating her parental rights, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded on grounds that she was incompetent and either a guardian ad litem should have been appointed for her under Rule 17(c) or a waiver of her right to appear under 53-21-119(2) should have been entered. The fact that she was represented by appointed counsel does not meet the requirements of Rule 17(c). Custody of R.A.D., 44 St. Rep. 2018 (1987). Opinion withdrawn but issue affirmed in Custody of R.A.D. & J.D., 231 M 143, 753 P2d 862, 45 St. Rep. 496 (1988).

Issue of Incompetency — Duty of Court to Determine Competency: Once the issue of competency is raised, it is the duty of the court to determine whether the party is competent and to appoint a guardian ad litem if the party is incompetent. Absent that determination, an adjudication affecting the rights of the alleged incompetent cannot stand. State ex rel. Perman v. District Court, 213 M 130, 690 P2d 419, 41 St. Rep. 2002 (1984).

Rescission of Guardian Ad Litem's Appointment — No Effect on Jurisdiction: In an action initiated by a guardian ad litem on behalf of an alleged incompetent person, the District Court did not lack jurisdiction to dismiss the complaint after rescission of the guardian's appointment. Neither Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P., nor 25-5-301 provides that a guardian ad litem is a party to a lawsuit; rather, the court held that the guardian ad litem appears in a representative capacity only, and hence his removal has no effect on District Court jurisdiction. State ex rel. Perman v. District Court, 213 M 130, 690 P2d 419, 41 St. Rep. 2002 (1984).

Workers' Compensation Lump-Sum Advance — Guardian Ad Litem Appointments: A mother received a lump-sum workers' compensation advance payment. Her child had a separate, legally cognizable interest in present and future benefits, which might be prejudiced by any lump-sum payment to the mother; therefore, the Workers' Compensation Court should have either appointed a guardian ad litem to represent the child or made a finding stating why appointment was not necessary, and it was error to fail to do so. However, reversal was not required as there was a mutual benefit to mother and child in the payment of the benefits and the method of lump-sum advance repayment presented a very limited chance of financial loss to the child. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Damages Allowed: Damages awarded for injury to a minor cover both the child's cause of action and the parents' cause of action, pursuant to 27-1-512. Chavez v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 263 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Injury to Minor — Two Causes of Action: In the case of an injury to a minor, there arise two causes of action, one in favor of the minor and the other in favor of the parents under 27-1-512. Chavez v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 263 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Failure to Appoint Attorney — No Effect on Property Sale: Fact that no attorneys were appointed to represent minors in proceeding for sale of real estate by administrator of estate did not affect the validity of the proceedings under section 91-4316, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed). Haugan v. Yale Oil Corp., 124 M 1, 217 P2d 1084 (1950).

Default Judgment Against Infant Properly Vacated: Since an infant defendant could not have appeared in an action against him prior to the appointment of a guardian ad litem had he so desired, and no such guardian had been appointed at the time judgment by default was entered against him, the default was properly vacated against the contention of plaintiff that counsel employed by the father of defendant had made an insufficient showing of inadvertence or excusable neglect. Maloney v. Schandelmier, 65 M 531, 212 P 493 (1923).

Guardian Required — Plaintiff's Duty Prior to Default: An infant defendant can appear only by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem. The mere fact that a parent is the natural guardian of the child not entitling him or her to appear and defend for it and where it appears that an infant has no such guardian, it is the duty of plaintiff to bring the matter to the attention of the court before proceeding to default or judgment. Maloney v. Schandelmier, 65 M 531, 212 P 493 (1923).

Error Waived by Guardian: An infant plaintiff represented in an action at law by a guardian ad litem may not complain on appeal of errors occurring at the trial not affecting his substantial rights, where experienced counsel failed to make objections and save exceptions, and where there is no evidence of fraud or collusion on the part of counsel. Byrnes v. Butte Brewing Co., 44 M 328, 119 P 788 (1911).

Waiver of Incapacity: Where minors bring an action by their guardian, the action is not by the guardian but by the minors who are required to appear through or by a guardian. Any objection to the capacity of the minors to sue, if not taken as prescribed, is deemed waived. O'Donnell v. Butte, 44 M 97, 119 P 281 (1911).

Action by Parents or Guardian Ad Litem: A minor may maintain an action for personal injuries by his guardian ad litem, the provisions of 27-1-512 not being exclusive. Flaherty v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 454, 107 P 416 (1910).

Appointment of Guardian Ad Litem — Refusal as Abuse of Discretion: Where the daughter of an insane father, as his next friend, files a complaint and demands judgment that a decree of divorce granted to the wife of the incompetent be set aside because personal service of summons was not had upon him and asks that the court appoint a guardian ad litem to prosecute the action, his general guardian having refused to act, the court should make the appointment. It is an arbitrary abuse of discretion to refuse to do so. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909).

Guardian Required: An incompetent, whether plaintiff or defendant, must appear either by his general guardian or, in case he has none or the guardian fails or refuses to appear, by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909).

Probate Proceedings: Section 93-2805, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P.), requiring appearance by guardian and authorizing appointment of a guardian ad litem, referred to civil actions as distinguished from probate proceedings. State ex rel. Eakins v. District Court, 34 M 226, 85 P 1022 (1906).

Amendment of Complaint to Be Allowed: Where it is disclosed by proof upon the trial that the plaintiff is a minor and the complaint is then amended to show the minority and emancipation of plaintiff, the court upon the suggestion of plaintiff's minority should clothe him with capacity to sue by the appointment of a guardian and allow amendment of his complaint by inserting the name of such guardian. Hoskins v. White, 13 M 70, 32 P 163 (1893).

Former Rule 18(a). Joinder of claims

General 768
Alternative Claims 769
Multiple Parties 769
Divorce Proceedings 769

GENERAL

Partner Suing Bank — Joinder of Partnership and Other Partner Denied: Bank depositor sued his bank and his partner in separate actions arising from the same events. The bank, in the action against it, added the partnership and the partner as third-party defendants in order to try together those issues where depositor claimed the same damages against the bank and his partner. The bank alleged contractual indemnity as the basis for relief. It would not have been error to permit the third-party defendants to remain in the case, but it was not an abuse of discretion to dismiss the third-party complaint without stating the reason. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Motion to Consolidate — Denied: When plaintiff made a valid assignment of his interest in a promissory note and filed a supplemental complaint dropping him as a party plaintiff, the action on the note could not properly be joined with another action to which he was a party. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Res Judicata — Collateral Estoppel — Joinder — Interrelationship: Whether a party proceeded in the procedural manner most conducive to a full settlement of the dispute is irrelevant; an unadjudicated claim based upon unlitigated issues will receive its day in court. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Hydroponics, Inc., 147 M 157, 410 P2d 937 (1966).

Joinder of Actions for Trespass: Where plaintiff is grazing cattle of several other persons on his lands and defendant on two separate occasions commits a trespass against such cattle the causes of action may be joined. Cormier v. Fraser, 130 M 170, 296 P2d 1021 (1956).

Joinder of State Claim With Federal Action — No Waiver of State Trial: A plaintiff did not waive right to trial in state court by joining, with cause of action under Federal Employers' Liability Act, a cause of action under similar state statutes based on identical facts, and action was not removable to federal court. Hoepfner v. N. Pac. Ry., 61 F. Supp. 819 (D.C. Mont. 1945).

Waiver of Misjoinder: Where defendant failed to object to a complaint which blended two causes of action contrary to the provisions of section 93-3203, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 18(a), M.R.Civ.P.), the defect will be deemed to be waived by such failure to object. Ayotte v. Nadeau, 32 M 498, 81 P 145 (1905).

Joinder of Actions for Defamation: A plaintiff may elect to unite several causes of action for injury to character, but he is not required to do so. Paxton v. Woodward, 31 M 195, 78 P 215 (1904).

ALTERNATIVE CLAIMS

Pleading Three Separate Causes Under One Set of Facts: An employee set forth all factual allegations, followed by separate statements of three causes of action: wrongful discharge, breach of express and implied contract, and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. All of the factual allegations were essentially incorporated into each cause. An employee sufficiently indicated the intent to plead the causes as separate and independent. Mere joinder of alternative or inconsistent claims does not require dismissal of an otherwise legitimate claim, nor does the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act limit a claimant's right to plead an independent cause of action in conjunction with a claim under the Act. Beasley v. Semitool, Inc., 258 M 258, 853 P2d 84, 50 St. Rep. 522 (1993).

Action on Lease — Express Contract and Reasonable Value: While generally speaking a departure in pleading is not permissible, trial courts may in their discretion permit joinder in different counts to meet exigencies presented by the evidence, and when grounds of recovery are more or less uncertain, a count upon express contract and one on quantum meruit may properly be joined. Here plaintiff owner joined a count on the express agreement to pay a specified rent with a second cause on the reasonable value of the premises since defendant claimed nonliability under the lease. Wilson v. Milner Hotels, 116 M 424, 154 P2d 265 (1944).

Same Cause Stated in Two Counts: The trial court may in its discretion permit the same cause of action to be stated in different counts in order to meet the exigencies of the case as presented by the evidence. Lowry v. Carrier, 55 M 392, 177 P 756 (1918); Waite v. C. E. Shoemaker & Co., 50 M 264, 146 P 736 (1915); Neuman v. Grant, 36 M 77, 92 P 43 (1907); Blankenship v. Decker, 34 M 292, 85 P 1035 (1906).

Claims in Two Counts to Be Consistent — No Prejudice Shown: There is nothing in the Code to prohibit the plaintiff, acting in good faith, from stating a single cause of action in two counts in a suit to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) when the averments of each are not so inconsistent as to be contradictory and the allegations of either or both may be true, dependent upon the evidence to be produced, where the defendant is not misled to his prejudice and the exigencies of the case seem to demand such form of pleading. Neuman v. Grant, 36 M 77, 92 P 43 (1907).

MULTIPLE PARTIES

Action on Group Insurance Contract: In an action on a group insurance policy covering hospital and medical expenses and involving claimed injuries incurred by several employees covered under the policy, the court did not err in overruling the company's motion to require plaintiffs separately to state and number their causes of action since there was but one contract and the one main issue was simply the existence or nonexistence of the group insurance contract on a certain date. Cantrell v. Benefit Ass'n of Ry. Employees, 136 M 426, 348 P2d 345 (1959).

Nuisance — Causes of Action Against Former and Present Owners: Cause of action against former owner and operator of oil refinery for damage caused by flow of crude oil onto adjacent slaughterhouse premises did not affect purchaser of refinery, and after sale former owner was not a proper party to action to abate nuisance allegedly created by such flow of oil while refinery was operated by purchaser, and hence causes of action against successive owners and operators to abate nuisance and for damages were improperly joined. Midland Empire Packing Co. v. Yale Oil Corp., 119 M 36, 169 P2d 732 (1946).

Cause of Action Against One Party — Misjoinder: Causes of action may be united only when they affect all the parties to the action. Hence, where one of two causes of action affected only one of several defendants there was a misjoinder and the court erred in overruling a special demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint based on that ground. Baker v. Hanson, 72 M 22, 231 P 902 (1924).

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

Equitable Division of Property — No Plea Required: In a divorce action a District Court may completely divest the wife of her interest in property, no matter how it is held, and provide for the payment of alimony in lieu thereof. No particular pleading is required to raise question of equitable division of property; any pleading is sufficient which gives notice of pleader's intent to raise the issue and specific relief need not be requested. Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748 (1971), overruling Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), affirming Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960). See also Cook v. Cook, 159 M 98, 495 P2d at 593 (1972), as overruling Emery.

No Request for Relief — Joinder Proper: In divorce proceedings, jointly held property may be partitioned by the District Court, which has the power to settle and to adjust property jointly accumulated, regardless of whether the pleadings contain a specific prayer for partition. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 156 M 469, 482 P2d 140 (1971).

Divorce and Property Dispute Joined: Where wife brought suit for divorce and husband filed cross-complaint for adjudication of his right to property acquired by their joint effort, the general equity powers of the court were properly invoked by joining in a single action the prayer for divorce and adjudication of the dispute between the parties concerning property rights. Tolson v. Tolson, 145 M 87, 399 P2d 754 (1965), explained in Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748 (1971); accord, Bloom v. Bloom, 150 M 511, 437 P2d 1 (1968).

Divorce Action Joined With Contract Claims: Claims arising out of contract to recover specific real and personal property, and against a trustee, cannot be joined in an action for a divorce. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Former Rule 18(b). Joinder of remedies — fraudulent conveyances

Finding of Fraudulent Conveyance Rather Than Payment in Preference Affirmed: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle. Foss conveyed his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. Their marriage was subsequently dissolved. The District Court held that the property conveyance was fraudulent and allowed plaintiffs to levy execution upon the property. Fedder maintained on appeal that the transfer of title to her was in effect a payment in preference, allowable under 31-2-104, that was made in recognition that she would be entitled to maintenance or support from Foss when they dissolved their marriage. However, Fedder produced no evidence that she was a creditor of Foss at the time of the conveyance. The marriage was intact at the time of the conveyance, and the property transfer was not part of the dissolution, but rather preceded it. The District Court's decision was affirmed. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000).

Prosecution of Fraudulent Conveyance Action After Filing of Bankruptcy Petition Proper: Plaintiffs who leased mineral rights to a peat extraction operation from Foss obtained a $118,343.59 default judgment against Foss for intentional interference with access to the peat resources and for assault on one of the plaintiffs with a rifle in 1989. Foss transferred his 44% interest in the property to his then-wife Fedder for $1, which gave her an 88% interest, and Foss's children from a previous marriage held the remaining 12% interest. The marriage was subsequently dissolved, and Foss filed a bankruptcy petition in 1994, listing numerous creditors and no assets. Foss was dropped as a defendant, and plaintiffs pursued a fraudulent conveyance action against Fedder to collect on their judgment. The District Court voided the conveyance from Foss to Fedder, and granted defendants the right to levy execution upon the property. Fedder appealed, asserting that when Foss filed the bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy trustee acquired the right to avoid prepetition fraudulent conveyances and that plaintiffs thus lost their standing to pursue their claim. The Supreme Court noted that section 524(e) of the Bankruptcy Code provides that discharge of a debt does not affect the liability of any other entity for the debt. After the close of a bankruptcy, creditors are free to resume or commence a fraudulent conveyance action against the transferee in state court independent of the bankruptcy trustee, even when collection efforts may have occurred during pendency of the bankruptcy. Here, the trustee was appointed after this action was filed, and the Bankruptcy Court and the trustee had notice of the action during pendency of the bankruptcy, so the District Court did not err in granting the fraudulent conveyance judgment after conclusion of the bankruptcy proceedings. Further, pursuant to Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962), plaintiffs were not required to obtain a lien prior to bringing the fraudulent conveyance claim. Nothing mandates that a plaintiff file a proof of claim in Bankruptcy Court to preserve the right to pursue a fraudulent conveyance action against a third party transferee like Fedder. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Fedder, 2000 MT 87, 299 M 206, 999 P2d 315, 57 St. Rep. 375 (2000). See also Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Davis, 733 F2d 1083 (4th Cir. 1984), and Kathy B. Enterprises, Inc. v. U.S., 779 F2d 1413 (9th Cir. 1986).

Fraudulent Conveyance: A creditor may join with his cause of action alleging indebtedness a second cause of action under 31-2-301 through 31-2-325 (all repealed), alleging that debtor's giving of mortgages and conveyance of certain property was without fair consideration and made him insolvent, and a third cause of action alleging that after executing the mortgages he had unreasonably small capital in his business. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co. v. Ayres, 140 M 464, 373 P2d 703 (1962).

Principal and Surety: Under the rule that a separate liability of the principal cannot be joined in an action on the bond against the surety, an action by a county against its assessor to recover from him money lost to it by reason of his willful failure and neglect to assess property, was improperly joined with an action against a surety company on the official bond of that officer. Silver Bow County v. Kelly, 68 M 194, 216 P 1106 (1923).

Former Rule 19. Joinder of persons needed for just adjudication

Form of Pleadings When Information in Exclusive Control of Culpable Party: Plaintiff was injured on the job but did not know whether there was a meritorious cause of action or whether there were any culpable parties. He argued that he could not file a complaint and conduct discovery under the Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., requirement of certification that the complaint be grounded in fact because the information needed to certify the facts was in the exclusive control of the potentially culpable parties. However, Rule 11 only requires that a party make reasonable inquiry and then certify based on knowledge, information, and belief. Rule 11 does not require a guarantee or certification that every detailed fact has been thoroughly investigated and found to be correct. The Supreme Court cited the practices of joinder of parties and the filing of a fictitious "Doe" pleading as alternative ways to commence an action under such circumstances. Temple v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992).

Former Rule 19(a). Persons to be joined if feasible

Denial of Joinder of Other Landowners in Boundary Dispute — No Abuse of Discretion: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in declining to join other landowners, as the other landowners held no legal interest in the acreage at issue. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913, following Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 Mont. 248, 64 P.3d 1048.

Joinder Not Appropriate if Party Not Indispensable: Defendant pledged personal property to plaintiff as collateral for loans. Defendant failed to make payments, and plaintiff notified defendant that the property had been repossessed. The same day, several members of defendant's company resigned and formed a new company, to which defendant then leased its personal property for $100 a month. Two other codefendants also claimed an interest in the collateral and sought to join the new company as a party to the action. The District Court denied the joinder motion, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The new company held no legal interest in the property, was not a party to any of the security agreements at issue, and held no interest in the outcome of the foreclosure action or in the disposition of funds received from the sale of the property. As such, the new company was not an indispensable party to the action, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion to join the new company as a party. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), following Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217 (1996).

Joinder in Partition Action — Unnecessary Nonparty: In a suit for partition of two pieces of traditionally linked property owned by Green and Gremaux as cotenants, Green conveyed her interest in the property to her attorney, Stone. Gremaux sought to include Stone as third-party defendant and to require that both tracts of land be partitioned in the same action in order to protect against depriving Gremaux of the opportunity to obtain the highest overall value for Gremaux's interest in the land. It is within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether joinder would result in prejudice by allowing separate partition actions. Citing Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217 (1996), the Supreme Court recognized that there may be cases in which the partitioning of all the lands of an original cotenancy in one action is necessary to avoid prejudice and to afford the parties complete relief; however, joining Stone and partitioning both tracts in the same action were not necessary to provide meaningful relief in this case. Because Green received more than eight times the price from Stone than was offered by Gremaux and because the parcels were not adjacent but rather 15 miles apart, there was no basis for concluding that Gremaux would be prejudiced or unable to obtain complete relief if the two tracts were not partitioned in one action. Further, under this rule, the person sought to be joined as a party must first claim an interest in the action. Stone claimed no interest in the partition; therefore, Stone was not a necessary party to the action. In re Green v. Gremaux, 285 M 31, 945 P2d 903, 54 St. Rep. 1029 (1997).

Blackfeet Tribe Real Party in Interest — Tribe Necessary Party Even Though Not Party to Contract — Risk of Multiple and Inconsistent Obligations — Case Dismissed for Failure to Join Indispensable Party: Blaze Construction contracted with Glacier Electric Cooperative to construct 25 homes on the Blackfeet Reservation in conformance with the super good cents incentive program. Under the program, the builder (Blaze) or owner (Blackfeet Tribe) is entitled to reimbursement for additional weatherization costs of up to $1,500 for each home. Both Blaze and the tribe claimed reimbursement of the funds due under the incentive program. Blaze sued Glacier Electric in state court, alleging breach of contract for failure to pay Blaze the reimbursement payment. Glacier Electric moved to dismiss the state suit for failure to join the tribe as an indispensable party and for lack of jurisdiction over the parties. The District Court held that the tribe was an indispensable party even though it was not a party to the incentive program contract and that, given the tribe's claimed interest, Glacier Electric was in substantial risk of incurring multiple and inconsistent obligations. Recognizing that it did not have jurisdiction over the tribe, the court concluded that it would be unable to fashion any meaningful relief that would address the claims of the tribe and avoid the risk of further litigation to Glacier Electric. The court also recognized two other forums, tribal court and U.S. District Court, with jurisdiction over all three parties. The District Court dismissed for failure to join the tribe as an indispensable party and the Supreme Court affirmed. Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Employer Not Indispensable Party to Negligence Action Against Employee — Dismissal Improper: Johnson injured Mohl in a vehicle accident while Johnson was an employee of U-Haul. The trial court held that complete relief could not be granted without U-Haul being joined as a party, presumably for purposes of indemnity, and that because the statute of limitations had run against U-Haul, the action should be dismissed because of the inability to join U-Haul as an indispensable party. The Supreme Court disagreed that as employer and potential indemnitor, U-Haul was an indispensable party to the negligence suit against the employee Johnson. There was no need for an indemnity action to be resolved simultaneously with the negligence claim because the indemnity suit would arise out of and be subsequent to the negligence claim. Because the underlying negligence case had not been decided, an indemnity claim against U-Haul had not yet arisen and the statute of limitations had not yet begun to run. Dismissal of the suit constituted reversible error, and the case was remanded for continuation of the trial. Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217, 53 St. Rep. 96 (1996), followed in In re Green v. Gremaux, 285 M 31, 945 P2d 903, 54 St. Rep. 1029 (1997). See also Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Joinder of Claims Against Defendant in Official and Personal Capacities: In the interests of judicial economy, plaintiff who filed separate claims against a former supervisor in both official and personal capacities should have been allowed to join the supervisor as party defendant in both capacities because both actions arose out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences. Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991).

Surrounding Property Owners Not Necessary Parties to Easement Dispute: In a dispute between owners of a reserved easement and owners of the servient tenement, surrounding property owners are not indispensable parties because they are not persons materially interested in the subject of the action. The easement lies completely within the perimeter of the land owned by the easement and servient tenement owners. Strahan v. Bush, 237 M 265, 773 P2d 718, 46 St. Rep. 789 (1989).

Use Right of State in Bean Lake — Standing of Stockgrowers Association to Enter Suit — General Test for Any Association: As part of the statewide water rights adjudication process, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks filed a claim for a pre-1973 "use" water right appropriation for recreation, fishing, and wildlife purposes in the waters of Bean Lake. The Montana Stockgrowers Association was a proper party in the case. The Water Court required statewide notice and invitation for others to appear. The Association stated that its members could be affected, and the two other potential appropriators in Bean Lake were members of the Association. The Supreme Court adopted the following as the test to determine the standing of an association to appear as a party on behalf of its members: (1) its members would otherwise have standing in their own right; (2) the interests it seeks to protect are germane to the organization's purpose; and (3) neither the claim asserted nor the relief requested requires the participation of individual members in the suit. In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228, 45 St. Rep. 1948 (1988).

Reliance on Federal Labor Law to Determine Termination Status of Employee — Employer Not a Party: In an action relating to retirement benefits, it was not error for a judge to rely on the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) to determine whether employees had been involuntarily terminated without allegations of misconduct even though the employer was not a party to the action, the District Court did not have NLRA subject matter jurisdiction, and the applicable federal Statute of Limitations had run on the discharge. The employees' discharge status was a crucial issue in the case, and the NLRA was relied on solely to answer a question of state law pertinent to the issue raised. Felton Inv. Group v. Taurman, 222 M 238, 722 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 1228 (1986).

Determining Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Indispensable Parties: Stream access coalition, the Department of State Lands (functions now transferred to Department of Natural Resources and Conservation), and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks sued landowner along the Dearborn River, seeking a determination of the public's right to use the river. The District Court did not err for failure to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims for failure to join indispensable parties. When litigation seeks vindication of a public right, those who may be adversely affected by a decision do not thereby become indispensable parties. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Venue — Action Against Multiple Counties: In 1981, Silver Bow County erroneously reissued the registration number of plaintiff's vehicle to another automobile. The automobile was subsequently reported stolen. The vehicle was recovered but not shown as such on county records. Defendant, a Jefferson County Deputy Sheriff, saw plaintiff's vehicle and requested status information. The vehicle was shown as stolen. Plaintiff was arrested and later released upon discovery of the error. Plaintiff brought suit against both Silver Bow and Jefferson Counties in Silver Bow District Court seeking damages on several grounds. Jefferson County moved for a change of venue, which was denied. The Supreme Court found that if the provisions of the venue statutes and the Rules of Civil Procedure were applied strictly, plaintiff would be placed in an impossible situation whereby both counties were indispensable parties and either could object to venue and be entitled to a change or dismissal. The court, relying on State ex rel. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Park County, 142 M 26, 381 P2d 297 (1963), affirmed the refusal to grant a change of venue because both counties were necessary parties and because venue was proper at least as to Silver Bow County. Hutchinson v. Moran, 207 M 330, 673 P2d 818, 40 St. Rep. 2081 (1983).

Administrative Boards Not Indispensable Parties for Judicial Review: The construction and general laborer's union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the Board of Personnel Appeals. A hearing was held in which the hearings examiner confirmed the unfair labor practice charge. The Board of Personnel Appeals reviewed the hearings examiner's conclusions and confirmed the recommended order. Appellant petitioned the District Court for judicial review of the Board's order. The appellant failed to name the Board as a party as provided in 2-4-702. The District Court found that the Board was an indispensable party and dismissed the action. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the administrative boards are not indispensable parties for purposes of judicial review. Young v. Great Falls, 194 M 513, 632 P2d 1111, 38 St. Rep. 1317 (1981).

Determination of Indispensable Parties — Agency Alone Insufficient: The mere fact that an individual is alleged to be acting as an agent, whether disclosed or undisclosed, for another is not sufficient to make the individual an indispensable party. Preste v. Mtn. View Ranches, Inc., 180 M 369, 590 P2d 1132 (1979).

Suit Over Alleged Defect in Easement — Indispensable Parties: When appellants sued the party from whom they had purchased land and his real estate broker on the grounds of breach of contract and fraud for an alleged defect in an easement allowing appellants the use of a swimming pool located on adjacent land, appellants should have first litigated the existence of the easement and joined the owners of the purported servient estate, who were indispensable parties. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Rules Not Designed to Promote Litigation: When defendant in a personal injury accident attempted to compel a potential litigant to appear and bring suit by naming her as a defendant in a third-party declaratory judgment action, the trial court properly dismissed the complaint since the third-party defendant was not an indispensable party or compelled to litigate a claim which she had no intention of pursuing. If equity was to be done in a situation such as this, attorney fees were properly awarded the third-party defendant. Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978).

Parties to Contract — Effect of Property Disposition: Because the obligations of a contract are limited to the contracting parties, plaintiff properly sued defendant for recovery on two retail installment contracts executed by defendant, even though the object of the contracts became part of a property disposition to defendant's wife in a divorce decree which transferred the indebtedness along with the subject property. Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977), distinguished in Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Copromisor Should Be Joined: If a copromisor on a contract may be limited in exercising his right of contribution from the promisor on the debt by a finding of liability of the promisor in the absence of the copromisor, he should be joined as a party so that he is not deprived of due process. S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977).

Out-of-State Bank Not Party to Be Joined: Interest in loans transferred to out-of-state bank under participation agreement between lending Montana bank and out-of-state bank prior to commencement of action does not make out-of-state bank true party in interest or person to be joined if feasible when borrower sued on loan agreement and notes payable to lending Montana bank because loan agreement only establishes rights and liabilities between lending Montana bank and borrower, while participation agreement only establishes rights and liabilities between lending Montana bank and out-of-state bank. Neither establishes any contractual relationship, rights, or liabilities between borrower and out-of-state bank. Additionally, lending Montana bank is owner and sole payee on notes and as holder of notes is entitled to sue in its own name. State ex rel. Drum v. District Court, 169 M 494, 548 P2d 1377 (1976), distinguished in Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Real Party in Interest — Subrogated Interest of Insurer: In an action for the recovery of damages for property damage and personal injury, an insured may prosecute an action for the full amount of the loss or either the insured or the insurer may separately sue for his portion of the loss. If the action is instituted by either one alone the defendant can compel joinder of the other or may waive joinder. State ex rel. Slovak v. District Court, 166 M 485, 534 P2d 850 (1975).

Stipulation to Be Bound by Prior Judgment — Improper Joinder: Stipulation of owner of bulldozer to be bound by prior judgment even though not a party to previous action precluded subsequent complaint for damages to bulldozer, and there was no need to join him as a party to the previous action. Morris v. McCarthy, 159 M 236, 497 P2d 102 (1972).

Injured Party in Dispute Between Insurers: Party who brought original action for injuries but who was not party to either of policies of insurance involved and was only indirectly interested in outcome of litigation between two insurance companies was improper party in declaratory action to determine which of two insurance companies was liable. Nat'l. Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co. v. Gen. Guar. Ins. Co., 150 M 297, 434 P2d 708 (1967).

Broad View of Joinder — Adopted: In view of the fact of the protection afforded a party under the Rules of Civil Procedure and although joinder would not be proper under Rule 19, the Supreme Court adopted the broadest possible reading of the permissive language of Rule 20 in allowing joinder of defendant. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Assignee Under Security Device: The assignee of ranch tenant's net proceeds from the sale of livestock was not a necessary party to an action on the lease by the tenant against the landlord, where the assignment was not absolute and the instrument was clearly a security device on its face. Green v. Wolff, 140 M 413, 372 P2d 427 (1962).

Lack of Prejudice — Failure to Join Not Error: In an action on account for the balance due on stumpage from timber sold to the defendant, it was not error to fail to join the plaintiff's wife or the vendors from whom the plaintiff and his wife had contracted to purchase the land since it did not appear that their rights would be prejudiced by a decision in their absence. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Action Against School District — Public Contractors Indispensable: Where electors brought action to enjoin a school district from carrying out contracts for construction of a gymnasium, the contractors were indispensable parties without whose presence the court is without jurisdiction to proceed with the case, particularly to a trial on the merits. Miller v. Cut Bank High School District, 130 M 499, 305 P2d 319 (1956).

Action to Partition — Co-Owners Indispensable: Where wife asks court to partition various parcels of real property in which she and her husband have an interest it is necessary that co-owners be made parties. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948).

Attorney's Lien — Attorney Not Plaintiff: Fact that plaintiff's attorney claimed a lien for services for more than half the amount sued for did not render the attorney a real party in interest so that defendant could require him to join as a plaintiff. Phelps v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 108 M 78, 88 P2d 58 (1939).

Personal Property — Action by Multiple Owners: In an action for injury to personal property all the owners of it, whether as partners or otherwise, must join in the action as parties plaintiff, the purpose of the rule being to save defendant from further vexation at the hands of other claimants to the same demand. Thompson v. Shanley, 93 M 235, 17 P2d 1085 (1932).

Former Rule 19(b). Determination by court of whenever joinder not feasible

Blackfeet Tribe Real Party in Interest — Tribe Necessary Party Even Though Not Party to Contract — Risk of Multiple and Inconsistent Obligations — Case Dismissed for Failure to Join Indispensable Party: Blaze Construction contracted with Glacier Electric Cooperative to construct 25 homes on the Blackfeet Reservation in conformance with the super good cents incentive program. Under the program, the builder (Blaze) or owner (Blackfeet Tribe) is entitled to reimbursement for additional weatherization costs of up to $1,500 for each home. Both Blaze and the tribe claimed reimbursement of the funds due under the incentive program. Blaze sued Glacier Electric in state court, alleging breach of contract for failure to pay Blaze the reimbursement payment. Glacier Electric moved to dismiss the state suit for failure to join the tribe as an indispensable party and for lack of jurisdiction over the parties. The District Court held that the tribe was an indispensable party even though it was not a party to the incentive program contract and that, given the tribe's claimed interest, Glacier Electric was in substantial risk of incurring multiple and inconsistent obligations. Recognizing that it did not have jurisdiction over the tribe, the court concluded that it would be unable to fashion any meaningful relief that would address the claims of the tribe and avoid the risk of further litigation to Glacier Electric. The court also recognized two other forums, tribal court and U.S. District Court, with jurisdiction over all three parties. The District Court dismissed for failure to join the tribe as an indispensable party and the Supreme Court affirmed. Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Administrative Boards Not Indispensable Parties for Judicial Review: The construction and general laborer's union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the Board of Personnel Appeals. A hearing was held in which the hearings examiner confirmed the unfair labor practice charge. The Board of Personnel Appeals reviewed the hearings examiner's conclusions and confirmed the recommended order. Appellant petitioned the District Court for judicial review of the Board's order. The appellant failed to name the Board as a party as provided in 2-4-702. The District Court found that the Board was an indispensable party and dismissed the action. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the administrative boards are not indispensable parties for purposes of judicial review. Young v. Great Falls, 194 M 513, 632 P2d 1111, 38 St. Rep. 1317 (1981).

Determination Where Joinder Not Feasible — Dismissal Inequitable: In an action by a Montana bank to enforce notes held by it, but subject to a participation agreement between it and a national bank located out of state, joinder of the national bank was prohibited by federal law. Thus, even if the national bank was deemed an indispensable party, the action was properly allowed without joinder of the national bank since to hold otherwise would inequitably deny the Montana bank any remedy in the courts of its own state. State ex rel. Drum v. District Court, 169 M 494, 548 P2d 1377 (1976), distinguished in Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Former Rule 20(a). Permissive joinder

GENERAL

Joinder of Claims Against Defendant in Official and Personal Capacities: In the interests of judicial economy, plaintiff who filed separate claims against a former supervisor in both official and personal capacities should have been allowed to join the supervisor as party defendant in both capacities because both actions arose out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences. Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Partner Suing Bank — Joinder of Partnership and Other Partner Denied: Bank depositor sued his bank and his partner in separate actions arising from the same events. The bank, in the action against it, added the partnership and the partner as third-party defendants in order to try together those issues where depositor claimed the same damages against the bank and his partner. The bank alleged contractual indemnity as the basis for relief. It would not have been error to permit the third-party defendants to remain in the case, but it was not an abuse of discretion to dismiss the third-party complaint without stating the reason. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Joinder of Insurance Company: Partially subrogated insurers who had joined as parties plaintiff were entitled to change of mind and to proceed by ratification because defendants were not subjected to double jeopardy or otherwise prejudiced. State ex rel. Bohrer v. District Court, 171 M 116, 556 P2d 899 (1976).

Action on Surety Bond — Nonjoinder of Principal: Action was properly brought against surety for enforcement of obligation on bond without joinder of principal. Morgen & Oswood Constr. Co. v. USF&G Co., 167 M 64, 535 P2d 170 (1975).

Indispensable Parties — Joint and Several Obligations: When a principal and surety under a surety bond had joint and several obligations, the plaintiff could choose to sue only the surety and not both the surety and principal. Joinder of the principal was permissive and not mandatory. Morgen & Oswood Constr. Co. v. USF&G Co., 167 M 64, 535 P2d 170 (1975).

Res Judicata — Collateral Estoppel — Joinder — Interrelationship: Whether a party proceeded in the procedural manner most conducive to a full settlement of the dispute is irrelevant; an unadjudicated claim based upon unlitigated issues will receive its day in court. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Hydroponics, Inc., 147 M 157, 410 P2d 937 (1966).

Broad View of Joinder — Adopted: In view of the fact of the protection afforded a party under the Rules of Civil Procedure and although joinder would not be proper under Rule 19, the Supreme Court adopted the broadest possible reading of the permissive language of Rule 20 in allowing joinder of defendant. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Scope of Rule — No Effect on Substantive Rights: The scope of this rule is procedural in nature and removes obstacles to joinder without affecting the substantive rights of the parties, so that in a suit by real estate agents against buyer and seller, judgment for plaintiff would not in effect make the buyer a party to a prior contract between the agents and the seller. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Declaratory Judgment — Joinder of Parties and Theories: In an action under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (27-8-101 to 27-8-303) by insured against insurer, the insurer's general agent and local insurance agent, there was no misjoinder of causes of action and parties defendant even though action against the local agent was for tort and action against the insurer and general agent was on a contract, since the rights of all of the parties were intimately connected by the one transaction and the presence of all of the parties was necessary to a determination of their rights. The liability of the insurer depended upon the existence of an amendment to the contract and the liability of the local agent depended upon an absence of that same amendment. Adams & Gregoire, Inc. v. Nat'l Indem. Co., 141 M 103, 375 P2d 112 (1962).

Group Insurance — Joinder of All Insured: In an action on a group insurance policy covering hospital and medical expenses, where all the plaintiffs were employees of a company and the policy was made directly with the employees who paid the required premium and where the main issue was whether the policy was in effect on a certain date or whether it had been canceled, all the plaintiffs were interested in the question and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff. Cantrell v. Benefit Ass'n of Ry. Employees, 136 M 426, 348 P2d 345 (1959).

Debts of Husband and Wife — Joinder Improper: Joining of husband and wife by a collection agency in all actions where a claim against either was involved, although the facts in nowise justified the practice, at least amounted to sharp practice. State ex rel. Freebourn v. Merchants' Credit Serv., Inc., 104 M 76, 66 P2d 337 (1937).

Contract Parties — Nonjoinder Improper: In action to enjoin defendant from operating as a motor carrier without having obtained a certificate from the Railroad Commission, where the defense was that defendant carried only goods of a voluntary association of business, under contract with the association, the members of the association interested in the contract could and should have been made parties defendant. Bd. of R.R. Comm'rs v. Reed, 102 M 382, 58 P2d 271 (1936).

Conversion of Personal Property — Owners and Possessors: Where one plaintiff was the owner of cattle at the time of their alleged conversion, and the other was entitled to their possession under an agreement whereby he was to care for them in consideration of one-half the net proceeds of sale, both had a sufficient interest to entitle them to join as plaintiffs. Frost v. Long & Co., 66 M 385, 213 P 1107 (1923).

Equitable Interest in Wage Claim: One who has an equitable interest in a claim for wages is properly made a party defendant, to the end that a complete determination of the controversy may be had in one action. Reid v. Hennessy Co., 45 M 462, 124 P 273 (1912).

Partnership Creditors — Action on Promissory Note: In an action upon a promissory note, made between former partners, providing that it is to be subject to all defenses which the maker may have against the payee on account of any debts of the firm which the maker may be compelled, or become liable to pay, where the complaint alleges that the maker resists payment on the ground of an outstanding liability of the firm, but that no such liability exists, the parties to whom the maker claims liability are proper parties defendant. Hoskins v. McGirl, 12 M 563, 31 P 544 (1892).

SURETIES

Liability of Indemnitor Upon Settlement of Original Claim — Standard for Liability: Where the plaintiff equipment supplier sued the defendant manufacturing company in a third-party action for breach of warranty, after giving the defendant an opportunity to defend or approve a settlement of the original case, the plaintiff sustained its burden of proof by proving potential liability in the original action. Because the defendant was given the opportunity to either defend the plaintiff or approve a settlement and declined to do either, the plaintiff needed only to show potential rather than actual liability in the original action in order to recover from the defendant, and there was sufficient evidence in the record of potential liability. Iowa Mfg. Co. v. Joy Mfg. Co., 206 M 26, 669 P2d 1057, 40 St. Rep. 1479 (1983).

Reformation of Contract: In an action on a bond executed jointly by the principal and a surety company it was optional with plaintiff to proceed against either or both of the obligors, but where it was also sought to reform the contract and the surety moved that the principal be served with process, it was error to deny the motion. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928); Comerford v. USF&G Co., 59 M 243, 196 P 984 (1921).

Principal Not Indispensable Party: If an official bond joint and several in character has been signed by the principal an action may be maintained against a surety thereon without joining the principal. Deer Lodge County v. USF&G Co., 42 M 315, 112 P 1060 (1921).

Joint Defendants With Principal: Sureties bound with their principal as original promisors on the same contract may be sued jointly with the principal. Cole Mfg. Co. v. Morton, 24 M 58, 60 P 587 (1900).

Separate Contract: Where a bond is executed by sureties for the fulfillment of a contract entered into by their principals in a separate instrument, both principals and sureties may be sued jointly in an action for a breach of the contract. Wibaux v. Grinnell Live Stock Co., 9 M 154, 22 P 492 (1889).

Former Rule 20(b). Separate trials

Abuse of Discretion to Provide Separate Trials on Issues of Liability and Damages: In any case the issue of punitive damages is so interwoven with the proof—first of negligence and second of willfulness, wantonness, malice, or oppression—that their separation under this rule, for decision by a single jury seriatim or by different juries, is an abuse of discretion by the trial court. The separation would result in extended and needless litigation. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Disqualification of Judge — Res Judicata Inapplicable: Disqualification of trial judge did not make his previous order denying a severance of action against multiple defendants either res judicata or the law of the case, and successor District Judge could order severance on a new motion. State ex rel. Stenberg v. Nelson, 157 M 310, 486 P2d 870 (1971).

Severance of Action Into Separate Cases: Judge did not abuse his discretion by severing plaintiff's action into three separate cases. State ex rel. Stenberg v. Nelson, 157 M 310, 486 P2d 870 (1971).

Liberal Joinder — Effect Upon: The provisions of this rule adequately protect defendants and thus allow a liberal use of joinder guided by the discretion of trial courts. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Former Rule 21. Misjoinder and nonjoinder of parties

Service Upon Limited Liability Company Not Constituting Service Upon Individual Company Members — No Joinder of Member Solely for Executing on Judgment Against Company: Plaintiff obtained a judgment against a limited liability company, but when plaintiff discovered that the company had no assets to levy against, plaintiff moved to levy judgment against defendant personally. The motion was dismissed without prejudice, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although defendant knew of the lawsuit involving the company, defendant was not separately served, and service upon the company did not constitute service upon the individual members of the company. Further, the District Court did not err in refusing to join defendant after judgment was rendered solely for the purpose of executing judgment because doing so would have deprived defendant of the due process right to notice and the opportunity to be heard. Ioerger v. Reiner, 2005 MT 155, 327 M 424, 114 P3d 1028 (2005), following S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977), Hadford v. Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc., 1998 MT 179, 289 M 529, 962 P2d 1198 (1998), Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), and Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Joinder Not Appropriate if Party Not Indispensable: Defendant pledged personal property to plaintiff as collateral for loans. Defendant failed to make payments, and plaintiff notified defendant that the property had been repossessed. The same day, several members of defendant's company resigned and formed a new company, to which defendant then leased its personal property for $100 a month. Two other codefendants also claimed an interest in the collateral and sought to join the new company as a party to the action. The District Court denied the joinder motion, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The new company held no legal interest in the property, was not a party to any of the security agreements at issue, and held no interest in the outcome of the foreclosure action or in the disposition of funds received from the sale of the property. As such, the new company was not an indispensable party to the action, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion to join the new company as a party. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), following Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217 (1996).

Failure to Serve Original Summons Cured by Service of Amended Summons — Failure to Obtain Leave of Court to Amend Summons and Remove Party From Summons Not Fatal to Service of Process: Schmitz filed a pro se action for medical malpractice against Vasquez and Sanz on April 5, 1994. On April 1, 1997, after determining that her claim against Sanz had not gone through the Montana Medical Legal Panel procedure, Schmitz amended her complaint without permission of the District Court and, through counsel, filed the amended complaint. A new summons was issued by the Clerk of District Court on April 1, 1997, and was served on Vasquez the same day. The amended complaint and the new summons were identical to those previously filed and issued except that they did not include any claim against or notice to Sanz. The District Court dismissed the suit because the original summons had not been served within 3 years of its issuance, as required by Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. Relying upon Yarborough v. Glacier County, 285 M 494, 948 P2d 1181 (1997), and distinguishing Ass'n of Unit Owners v. Big Sky, 224 M 142, 729 P2d 469 (1986), and Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the Supreme Court held that since the amended complaint and new summons had only the effect of deleting Sanz as a defendant, Vasquez received the same notice from the amended complaint and second summons that he would have received from the first complaint and summons and therefore was not prejudiced by Schmitz's failure to serve the first complaint within 3 years and failure to obtain leave of court to amend the summons by removing Sanz as a defendant. For these reasons and because the purpose of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure is to obtain a just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action, the Supreme Court held that Schmitz complied with the substance and purpose of Rule 41(e) and that the District Court erred in dismissing the suit. Schmitz v. Vasquez, 1998 MT 314, 292 M 164, 970 M 1039, 55 St. Rep. 1288 (1998).

Employer Not Indispensable Party to Negligence Action Against Employee — Dismissal Improper: Johnson injured Mohl in a vehicle accident while Johnson was an employee of U-Haul. The trial court held that complete relief could not be granted without U-Haul being joined as a party, presumably for purposes of indemnity, and that because the statute of limitations had run against U-Haul, the action should be dismissed because of the inability to join U-Haul as an indispensable party. The Supreme Court disagreed that as employer and potential indemnitor, U-Haul was an indispensable party to the negligence suit against the employee Johnson. There was no need for an indemnity action to be resolved simultaneously with the negligence claim because the indemnity suit would arise out of and be subsequent to the negligence claim. Because the underlying negligence case had not been decided, an indemnity claim against U-Haul had not yet arisen and the statute of limitations had not yet begun to run. Dismissal of the suit constituted reversible error, and the case was remanded for continuation of the trial. Mohl v. Johnson, 275 M 167, 911 P2d 217, 53 St. Rep. 96 (1996), followed in In re Green v. Gremaux, 285 M 31, 945 P2d 903, 54 St. Rep. 1029 (1997). See also Blaze Constr., Inc. v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 280 M 7, 928 P2d 224, 53 St. Rep. 1274 (1996).

Order Denying Joinder of Parties Not Appealable Absent Certification: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of property to the plaintiffs, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' motion for joinder of the owners of the company as a party defendant, and on appeal the defendant challenged the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, alleging that the notice of appeal should have been filed within 30 days after the order denying the motion for joinder. The Supreme Court held that absent certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., an order denying joinder of parties is not a final judgment. Thus, denial of the motion was not ripe for appeal until completion of the trial. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Refusal to Allow Joinder Upon Remand Abuse of Discretion: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of real property to the plaintiffs, the Supreme Court found that a stipulated dismissal with prejudice of the company's owners was actually a substitution of parties. Upon remand, the District Court again refused to allow joinder of the owners because of the previous stipulation. On a second appeal, the Supreme Court found that while joinder of parties is a matter within the discretion of the trial court, the District Court had, under the rationale in Holiday Publishing Co. v. Gregg, 330 F. Supp. 1326 (S.D. NY 1971), and Foman v. Davis, 371 US 178, 9 L Ed 2d 222, 83 S Ct 227 (1962), acted contrary to the spirit of the Rules of Civil Procedure and abused its discretion in denying the joinder motion. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Substitution of Corporation Rather Than Dismissal of Employee: A suit was brought against several defendants, including "Robert Payne and James Payne, d/b/a Ponderosa Realty". At the time of trial it was disclosed that Ponderosa Realty is a corporation. The parties stipulated that Ponderosa Realty was a proper party and dismissed the suit against the two Paynes. At the end of the plaintiffs' case, Ponderosa Realty moved to dismiss, arguing that the dismissal of the two Paynes, in effect, was a dismissal of Ponderosa Realty, since the corporation could only be liable through the actions of its employees or agents. The court rejected the argument, saying that what occurred was not a substantive dismissal with prejudice of an agent or employee but rather the substitution of a proper party before the court. White v. Fidelity Real Estate, 196 M 156, 638 P2d 1053, 39 St. Rep. 1 (1982).

Jurisdiction Not Conferred by Rule — Proper Parties and Timeliness — Labor Dispute: Retail clerks went on strike against petitioner in a labor dispute. The clerks claimed unemployment benefits. Benefits are denied during a strike if unemployment results from a "stoppage of work" existing because of a labor dispute. A deputy of the Employment Security Division found claimants disqualified from benefits. Claiming strikers appealed to a referee, who sustained the denial of benefits. Claimants then appealed to the Board of Labor Appeals (now the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board), which reversed the referee. Petitioner filed petitions for review with the District Court, naming as respondent the Board. Following a motion to dismiss the petition, the appellants and counsel for the Employment Security Division entered an agreement to substitute the Division for the Board, and the court ordered the substitution. The clerks were not made parties, and at the time service was made on the Board, appellants did not provide sufficient copies. The clerks' union moved to intervene, and the motion was granted. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, concluding that failure to name all parties and failure to provide sufficient copies of the petition for service were fatal jurisdictional flaws. Petitioners argued that intervention by the union conferred jurisdiction. It did not. The answer raised lack of jurisdiction. Petitioners argued the applicability of Rule 21, M.R.Civ.P., which provides that parties may be added or dropped at any stage of the proceeding. The rule presupposes in personam jurisdiction. The rule does not confer that jurisdiction. Under 39-51-2410, the decision of the Board became final as to claimants 30 days after notification of the decision. The District Court thereafter had no jurisdiction over the clerks and could acquire none. Claimants' benefits could not be adversely affected, but they are not indispensable to a review of legal questions by the District Court. There is a justiciable controversy between petitioners and the Employment Security Division concerning "work stoppage". F. W. Woolworth Co., Inc., v. Employment Sec. Div., 192 M 289, 627 P2d 851, 38 St. Rep. 694 (1981).

Severance of Action Into Separate Cases: Judge did not abuse his discretion by severing plaintiff's action into three separate cases. State ex rel. Stenberg v. Nelson, 157 M 310, 486 P2d 870 (1971).

Liberal Joinder — Effect Upon: The provisions of this rule adequately protect defendants and thus allow a liberal use of joinder guided by the discretion of trial courts. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Condemnation Proceedings — Addition of Parties on Appeal: In a condemnation proceeding, the condemner should be permitted to add a necessary party defendant after an appeal has been perfected by the condemner from an assessment by the commissioners. The assessment by the commissioners is not a judgment but merely an award by the lay commissioners of damages contained in their report. State ex rel. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 136 M 362, 348 P2d 132 (1959).

Former Rule 22(a). By joinder, cross-claim or counterclaim

GENERAL

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Attorney Fees Not Allowable: When plaintiff, by using less than prudent banking practices in handling defendants' account, placed itself in a position necessitating interpleader to avoid double vexation and was not a disinterested stakeholder, attorney fees were not allowable. First Nat'l Bank of Circle v. Garner, 173 M 195, 567 P2d 40 (1977).

Impartiality of Plaintiff Required: An attitude of perfect disinterestedness, excluding even an indirect interest of the plaintiff, is necessary if plaintiff is to maintain a bill of interpleader. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Showing of Plaintiff's Interest Improperly Stricken: In an interpleader action, allegations of defendants tending to show that plaintiff was not a disinterested stakeholder and that it had incurred an independent liability to defendants, were improperly stricken on the plaintiff's motion since by such motion plaintiff failed to maintain its position as a disinterested stakeholder. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Action on Storage Contract — Affirmative Relief Sought: An action in interpleader by an elevator company against rival claimants to grain in storage asking for affirmative relief by recovery of storage charges and cancellation of excess storage tickets was proper under section 88-117, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed), a part of the Uniform Warehouse Receipts Act. Rocky Mtn. Elevator Co. v. Bammel, 106 M 407, 81 P2d 673 (1938).

Forms of Interpleader: Both at law and in equity, interpleader results (1) where a stakeholder brings an action to compel the claimants to interplead; and (2) where one of the claimants brings the action against the stakeholder who petitions the court for permission to deposit the fund in court, that the claimants be substituted in his place as parties, and that they then interplead and have their rights determined. If the petition is granted there is a substitution of parties, and thereafter interpleader. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. St. Bank of Townsend, 103 M 260, 62 P2d 677 (1936).

Deposit in Court: One bringing an interpleader action under the provision for initiation of the action by the interpleader, which did not provide for payment into court, did not relieve himself of responsibility by placing the money in the clerk's hands. If he does so and the clerk receives it, it is not in the latter's official custody, and by receiving it without authority to do so the clerk becomes a mere bailee for the depositor. Doggett v. Johnson, 82 M 21, 265 P 673 (1928).

MERITS OF CONFLICTING CLAIMS

Contents of Petition or Affidavit: The petition or affidavit in interpleader must disclose some reasonable basis of conflicting claims to the fund or property. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Determination by Appeal — Interpleader Inapplicable: Where the rights and claims of parties to a debt had been fully determined by the Supreme Court in a prior action, the findings as to these matters were res judicata and there was no longer any conflict that could justify interpleader by the debtor. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Attorney's Fees From Insurance Proceeds: In an action in interpleader to determine the rights of attaching creditors and of an attorney who had taken an assignment of insurance proceeds to the extent of such sum as might be due him for fees, the court erred in not deciding an issue raised between the attorney and the creditors as to the reasonable value of the attorney's services. Davis v. Claxton, 82 M 574, 268 P 787 (1928).

Former Rule 22(b). By substitution

Attorney Fees and Costs for Interpleader: A stakeholder, disinterested in the result, who interpleads money or property so that the court may decide the true owner, is entitled to costs and reasonable attorney fees, which may be charged against the stake to be distributed. Whether the stake must then be replenished by the losing party is within the discretion of the court. Generally the losing party is under no absolute duty to pay the interpleader's attorney fees and costs if a bona fide conflict existed. Soha v. West, 196 M 95, 637 P2d 1185, 38 St. Rep. 2153 (1981).

Time for Defensive Interpleader: Where defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking substitution of parties and plaintiff asked that it either be dismissed or that defendant make a deposit and proceed under the interpleader statute, plaintiff may not thereafter raise the point that the deposit is untimely because made after answer, and defendant should be permitted to proceed with such petition, deposit, and showing by affidavit to obtain an order allowing substitution, and the erroneous papers stricken. State ex rel. Bedord v. District Court, 112 M 192, 114 P2d 265 (1941).

Withdrawal Refused: The District Court may refuse to permit the withdrawal of a party whose presence is necessary unless withdrawal is definite and irrevocable determination of the rights of that party. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. St. Bank of Townsend, 103 M 260, 62 P2d 677 (1936).

Cross-Complaint Insufficient for Substitution: A cross-complaint filed by defendant as part of his answer was not susceptible of interpretation as a complaint in interpleader, in the absence of compliance with section 93-2825, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 22, M.R.Civ.P.), requiring that defendant before answering file the affidavit provided for or apply for an order substituting attaching creditors in his place. The pleading was insufficient to bring it within the concluding part of the section, which provided for discharge of the interpleading party. Sec. St. Bank of Roy v. Melchert, 67 M 535, 216 P 340 (1923).

Substitution by Interpleader Assumed: Where the answer shows that persons appear as defendants, who were not originally defendants, but were by the order of the court substituted as such, it may be inferred from such fact that the substitution was made in pursuance of the interpleader statute. Mettler v. Adamson, 38 M 198, 99 P 441 (1909).

Irregularity of Proceedings Waived by Substituted Defendant: Where an application for substitution is made on an amended answer, and the party substituted becomes defendant without objection, he waives irregularities in the mode of substitution. Anderson v. Red Metal Min. Co., 36 M 312, 93 P 44 (1907).

Claim and Delivery — Control Over Property Required: In an action in claim and delivery, the court cannot make an order substituting in place of defendant a claimant of the property, on application of defendant who has no control over the property and no power to deliver it on the order of the court. State ex rel. Weinstein Co. v. District Court, 28 M 445, 72 P 867 (1903).

Former Rule 23. Class actions

Commonality — More Stringent Requirement Satisfied: Plaintiff employees sued defendant employers, healthcare businesses, challenging the discontinuation of a sick leave buyback program and seeking class certification, which the District Court granted. The Supreme Court noted the commonality requirement adopted in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 US 338 (2011), which is more stringent than Montana precedent that commonality is met when a single issue is common to all class members regardless of differences among the class, and concluded that the employees satisfied the more stringent federal requirement because their claims depended on a common contention that was capable of classwide resolution. Certification was proper because the employers operated under a companywide policy that applied equally to all members of the class, and denying certification could result in employees bringing over 1,200 individual lawsuits. Chipman v. NW. Healthcare Corp., 2012 MT 242, 366 Mont. 450, 288 P.3d 193. See also Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2012 MT 318, 368 Mont. 1, 291 P.3d 1209.

Claims for Malice and Punitive Damages Properly Certified — Motion to Certify as Class Action Upheld: In a class action filed by former Montana Power Company employees against the company's successors in interest for past-due workers' compensation "impairment awards," the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it certified the class's claims for malice and punitive damages. The class's claims for malice and punitive damages were based on the company's conduct, including withholding information, failing to investigate, and the company's system and method of handling claims, not on fact-specific issues of reasonable reliance by members of the class. Gonzales v. Mont. Power Co., 2010 MT 117, 356 Mont. 351, 233 P.3d 328.

Water Supply Company Not Entitled to Attorney Fees if Successful Defending Against Class Action: Certain residents of Butte brought a class action against the local water company alleging that the water was polluted and was a health problem. The company argued that the lower court should have included in the notice sent to residents concerning the class action a statement that if the residents chose to join in the action, they might be liable for the water company's attorney fees if the company was successful in defending against the suit. The Supreme Court held that the contract between the company and the residents for the supply of water did not contain an express provision providing for attorney fees and therefore the prevailing party had no contractual right to fees and further held that the lower court had properly excluded any reference to attorney fees from the notice. McDonald v. Washington, 261 M 392, 862 P2d 1150, 50 St. Rep. 1374 (1993).

Class Action — Venue: Venue for a class action is determined just as it is for a comparable nonclass action. Thus, venue must be satisfied as to all named class representatives, just as it must be to all plaintiffs and defendants in a nonclass action. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Former Rule 23(a). Prerequisites to a class action

Action for Residual Diminished Value — Lack of Standing Under UDJA: The plaintiff, individually and on behalf of a class, sought residual diminished value damages — the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made — under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (UDJA). The Supreme Court concluded the District Court erred in granting class certification. Because residual diminished value does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute", the plaintiff was barred from seeking damages under the UDJA without first meeting the requirements of 33-18-242. Since the plaintiff had not satisfied the 33-18-242 requirements, he lacked individual standing to raise his claim and, therefore, lacked the requisite typicality to raise a claim on behalf of the class. Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981.

Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Requirements for Class Action Certification Met: Ferguson sought class action certification of a case involving an insurer that subrogated against the tortfeasor's insurance carrier before Ferguson was made whole. The District Court denied certification on grounds that under Swanson v. Hartford Ins. Co. of the Midwest, 2002 MT 81, 309 M 269, 46 P3d 584 (2002), the legal duty for insurers taking subrogation eliminated the common issue and on grounds that because Ferguson's case required fact-specific determinations of "made whole" entitlements, class action was not appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. As in Sieglock v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2003 MT 355, 319 M 8, 81 P3d 495 (2003), the District Court failed to consider whether the plaintiff class presented common issues of fact, particularly the common issues of fact arising from the insurer's subrogation program. The existence of the well-established duty on the part of the insurer to make the insured whole prior to subrogation, as set out in Swanson, did not eliminate the common fact issue of whether the insurer programmatically breached that duty, and when a common scheme of deceptive conduct is alleged, common questions of law or fact will exist (see Powers v. Gov't Employees Ins. Co., 192 FRD 313 (S.D. Fla. 1998)). Thus, Ferguson satisfied the commonality issue. The District Court further erred in reasoning that Ferguson failed to demonstrate that any common issues predominate over questions affecting only individual members of the affected class. Ferguson's challenge was not to an error in the insurer's application of the "made whole" rule to any given insured, but rather to the procedures of a program of subrogation that systematically deprived all class members of any consideration of their "made whole" rights, so predominance was not required for class certification in this case. Last, the efficient remedy of classwide declaratory relief was appropriate because the size of the average claim was so small that relief for the average class member was not economically available outside class litigation. The case was remanded for further proceedings as a class action. Ferguson v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 2008 MT 109, 342 M 380, 180 P3d 1164 (2008), followed in Diaz v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2011 MT 322, 363 Mont. 151, 267 P.3d 756.

Remand for Failure of District Court to Consider Commonality of Fact in Determining Whether Class Action Prerequisites Met: In an alleged effort to identify budget overruns, defendant railroad published the names, residences, and Social Security numbers of its 300 top overtime earners in 24 different states, including 18 employees from Montana. Five employees from four different states filed a class action suit in Montana, basing the cause of action on wrongful publication of private information, breach of fiduciary duty, and negligent management. The District Court held that plaintiffs failed to meet the commonality requirements of subsection (a)(2) of this rule because the proposed class did not share common questions of law or fact and failed to certify the proposed class. On appeal, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the decision that the proposed class did not share common questions of law. However, commonality is also satisfied when there is a common core of salient facts coupled with disparate legal remedies within the class, and it did not appear that the District Court considered whether plaintiffs shared a common core of salient facts. Because the requirements for showing commonality are in the disjunctive, the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of whether plaintiffs shared a common core of salient facts sufficient to establish a class action. Sieglock v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2003 MT 355, 319 M 8, 81 P3d 495 (2003).

Prerequisites for Class Action Met in Suit Concerning Butte Water Supply: Residents of Butte filed a class action against the local water supplier, which argued that the lower court erred when it concluded that the lawsuit should be adjudicated as a class action. The Supreme Court held that the prerequisites for a class action had been met in that the plaintiffs had shown that: (1) the class, which included nearly all water consumers, was so numerous that it would be impractical to join all members of the class; (2) all counts in the action stemmed from the failure to provide potable water and adequate service, therefore the class members shared common issues of law and fact; (3) the typicality requirement was met in that the injuries suffered by the named plaintiffs were the same as those suffered by the class and all injuries stemmed from the same course of conduct allegedly displayed by the defendant; (4) the named representatives would adequately protect the interests of the class because the representatives' interests in potable water and adequate service were coextensive with those of the remaining class members; (5) although the individual damages of the class could vary, the individual issues of causation and damages would not preclude certification as a class action; and (6) the claims involved in the case would be unresolved without a class action because most of them were minor in and of themselves. McDonald v. Washington, 261 M 392, 862 P2d 1150, 50 St. Rep. 1374 (1993).

Trial Court Error in Excluding Certain Persons From Class Action: Residents of Butte sought to initiate a class action suit against the local water supplier because of the health hazards presented by consumption and use of the water. The plaintiffs argued that the class should be certified to include all persons using the water, but the District Court limited the class to those persons and entities billed for using the water. The Supreme Court held that the lower court could not arbitrarily limit the class to billed consumers when nonbilled consumers also allegedly suffered damages similar to and in addition to the damages allegedly suffered by billed consumers. McDonald v. Washington, 261 M 392, 862 P2d 1150, 50 St. Rep. 1374 (1993).

Showing of "Typicality" Prerequisite for Class Action: Nine injured workers whose weekly benefit payments had been discontinued filed a class action suit in the Workers' Compensation Court for restitution of the benefits. In denying class certification, the District Court ruled that the workers' claims and defenses were not typical of those of the whole class. Citing La Mar v. H&B Novelty & Loan Co., 489 F2d 461 (9th Cir. 1973), which construed the requirements of this rule, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court decision, holding that the workers were not entitled to bring a class action against defendants with whom they had no dealing. Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 257 M 434, 849 P2d 1036, 50 St. Rep. 344 (1993).

Prerequisites Met: In a suit brought by a condominium unit owner, the Supreme Court remanded a District Court decision denying a case as a class action upon finding that: (1) the class of unit owners was so numerous that joinder of all members was impractical; (2) the claims of plaintiffs were typical of the claims of the class; and (3) there was a sufficient identity to the types of claims made by the various unit owners that the representative parties would fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. State ex rel. Boyne USA, Inc. v. District Court, 228 M 314, 742 P2d 464, 44 St. Rep. 1550 (1987).

Requirement of Demand: While the making of a demand may not be required under all circumstances, the plaintiff must set forth the reasons for not making such demand. S-W Co. v. John Wight, Inc., 179 M 392, 587 P2d 348 (1978).

Requirements to Bring Action: It is not necessary that derivative action plaintiffs have the support of a majority of the shareholders or even that they be supported by all minority shareholders. The standard is whether the plaintiff represents other shareholders similarly situated. S-W Co. v. John Wight, Inc., 179 M 392, 587 P2d 348 (1978).

Former Rule 23(b). Class actions maintainable

Class Certification Proper — Common Question Presented for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief: Insureds under the state of Montana employee benefit plan sued the state and the third-party administrators (TPAs) who administer the state benefit plan, alleging violations of the subrogation statutes, Title 2, chapter 18, part 9, and seeking class certification. The District Court denied class certification. The Supreme Court, relying upon Ferguson v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 2008 MT 109, 342 Mont. 380, 180 P.3d 1164, concluded that class certification was proper under former Rule 23(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because the insureds presented a common question for declaratory and injunctive relief and a single answer would affect all class members. Diaz v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2011 MT 322, 363 Mont. 151, 267 P.3d 756.

Standing of Taxpayers: Affected taxpayers had standing under this rule to ask for declaratory judgment against Boards of County Commissioners which increased appraisals on ground that State Board of Equalization (functions now divided between Director of the Department of Revenue and the State Tax Appeals Board) used wrong rates in assessing timberlands. State ex rel. Conrad v. Managhan, 157 M 335, 485 P2d 948 (1971).

Group Insurance Policy — Joinder of Policy Holders: In an action on a group insurance policy covering hospital and medical expenses where all the plaintiffs were employees of a company and the policy was made directly with the employees who paid the required premium and where the main issue was whether the policy was in effect on a certain date or whether it had been canceled, all the plaintiffs were interested in the question and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff. Cantrell v. Benefit Ass'n of Ry. Employees, 136 M 426, 348 P2d 345 (1959).

Equity Actions — Sufficient Representation: A suit brought under section 93-2821, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 23, M.R.Civ.P.) by a creditor of a defunct bank for the benefit of all its creditors was in equity, and therefore the parties were not entitled to a jury trial. In such a suit it is not necessary that those creditors whose names do not appear as plaintiffs should be "similarly situated" as the party who brings it, it being sufficient if they are commonly or generally interested in the subject matter involved. State ex rel. Lewis & Clark County v. District Court, 90 M 213, 300 P 544 (1931).

Creditors as Class — Allegations of Representation: A complaint in an action by a number of creditors of an insolvent bank alleging that they were filing the complaint for and in behalf of themselves and all other creditors of the bank, that the number of creditors was more than 1,000, that their names were unknown to plaintiffs, etc., and praying for an order permitting them to maintain the action on behalf of all the creditors of the bank, was sufficient. Rohr v. Stanton, 78 M 494, 254 P 869 (1927).

Representation of Class — Allegations of Complaint: Where an action is brought by a few persons in a representative capacity, that fact must be alleged in the pleading, the usual averment being that the action is brought not only for the benefit of the plaintiffs but also for the benefit of all others similarly interested who may elect to come in and contribute to the costs and expenses of the suit. Rohr v. Stanton, 78 M 494, 254 P 869 (1927).

Joint Obligation — Imputed Knowledge by Agent: An obligation running to a combination of persons jointly could not be changed into one actionable by any member of it, by the fact that defendant's agent knew from previous transactions that plaintiff was a member of the combination, and that failure to perform would result in damage to the latter. Am. Livestock & Loan Co. v. Great N. Ry., 48 M 495, 138 P 1102 (1914).

Joint Obligees — All Obligees to Be Made Parties: Neither in actions ex contractu nor in actions ex delicto can the plea of an obligation to the plaintiff individually be sustained by the proof of an obligation running to himself and others jointly, for the reason that to maintain a joint obligation all the obligees must be parties to the action. This was the rule at common law. Am.

Livestock & Loan Co. v. Great N. Ry., 48 M 495, 138 P 1102 (1914). See Scott v. Waggoner, 48 M 536, 139 P 454 (1914).

Action on Joint Bond — Necessary Parties: In an action for debt on an injunction bond, all of the obligees are necessary parties to the action, the bond being as to them jointly and not severally, and the fact that some of the obligees had no interest in the subject of the suit in which the injunction was granted does not change the rule. Mont. Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 19 M 313, 48 P 305 (1897).

Former Rule 23(c). Determination by order whether class action to be maintained — notice — judgment — actions conducted partially as class actions

Maintaining Class Action — Appeal From Order Allowing: Supreme Court refused to issue Writ of Supervisory Control to party seeking relief from order denying their motion for declaration that action against them could not be maintained as a class action. State ex rel. Anaconda Aluminum Co. v. District Court, 158 M 228, 490 P2d 351 (1971).

Former Rule 23.1. Derivative actions by shareholders

Failure of Limited Partners to Request General Partner to Initiate Suit: The limited partners sued the bank, alleging that the bank had forced the general partner to breach his fiduciary duty to the limited partners. The lower court dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim, holding that the plaintiffs had not alleged that they were suing in a derivative capacity and that they had failed to set forth with particularity their efforts to obtain action by the general partner. The Supreme Court ruled that under Rule 9(a), M.R.Civ.P., the plaintiffs did not need to allege that they were suing in a derivative capacity. The court also held that although Rule 23.1, M.R.Civ.P., and 35-12-1403 require the plaintiffs to set out with particularity their efforts to get the general partner to take action, the lower court should have given the plaintiffs a chance to amend their complaint. Larson v. First Interstate Bank, 241 M 350, 786 P2d 1176, 47 St. Rep. 344 (1990).

Former Rule 24. Intervention

Grants of Intervention Not Appealable: The plaintiff appealed the lower court's decision to let a third party intervene in the plaintiff's suit against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that granting intervention was interlocutory and not subject to appeal. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, Inc. v. Glacier Wilderness Ranch, Inc., 242 M 471, 791 P2d 1363, 47 St. Rep. 892 (1990).

Former Rule 24(a). Intervention of right

Intervention Allowed After Final Judgment — No Abuse of Discretion: Landowners sued the Helena City Commission for approving an allegedly inadequate subdivision plat. The District Court held in favor of the landowners, and the Commission decided not to appeal. The subdivision developer moved to intervene following the judgment, and the District Court allowed intervention. On appeal, the landowners argued that intervention after judgment was disfavored and should not have been allowed. The Supreme Court disagreed. In this case, intervention was timely, given that it did not delay the case and was well within the time allowed for an appeal from the judgment. The developer had substantial interests in the matter but was no longer represented after the Commission decided to forgo an appeal. Further, the landowners were not prejudiced by having to defend the judgment against the developer rather than the Commission. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing intervention, and the decision to allow intervention by the developer was affirmed. Aspen Trails Ranch, LLC v. Simmons, 2010 MT 79, 356 Mont. 41, 230 P.3d 808.

No Sufficient Claim of Interest by Ex-Spouse to Intervene in Invalidity Proceedings: Holly instituted marriage invalidity proceedings against husband Joseph, seeking an annulment. Ex-husband Walter moved to intervene in the proceedings, arguing a direct interest in the proceedings because Holly was requesting an annulment rather than a divorce so that Holly could again receive maintenance payments from Walter. The District Court denied the request for intervention as a matter of right, and Walter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A party seeking intervention as a matter of right must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protected interest in the proceedings, and a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention. The only proper parties to the invalidity proceedings were Holly and Joseph. Walter failed to demonstrate a direct, substantial, legally protected interest in the proceedings. The proper forum for Walter's claims was the court that entered the dissolution in Walter and Holly's divorce action. Denial of Walter's intervention motion was proper. In Injured Worker Intervening in Dissolution Proceeding — No Standing to Challenge Whether Marriage Is Irretrievably Broken: Faw was injured while employed at the Heidemas' ranch, and they did not have workers' compensation coverage. His medical expenses from his injuries exceeded $1 million. Faw sued the Heidema brothers, whose wives subsequently during the same month each filed for divorce. Faw alleged that the dissolution proceeding between Sydne Heidema and Jack Heidema was a sham to protect the wife's interest in the ranch assets. Faw's motion to intervene in the dissolution action was granted, and subsequently, the final decree of dissolution was granted by the District Court. Faw appealed, arguing that the marriage was not irretrievably broken and that he was prejudiced by entry of the decree before the Heidemas had responded to his discovery requests regarding asset disclosure. In dicta, the Supreme Court stated that it was questionable whether the District Court should have allowed Faw to intervene but that the Heidemas had not appealed that order. The Supreme Court held that Faw was not prejudiced by entry of the decree because there was no relief that he could have obtained in the dissolution action because he was not a party to the marriage. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not have the jurisdiction under a dissolution action to have the marital assets placed with a third party to preserve the assets because the lower court only had authority to apportion marital assets between the spouses. The Supreme Court further held that Faw, by not being a party to the marriage, had no right to assert that the marriage was or was not irretrievably broken. In re Marriage of Heidema, 2007 MT 20, 335 M 362, 152 P3d 112 (2007).

Failure of District Court to Determine Indian Status of Children Prior to Termination of Parental Rights Warranting Reversal: Absent a conclusive determination from the affected tribes, it was reversible error for the District Court to terminate a mother's parental rights without definitely resolving the threshold question of whether the children were Indian children within the meaning of the Indian Child Welfare Act. In this case, the District Court was presented with insufficient evidence regarding the children's status because of the mother's failure to present crucial evidence regarding the children's possible tribal affiliation and the tribe's delay in intervening. However, the tribe's right to intervene was not impaired by the delay, and the court should not have proceeded absent a conclusive determination that the children were not tribal members. In re A.G., W.G., T.A., & J.A., 2005 MT 81, 326 M 403, 109 P3d 756 (2005).

Appropriateness of Intervention in Action Challenging Enforcement of Ballot Initiative: Two sporting groups sought to intervene in an action challenging the enforcement of a ballot initiative that prohibited the shooting of alternative livestock for a fee. The District Court denied the motion, and the groups appealed. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court noted that an application for intervention as a matter of right must satisfy each of the following factors: (1) timeliness; (2) interest in the subject matter of the litigation; (3) a showing that protection of the interest may be impaired by disposition of the action; and (4) a showing that the interest is not adequately represented by an existing party. In the present case, timeliness was not disputed. Regarding the second factor, the Supreme Court cited Idaho Farm Bureau Fed'n v. Babbitt, 58 F3d 1392 (9th Cir. 1995), for the proposition that a public interest group is entitled as a matter of right to intervene in an action challenging the legality of a measure that the group has supported. The District Court did not address the third factor because it determined that the groups had no legally protectable interest in the litigation. However, the Supreme Court found that an adverse decision in the suit would impair the groups' interest in the management and protection of Montana's game animals, so the third factor was met. Finally, the District Court determined that the groups failed to demonstrate that the Attorney General, on behalf of the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, would not zealously defend the groups' position in the suit. The Supreme Court concluded that the groups that actively drafted and supported the initiative may be in the best position to defend their interpretation of the resulting legislation and may not have been adequately represented by the Department. Thus, all four factors were met, and the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to permit the groups to intervene in the case. Sportsmen for I-143 v. District Court, 2002 MT 18, 308 M 189, 40 P3d 400 (2002).

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Initially, neither District Court was aware of the competing adoption petitions. The Department of Public Health and Human Services had been reviewing both couples as potential adoptive resources at the same time and ultimately determined that because the child had formed a strong bond during placement with couple A for nearly 2 years, it would be in the child's best interests to be adopted by couple A. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to this rule and that permissive intervention under Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of Rule 24(b), M.R.Civ.P., because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of Rule 60(b) on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. In re Adoption of C.C.L.B., 2001 MT 66, 305 M 22, 22 P3d 646 (2001).

Easement Property — Defendant and Intervenor Held to Have Differing Interests: In 1890, the Missoula County Commission granted a petition declaring a road to be a public highway, and in 1937, DeVoe's predecessors in interest granted the state a right-of-way easement for construction of a highway adjacent to the 1890 highway. After receiving the easement, the state built a curving intersection of the 1890 highway with another road on the land granted by the 1937 easement but later, in 1983, removed the curving intersection in favor of a 90-degree intersection. Devoe claimed that the land subject to the 1937 easement reverted to him by abandonment under the terms of the easement and brought a declaratory judgment action against the state. The city intervened in the action over DeVoe's objection. The Supreme Court held that intervention of right was properly granted because the city had demonstrated to the District Court that it had a statutory duty, unchallenged by DeVoe, to maintain the road and also had a future interest in the property because of the property's relationship to the city's overall transportation plan. Thus, the city had a separate and distinct interest in the property subject to the easement, even though the state's name appeared on the written easement. The Supreme Court also noted that DeVoe's argument that the city had no interest in the 1890 highway as a result of the alleged abandonment in 1983 begs the question because it asks the Supreme Court to judge the merits of intervention based upon the ultimate outcome of the declaratory judgment action. DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Nonresidents of Subdivision Without Standing to Enforce Covenants of Subdivision: The adjacent neighbors of a subdivision sued the county and the residents of the subdivision either to have the county enforce the subdivision's restrictive covenants, approved by the county, or to have the District Court require the subdivision residents to abide by the covenants. The Supreme Court held that, without an ownership interest in the property, the neighbors and the public do not have the right to insist that the local government enforce restrictive covenants previously approved by the local government as part of the subdivision. The Supreme Court also ruled that the neighbors do not share the mutuality of the benefits and burdens as between grantees of the subdivision and therefore lack standing to enforce the restrictive covenants. The issue of whether a resident of the subdivision could seek enforcement of the covenants by the local government was not before the Supreme Court. Patton v. Madison County, 265 M 362, 877 P2d 993, 51 St. Rep. 536 (1994).

Intervention in Divorce Denied to Parents Merely Claiming Mortgage Interest in Couple's Home: The District Court Judge did not err in denying parents' motion to intervene in their son's marriage dissolution proceeding to protect parents' interest in a home the parents alleged was built with the parents' $63,630 loan to the married couple. The daughter-in-law sought the home free and clear of any obligation to her husband's parents. Parents' rights in the home were not the central issue in the case, and any decree would not prohibit them from bringing separate proceedings against the son, the daughter-in-law, or both. Furthermore, parents had no prima facie case because they had no written evidence of a debt, and a mortgage on real property can only be created by a written instrument. In re Marriage of Aniballi, 255 M 384, 842 P2d 342, 49 St. Rep. 995 (1992), distinguished in DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Prima Facie Showing of Interest, Not Mere Claim, Required: This rule does not require intervention to be allowed whenever a mere claim, without more, of an interest relating to the property or transaction is made. Intervention requires a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest, and a prima facie showing must be made that an interest exists before intervention should be allowed. In re Marriage of Aniballi, 255 M 384, 842 P2d 342, 49 St. Rep. 995 (1992), distinguished in DeVoe v. St., 281 M 356, 935 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 207 (1997).

Timeliness of Motion to Intervene: A motion to intervene must be timely regardless of whether intervention is sought as of right or by permission. Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808, 49 St. Rep. 180 (1992), followed in Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003).

Interested Party May Intervene in Mandamus Action: Party opposed to transfer of a liquor license is an interested party under 16-4-411 and therefore has standing to intervene in mandamus action. A person having an interest in the subject matter of a mandamus action may be permitted to intervene for the purpose of resisting the granting of the writ. Christopherson v. St., 226 M 350, 735 P2d 524, 44 St. Rep. 712 (1987).

Right to Intervene in Adoption of Indian Child — State Commitment to Indian Child Welfare Act: Prior to birth, Nellie Silk, paternal aunt of M.E.M., expressed an interest in caring for the child because she was aware of the parents' problems with parenting; however, after the child was born he was placed in foster care by the Hill County Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (SRS). Upon learning of the placement, Silk wrote to SRS requesting custody. SRS responded that placement with Silk would be inappropriate because of SRS efforts to reintegrate the family, but that Silk would be considered if adoption were to occur. After parental rights were terminated (see In re M.E.M., 209 M 192, 679 P2d 1241, 41 St. Rep. 636 (1984)), Silk was not informed of the proceedings, of M.E.M.'s availability for adoption, or of M.E.M.'s preadoptive placement with a non-Indian family. Silk's subsequent petition for adoption and motion to intervene were denied by the District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that Silk had an interest in adoption stemming from the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA), 25 U.S.C. 1901, et seq., and that the state had a strong and independent commitment to the principles embodied in the ICWA. Silk also had a right to intervene under Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and although the District Court had ruled that her motion was not timely, the Supreme Court held that the motion must be granted in light of the fact that she was kept in ignorance and could not have been more diligent or earlier in her petition or motion. Error to Refuse Intervention in Proceeding to Enforce Foreign Divorce Decree: An Oregon divorce decree awarded Montana property to the wife. Before the wife filed an action under 26-3-203 to enforce the foreign decree, husband conveyed the Montana property to Christiana, who later proposed to intervene in the instant action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erroneously refused intervention. Insofar as the Oregon court attempted to directly transfer husband's Montana property to wife, its act was not effective in this state. The District Court erred in treating the foreign decree as a direct and self-executing transfer of Montana property. However, in an enforcement action in this state, the Oregon decree is an enforceable determination of the rights and equities of husband and wife with respect to the Montana real property in question. Gammon v. Christiana, Inc., 210 M 463, 684 P2d 1081, 41 St. Rep. 1161 (1984). For application of principle to effect of Montana divorce decree on out-of-state property, see In re Marriage of Bahm, 225 M 331, 732 P2d 846, 44 St. Rep. 279 (1987).

Intervention — Third-Party Practice: Plaintiff agreed to lend Prospect Associates, Inc. (Prospect) money to finance construction of a subdivision. As part of the security for the loan, Prospect was required to obtain a letter of credit with plaintiff as beneficiary. Prospect defaulted on the promissory note evidencing the loan. Defendant refused payment on the letter of credit, contending it was a guaranty on which it was not primarily liable. The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Prospect contended the District Court erred in denying its motion to intervene in the letter of credit action. The Supreme Court found that defendant's liability on the letter of credit arose without regard to the underlying instruments and therefore Prospect had no claim or defense that would have a common question of law or fact to the letter of credit suit. The letter of credit action could not be consolidated with the underlying action between Prospect and plaintiff for the same reason. Defendant, however, filed a third-party complaint against Prospect for indemnity on plaintiff's claim against it. The court held that Prospect could assert its claims against plaintiff as a third-party defendant in the underlying indemnity action following remand. Sherwood & Roberts, Inc. v. First Security Bank, 209 M 402, 682 P2d 149, 41 St. Rep. 787 (1984).

Untimely Motion:

Appellant and his wife are each 50% shareholders in a family ranch corporation. The parties separated and divorced in 1976, and since that time appellant has been inactive in the corporation. In May 1981, the District Court ordered the corporation to pay respondents for debts owed to them. The order was pursuant to a consent decree to which the corporation agreed in May 1980. In August 1980, appellant filed a motion to intervene in the matter on behalf of the corporation, which was denied. The District Court held that the motion was not timely made, and the Supreme Court affirmed. As a 50% shareholder, appellant had an interest giving an intervention of right. Appellant was given notice of the original complaint prior to April 17, 1980. He did not file his motion until more than 4½ months after he became aware of the initial claim. As a 50% shareholder and inactive director of the corporation, he had every right to contact the board of directors to ascertain the progress of the proceedings. He failed to do so and is not entitled to avoid the "timeliness" requirement by asserting he was unaware of the proceedings until June 1980, when corporate counsel enlightened him. Appellant could pursue his claims in the corporation dissolution proceeding pending before the same District Court Judge. Grenfell v. Duffy, 198 M 90, 643 P2d 1184, 39 St. Rep. 786 (1982).

When motion to intervene was made for the first time at the beginning of trial after intervenor sat on his claimed right for 2½ years, the judge correctly denied the motion on the basis of untimeliness. Archer v. LaMarch Creek Ranch, 174 M 429, 571 P2d 379 (1977).

Rights of Legal Heir Adequately Represented by Special Administrator — Intervention Denied: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

Purpose of Intervention: The purpose of provisions for intervention is to avoid circuity of action and multiplicity of suits. State ex rel. Westlake v. Interest of Intervening Sheriff — Trust Agreement Alleged: In an action in claim and delivery to recover a carload of ore, complaint in intervention by a Sheriff who alleged that pursuant to an agreement between labor claimants and defendant against whom they had secured judgments on which executions were issued, he had shipped the ore as their trustee and as such was lawfully entitled to the proceeds derived from the ore, was sufficient to show a creation of trust in, and acceptance thereof by him, as against the assertion that the Sheriff had no interest in the subject matter of the action and therefore was not entitled to intervene. Stephenson v. Combination Leasing & Dev. Co., 86 M 322, 283 P 1110 (1929).

Refusal to Permit Intervention as Error: Refusal to permit a party to intervene is error where such party makes a prima facie showing of interest in the subject matter of the litigation. Equity Co-op Ass'n of Roy v. Equity Co-op Mill. Co. of Mont., 63 M 26, 206 P 349 (1922).

Lienholder Intervening: A demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to a complaint in intervention will be sustained, where the intervenor's notice of lien was so defective as not to support the lien, since the right to intervene is dependent upon the existence of a valid lien in the subject matter of the action. Interstate Lumber Co. v. Magill-Nevin Plumbing & Heating Co., 57 M 334, 188 P 144 (1920).

Attached Property as Basis for Intervention: A third party, who claimed to own property which had been attached to secure any judgment which might be recovered in an action, had such an interest in the subject matter of the litigation as to entitle him to intervene and have his rights determined. Moreland v. Monarch Min. & Mill. Co., 55 M 419, 178 P 175 (1919).

Attachment Remedy — Intervention Not Precluded: The fact that a party claiming an interest in attached property may have a remedy after seizure or sale under 27-18-602, or by an action in conversion or replevin, does not deprive him of his right to intervene in the action in which the attachment was procured. Moreland v. Monarch Min. & Mill. Co., 55 M 419, 178 P 175 (1919).

Action to Enjoin County Printing — Contractor Intervening: To a suit by a taxpayer against the commissioners and clerk of a county brought for the purpose of having the execution of a county printing contract enjoined, the successful bidder was an indispensable party who was rightfully permitted to intervene and as such party was entitled to file, among other papers, an affidavit disqualifying the District Judge for imputed bias and prejudice. State ex rel. Sherman v. District Court, 51 M 220, 152 P 32 (1915).

Probate Proceedings: Section 93-2826, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 24, M.R.Civ.P.), providing a right of intervention, did not apply to the filing of grounds for contesting a will. State ex rel. Donovan v. District Court, 25 M 355, 65 P 120 (1901).

Mining Claims — Filing of Claim Required: One who has not filed his adverse claim under the federal statute cannot intervene in an action to determine adverse claims to a mining location, though he claims an interest in the premises adverse to both plaintiff and defendant. Murray v. Polglase, 23 M 401, 59 P 439 (1899), distinguished in Poore v. Kaufman, 44 M 248, 119 P 785 (1911).

Former Rule 24(b). Permissive intervention

Unsuccessful Intervenor Not Party to Action — Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Required: A successful intervenor becomes a party to the action, but an unsuccessful intervenor does not. As a nonparty, an unsuccessful intervenor is not entitled to service of notice of entry of judgment. Clark Fork Coalition v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2007 MT 176, 338 M 205, 164 P3d 902 (2007).

Striking of Defenses as Discovery Sanction and Damages Affirmed — Smith Test for Assessing Discovery Sanctions Clarified: When defendant failed to respond to discovery requests for nearly 1 year and effectively disregarded the District Court's order to supplement insufficient discovery responses, the District Court sanctioned defendant by dismissing defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff on the issue of liability and awarding damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed on grounds that the sanction was excessively harsh. In assessing the propriety of discovery sanctions imposed pursuant to Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court applies the three-part test set out in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), considering whether the consequence imposed via the sanction: (1) relates to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) relates to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) is consistent with the consequences expressly warned of by the District Court, if a warning was issued. The court clarified that the third prong of the Smith test applies only if the District Court issues a warning. In addition to the test factors, the Supreme Court also considers a party's disregard of the court's authority and orders. If a ready, confident, and accurate determination of a party's good faith compliance with the discovery process cannot be made, the correctness of the District Court's imposition of sanctions will be presumed. In this case, the sanctions related sufficiently to the prejudice suffered by plaintiff, and in light of defendant's unwavering disregard of the District Court's orders and authority, the court did not abuse its discretion by striking defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff. Absent evidence that the court abused its discretion, the award of damages was also proper. Culbertson-Froid-Bainville Health Care Corp. v. JP Stevens & Co., Inc., 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Criteria for Intervention in Adoption Proceeding — Unfounded and Untimely Motion to Intervene Properly Denied: Couple A adopted a child through a judicial decree in the District Court of the Twenty-First Judicial District. Couple B also wanted to adopt the child and filed a motion, in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District where they lived, to intervene and set aside the final decree of adoption, despite the fact that some 6 months had passed since the final adoption decree was issued. Couple B contended that the child was a member of their extended family and that the Department should have given them priority as adoptive parents. The Twenty-First District Court held that couple B had no standing to intervene as a matter of right pursuant to Rule 24(a), M.R.Civ.P., and that permissive intervention under this rule was untimely and would undermine the purpose of adoption to the detriment of the child. Couple B's motion to set aside the final decree pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., was also denied on grounds that as nonparties to couple A's adoption petition, couple B had no standing to make the motion and that, in any case, it was untimely because it was made more than 180 days after the final decree. Couple B appealed the denial of both motions, arguing first that they had a legal interest by virtue of the family placement preference in the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) and legislative and Departmental policies favoring adoptive placement with extended family members. The Supreme Court noted that a mere claim of interest is insufficient to support intervention as a matter of right and that a party seeking intervention must make a prima facie showing of a direct, substantial, legally protectable interest in the proceedings. No such showing was made here because the child was not Indian and therefore not subject to the ICWA, nor did the relationship of second cousins meet the definition of extended family member. Couple B next argued that they should have been allowed to intervene under the permissive standard of this rule because the competing adoption petitions had common issues of law and fact. Couple B contended that their delay should be excused by their reliance on misrepresentations made by the Department. The Supreme Court agreed that the Department could have taken a more forthright approach and saved all the parties considerable time and expense, but couple B bore the responsibility for ensuring the timely filing of the motion to intervene. The Supreme Court noted that timeliness is a threshold issue when intervention is sought and that, although none of the factors are dispositive, most courts look to four factors in considering whether a motion to intervene is timely filed: (1) the length of time that the intervenor knew or should have known of its interest in the case before moving to intervene; (2) prejudice to the original parties, if intervention is granted, resulting from the intervenor's delay; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if the motion is denied; and (4) any unusual circumstances mitigating for or against a determination that the application is timely. The Supreme Court considered each factor in detail. Although the third factor weighed in favor of couple B, because denial of the motion to intervene effectively precluded any hope of their adoption of the child, the other factors weighed strongly against them. The District Court made a reasoned analysis when it determined that the motion to intervene was untimely and did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Last, because couple B did not address the threshold issues of Rule 60(b) on appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that denial of the motion to set aside the final adoption decree on grounds of standing and timeliness was proper. In re Adoption of C.C.L.B., 2001 MT 66, 305 M 22, 22 P3d 646 (2001).

Dismissal of Intervention Action Not Clear Error: A husband and wife owed about $6,000 in back taxes on their property, which was in jeopardy of being sold at a tax sale. The couple was unable to obtain a loan because of a prior bankruptcy, so they arranged to transfer the property to the husband's mother, who then took out a loan to pay the taxes, using the property as collateral. When the couple later sought to dissolve their marriage, their petition made no mention of any real property acquired during the marriage. The husband testified at the hearing, but the wife did not attend, and dissolution was granted without addressing the wife's interest in the property. The wife moved to set aside the judgment pursuant to 40-4-135. The District Court subsequently voided the deed transferring the property to the mother, subject to her right to intervene to assert her right to the property. Following a hearing, the court dismissed the mother's motion to intervene, issued a court deed naming the mother as grantor and the husband and wife as grantees to hold the property as tenants in common, and included the property in the marital estate. The mother contended that dismissal of her intervention action constituted a denial of her constitutional rights under Art. II, sec. 16 and 17, Mont. Const., because she was not properly joined as a party. The Supreme Court noted that the mother was served with a summons and a copy of motions to set aside the dissolution decree and was directed to appear at the initial show cause hearing. Her constitutional rights were not violated despite dismissal of her motion to intervene. In re Marriage of Bell, 2000 MT 88, 299 M 219, 998 P2d 1163, 57 St. Rep. 381 (2000).

Intervention With Conditions or for Limited Purpose: Shilhaneks were injured in a vehicle accident. At trial, an insurance company moved to intervene for the limited purpose of providing factual information to correct errors regarding the company that were made by Shilhaneks' attorneys. The District Court found that the company's motion to intervene met the criteria necessary for permissive intervention and granted the motion, but declared that the company be treated as any other party in the action. Pursuant to this rule, a court may allow intervention with conditions or for a limited purpose, and it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to condition the company's intervention on being treated as a full party to the action. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2000 MT 16, 298 M 101, 994 P2d 1105, 57 St. Rep. 89 (2000). See also 6 Moore's Fed. Prac. 24.23 (3d Ed. 1998).

Timeliness of Motion to Intervene: A motion to intervene must be timely regardless of whether intervention is sought as of right or by permission. Estate of Schwenke v. Becktold, 252 M 127, 827 P2d 808, 49 St. Rep. 180 (1992), followed in Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003).

Constitutionality of Law — Intervention Allowed: A retail merchant who competed with other merchants giving or not giving trading stamps had an interest in an action by another retailer for a declaratory judgment that sections 84-2805 to 84-2812, R.C.M. 1947 (declared unconstitutional in this case), providing for the licensing of any merchant advertising or giving trading stamps, were unconstitutional, and should have been permitted to intervene in support of the constitutionality of such statute. State ex rel. Abel v. District Court, 140 M 117, 368 P2d 572 (1962).

Intervention as Improper Substitution of Parties: District Court was directed to deny petition of decedent's divorced wife, guardian ad litem of decedent's and her children, to intervene in action for wrongful death under 27-1-513 commenced by the widow as administratrix and trustee for the decedent's minor children, and to strike from the files the complaint in intervention as an attempted substitution of party plaintiffs in a wrongful death action. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 139 M 367, 364 P2d 739 (1961).

Intervention by State Taxing Agency: Where a taxpayer filed an action against the county for a refund of taxes, the State and the State Board of Equalization (functions now split between Director of Department of Revenue and State Tax Appeals Board) have an interest in the subject matter of the litigation so as to enable them to intervene in the action, not only because part of the tax collected was a state levy but also because the determinative questions raised are of vital interest and concern as they pertain to the tax laws, the procedure thereto, and the public fiscal policy of the sovereign state. Carlson v. Flathead County, 130 M 24, 293 P2d 273 (1956).

Indemnity Bond as Basis for Intervention: An allegation in complaint in intervention that intervenors made and delivered to defendant Sheriff their indemnity bond shows their interest in success of defendant. Smith v. Armstrong, 118 M 290, 166 P2d 793 (1946).

Liberal Allowance of Intervention: Courts of equity are liberal in allowing the right to intervene in an action where the petitioner's rights will be directly affected by the decree, for the purpose of doing complete justice. State ex rel. Thelen v. District Court, 93 M 149, 17 P2d 57 (1932).

Mandamus Proceedings: A person having an interest in the matter or thing sought to be compelled by mandamus may be permitted to intervene for the purpose of resisting the granting of the writ. State ex rel. Miles City v. N. Pac. Ry., 88 M 529, 295 P 257 (1930).

Former Rule 24(c). Procedure

New Trial Granted Because of Intervenor's Failure to Serve All Parties: In a dissolution action, Keaster and his ex-wife stipulated that he was not the natural parent of her child. The ex-wife subsequently named Fleming as the natural father, and the Child Support Enforcement Division initiated proceedings to collect support payments from Fleming. Fleming intervened in the dissolution proceedings without giving notice to Keaster. The lower court reinstated Keaster's support payments and denied Keaster's motion for a new trial on the basis that it had not been timely made. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's decision and held that by rule, Fleming had to serve all parties to the action in which he was intervening. In re Marriage of Keaster, 259 M 48, 853 P2d 1191, 50 St. Rep. 669 (1993).

Intervention Improper When Party Only Seeks to Relitigate Issue: Although not often granted, a motion to intervene made after a judgment is not per se untimely. However, a party will not be allowed to intervene following a judgment if he only seeks to relitigate an issue concerning which the original parties had sufficient opportunity to present evidence at trial. In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Waiver of Objection for Failure to File and Serve Motion: An individual did not file and serve upon the parties a motion for leave to intervene, as required by this rule, but did file a third-party complaint as a coplaintiff. The responses to the third-party complaint did not raise the issue of failure to properly intervene, and no one objected until the trial began. The individual would have been able to intervene as a matter of right. Failure to object to the individual's presence in the case until trial began constituted a waiver of any objection, and when the court overruled that objection, it constituted an authorization of the intervention. However, the Supreme Court warned that future litigants should not attempt to use this ruling to circumvent the clear requirements of this rule. Schulz, Davis & Warren v. Marinkovich, 203 M 12, 661 P2d 5, 40 St. Rep. 262 (1983).

Disqualification of Judge by Intervenor: An intervenor being a party to the action and in a proper situation may file an affidavit of disqualification. Allman v. Potts, 140 M 312, 371 P2d 11 (1962); State ex rel. Sherman v. District Court, 51 M 220, 152 P 32 (1915).

Pleading Not Required to Be Served: Although it is regarded as the best practice to serve and tender proposed complaint in intervention along with application for permission to intervene, the proposed complaint is not a necessary part of the application, its chief mission being as a pleading in the main action after intervention is granted. State ex rel. Westlake v. District Court, 118 M 414, 167 P2d 588 (1946).

Rights of Intervenor as Party: While an intervenor must accept the action in which he intervenes as he finds it at the time of intervention, his rights thereafter are as broad as those of the original parties to it. State ex rel. Westlake v. District Court, 118 M 414, 167 P2d 588 (1946); St. Bank of New Salem v. Schultze, 63 M 410, 209 P 599 (1922).

Rules of Pleading Applicable: Ordinary rules of pleading apply under statute to complaint in intervention. State ex rel. Westlake v. District Court, 118 M 414, 167 P2d 588 (1946).

Interpleader by Intervention: In real estate mortgage foreclosure, a grain company filed complaint in intervention to determine, by interpleader, conflicting claims of mortgagor and mortgagee to grain delivered to it which had been harvested from the land. The mortgagor was entitled to file a cross-complaint to the complaint in intervention, seeking judgment for the price of the grain, as he could have done had the intervenor commenced an original interpleader suit against him. State ex rel. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. District Court, 102 M 371, 58 P2d 491 (1936).

Appellate Intervention Not Allowed: On application to the Supreme Court to review the action of the District Court in denying a petition for interpleader, one not a party to such petition in the lower court, nor a party to the action in which interpleader is sought, will not be permitted to intervene; his remedy lies in a petition for intervention in the District Court. State ex rel. St. Bank of Townsend v. District Court, 94 M 551, 25 P2d 396 (1933).

Pleadings to Be Served With Petition: One desiring to intervene should, when he files his petition for leave to intervene, serve a copy of his complaint in intervention upon the parties to the action with the petition and, if leave be granted, forthwith file his complaint. State ex rel. Thelen v. District Court, 93 M 149, 17 P2d 57 (1932).

Complaint Adverse to All Parties — Pleadings Required: Where a complaint in intervention is adverse to both parties in which filed, both are considered as defendants as respects the intervenor and they must plead to his complaint as defendants in an ordinary action. St. Bank of New Salem v. Schultze, 63 M 410, 209 P 599 (1922).

Intervention After Default Prohibited: A party will not be permitted to file a complaint in intervention after defendant's default for want of an answer has been entered, and when nothing remains to be done but to enter the judgment. Safely v. Caldwell, 17 M 184, 42 P 766 (1895).

Leave of Court Required — Pleading Properly Ignored: A party who is a stranger to a suit as commenced, but who without a showing by complaint or obtaining leave of court appears upon his own motion and demurs to the complaint is not an intervenor and his demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) so filed may be properly disregarded by the trial court. Dietrich v. Steam Dredge & Amalgamator, 14 M 261, 36 P 81 (1894).

Former Rule 24(d). Cases involving constitutional questions where the state is not a party Acknowledged Receipt of Notice by Attorney General — No Prejudice Despite Late Compliance: This Rule requires that a party raising a constitutional issue to which the state is not a party notify the Attorney General contemporaneously with the filing of the pleading or other document in which the constitutional issue is raised. The District Court concluded that McKinnon failed to provide notice to the Attorney General regarding McKinnon's constitutional challenge at the time that McKinnon filed a first amended complaint but before either party engaged in discovery, filed any motions, or engaged in pretrial litigation. The Supreme Court held that requiring McKinnon to have served the Attorney General before serving the opposing party or developing the case through discovery did not serve the purpose of the Rule. The fact that no prejudice accrued to the Attorney General from the allegedly late notice showed that the purpose and spirit of the Rule were not violated. McKinnon's notice did not constitute failure to comply with a condition precedent, and McKinnon therefore complied with the spirit of the Rule, so the District Court was reversed. McKinnon v. W. Sugar Co-op Corp., 2010 MT 24, 355 Mont. 120, 225 P.3d 1221, distinguishing Russell v. Masonic Home of Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 286, 334 Mont. 351, 147 P.3d 216.

Former Rule 25(a). Death

Waiver of Substitution Requirements: Failure of plaintiff to substitute executrix of doctor's estate for doctor, in tort action initiated against doctor before his death was waived where attorneys for doctor were also attorneys for executrix, attorneys and executrix were present at trial of action and attorneys for executrix had filed motion for additional time in which to perfect appeal from judgment against doctor. Nagaard v. Feda, 149 M 190, 425 P2d 79 (1967).

Former Rule 25(c). Transfer of interest

Involuntary Dismissal of Action in Bankruptcy Estate — Substitution of Parties and Notice of Dismissal of Action Not Required: Plaintiffs filed a lender liability action against several banks after plaintiffs had filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. On motion of the plaintiffs' creditors, the Bankruptcy Court involuntarily converted that a proceeding from Chapter 11 to a Chapter 7 liquidation. Pursuant to federal case law, upon the conversion to a Chapter 7 proceeding, the lender liability action in District Court became an asset of the trustee in bankruptcy. The trustee and defendants in the lender liability action reached a stipulated settlement for a dismissal of that action, and plaintiffs appealed the dismissal. Citing Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Reilly, 240 M 147, 783 P2d 917 (1989), the Supreme Court held that it has no authority to substantively review issues that are appropriately before the Bankruptcy Court and that the only issue the Supreme Court could review was the propriety of a lack of notice of the dismissal to the plaintiffs. On this issue, the Supreme Court held that the trustee was not required to give notice because all of plaintiffs' interest in the state court action was transferred to the trustee and held that plaintiffs therefore lacked standing to object to the dismissal. The Supreme Court also held that the trustee was not required to substitute the bankruptcy estate as the real party in interest in the state court proceeding because this rule, rather than Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P., governed substitution and because under Rule 17(a), substitution was not mandatory. Reilly v. Citizens St. Bank, 251 M 155, 822 P2d 1088, 48 St. Rep. 1140 (1991).

Dismissal of Bank Not Requiring Dismissal of Bank Officers — Substitution: Defendants who were former bank officers were sued for damages. The District Court, relying on an order in a related proceeding, dismissed the bank from the action. Defendants contended that the claims against them were based on master-servant law, arguing that dismissal of the bank required dismissal of defendants as the bank's servants. Noting the arrangements by which defendants sold the bank, the ongoing adversarial relationship between defendants and the bank buyers, and defendants' continued control over the present litigation, the Supreme Court concluded that dismissal of the bank constituted substitution of parties, rather than dismissal of a principal and retention of agents. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Determination of Real Party in Interest Prior to Ratification, Joinder, or Substitution: Defendants appealed from a judgment denying a motion to allow amendment to pleadings to add their incorporated business entity as a party plaintiff. The Supreme Court remanded the case, holding that before it could be determined if ratification, joinder, or substitution should be allowed, it was necessary to determine whether the corporate entity was a real party in interest on the counterclaim. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 221 M 329, 718 P2d 1345, 43 St. Rep. 852 (1986).

Motion to Consolidate — Denied: When plaintiff made a valid assignment of his interest in a promissory note and filed a supplemental complaint dropping him as a party plaintiff, the action on the note could not properly be joined with another action to which he was a party. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Parties to Contract — Effect of Property Disposition: Because the obligations of a contract are limited to the contracting parties, plaintiff properly sued defendant for recovery on two retail installment contracts executed by defendant, even though the object of the contracts became part of a property disposition to defendant's wife in a divorce decree which transferred the indebtedness along with the subject property. Gambles v. Perdue, 175 M 112, 572 P2d 1241 (1977).

Former Rule 26. General provisions governing discovery

Exclusion of Expert Testimony for Discovery Abuse Proper: In a dissolution proceeding, the wife sought to introduce evidence at trial from a medical expert to the effect that she did not have the emotional or mental capacity to reasonably enter into a contract on the day that she signed a property settlement agreement. The District Court disallowed the expert's testimony, and the wife appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. During discovery, the husband had requested production of the wife's medical records with respect to any health care providers that the wife identified as experts, but the wife failed to produce the records until calling the expert at trial. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing the expert testimony as a sanction for abuse of the discovery process and by failing to act on the husband's assertion of nondisclosure. Moreover, the District Court did not err in holding that the wife was not mentally incapacitated or subject to undue influence, given that it was the wife herself who proposed some of the terms of the settlement agreement. In re Marriage of Gorton, 2008 MT 123, 342 M 537, 182 P3d 746 (2008).

Sufficient Discovery Allowed Regarding Results of DUI Breath Test: Weldele moved in limine to exclude the results of a DUI breath test on grounds that the state failed to provide full discovery regarding the tests. The District Court denied the motion on grounds that the state had provided sufficient information upon which Weldele could prepare a defense. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although the state's production was not as extensive as requested, documents provided confirmed that: (1) the officers were certified to operate the Intoxilyzer and preliminary breath test equipment; (2) the Intoxilyzer received an annual certification less than 5 months before Weldele used it; (3) the Intoxilyzer solution was approved and used in compliance with applicable regulations; (4) the Intoxilyzer was properly calibrated before and after Weldele's test; and (5) the preliminary breath test instrument was properly field-certified. This information was adequate for both Weldele's and the state's purposes, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's findings in that regard. St. v. Weldele, 2003 MT 117, 315 M 452, 69 P3d 1162 (2003). See also St. v. Peters, 2011 MT 274, 362 Mont. 389, 264 P.3d 1124.

Refusal to Admit Letter Introduced During Trial Not Error: In a dispute over the charges for the care and training of horses, the parties agreed that Watkins would accept $5,000 for his services. The Williamses gave Watkins two checks for $2,500, but they stopped payment on the second check and refused to tender the rest of the money on the basis that one of the horses had been mistreated. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Watkins for $20,191 for services. The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in excluding a letter introduced during trial that purported to contain material terms of compensation for Watkins' services. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court had not erred in excluding the letter because the Williamses had failed to produce the letter in response to discovery requests and had not listed it as an exhibit as required by the lower court's scheduling order. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Participation in Discovery Not Preclusive of Right to Arbitration — Waiver Not Shown: Downeys presented a number of claims against Christensen and Baker Boy Bake Shops, Inc. (Baker Boy), a donut franchise, alleging fraud, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence stemming from a franchise agreement between Downeys and Baker Boy. Immediately after serving the complaint, Downeys began discovery by serving requests for production, which were answered separately by Christensen and Baker Boy, who subsequently began their own discovery procedures. The District Court denied a motion to compel arbitration and stay proceedings, finding that participation in discovery constituted a waiver of arbitration. Failure to compel the parties to submit their claims to arbitration was error, given a clause in the franchise agreement requiring arbitration rather than civil litigation, when the waiver was not proved by actions inconsistent with the right to arbitrate or by a showing of prejudice arising from any inconsistent actions. Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557, 49 St. Rep. 88 (1992).

Objective of District Court Discovery Control: The objective of the District Court in controlling and regulating discovery is to ensure a fair trial to all concerned, neither according one party an unfair advantage nor placing the other at a disadvantage. Hobbs v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 236 M 503, 771 P2d 125, 46 St. Rep. 544 (1989), followed in Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. T&M Transporting, Inc., 2006 MT 25, 331 M 76, 130 P3d 150 (2006).

Negligent Suppression of Evidence — Harmless Error: In an appeal involving the negligent suppression of evidence, the court agreed with appellant that the state acted improperly in suppressing four taped witness statements during discovery and a possibly incriminating statement made by appellant during his arrest and in endorsing an additional witness on the first day of trial. However, the court found that the suppressed evidence was either repetitive of other testimony or minimally supportive of a self-defense theory, and that since the defense knew of the additional witness' connection with and importance in the case, it could not convincingly claim surprise at the endorsement. Therefore, all errors were held to be harmless and not grounds for reversal. St. v. Wallace, 223 M 454, 727 P2d 520, 43 St. Rep. 1908 (1986), followed, with regard to application of harmless error rule to admissibility of hearsay testimony, in St. v. Alexander, 265 M 192, 875 P2d 345, 51 St. Rep. 474 (1994).

Defense Communication With Plaintiff's Physician: It was not error to allow defense counsel to communicate with the plaintiff's treating physician during the trial. As the plaintiff stated he did not intend to call the physician as a witness and because the inquiry was made during the course of the trial, normal discovery limitations did not apply. Ostermiller v. Alvord, 222 M 208, 720 P2d 1198, 43 St. Rep. 1180 (1986).

Interview of Unnamed Witness — Consent to Alleged Noncompliance With Duty to Supplement: On appeal, a father suing for injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool alleged pretrial discovery abuse by defendant in that defendant was allowed to add a witness the day before trial and had known the location of the witness but failed to inform the father of the address, in violation of defendant's duty to supplement its interrogatory answers. It was not reversible error to allow the witness to testify. The testimony was probative on important fact issues, and the father interviewed the witness before trial and rejected an offered continuance. The father was not entitled to have his cake and eat it too. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

District Court Control Over Discovery: Under its authority to control trial administration, the District Court has inherent discretionary power to control discovery, and control over discovery is best exercised by that court as it is in a better position than the Supreme Court to supervise the day-to-day operations of discovery. The requirement of exhaustion of District Court remedies before seeking intervention by the Supreme Court through an extraordinary writ will promote and support the District Court's authority to control day-to-day trial administration. State ex rel. Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Malquist, 266 M 447, 880 P2d 1357, 51 St. Rep. 914 (1994), and Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997).

Interlocutory Review of Interrogatories Rulings — Judicial Policy: Policy considerations supported refusal of the Supreme Court to accept jurisdiction over a petition for an extraordinary writ to review denial of objections to interrogatories propounded to a party who did not exhaust his remedies in the District Court and who made untimely application for the writ. A Supreme Court policy of interjecting itself into interlocutory review of lower court rulings on interrogatories and objections thereto would make it difficult for the lower courts to control day-to-day trial administration, open a Pandora's box of abuses, defeat the goal of speedy, inexpensive, and just discovery of the facts upon which each party's right of action depends, and might bury the Supreme Court in a paper blizzard of applications for supervisory control to review lower court rulings on pretrial discovery. State ex rel Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981), followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997).

Admission of Genuineness of Documents — Privilege: A request for admission of genuineness of documents under Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., is limited by Rule 26, M.R.Civ.P., to the genuineness of documents that are not privileged and that are discoverable under Rule 26. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Former Rule 26(a). Discovery methods

Motion to Compel Discovery Properly Denied for Vagueness: Plaintiffs deposed a witness who could not attend the hearing, but because the witness did not answer questions to plaintiffs' counsel's satisfaction, plaintiffs moved to compel the witness's testimony at the hearing. However, plaintiffs did not cite to any particular questions that were unsatisfactorily answered and only vaguely referenced the subject matter sought to be explored more fully. The District Court denied the motion as too vague, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the motion lacked the specificity needed to rule on it. Citizen Advocates for a Livable Missoula, Inc. v. City Council, 2006 MT 47, 331 M 269, 130 P3d 1259 (2006).

Failure to Identify Experts or Supplement Discovery Request — Reversible Error: Miranti failed to provide the identity of expert witnesses even though he agreed to do so in his answers to interrogatories. He also failed to comply with his continuing obligation to supplement his answers and submit a list of experts prior to trial even though he was given numerous opportunities to do so. These failures severely limited cross-examination of the witnesses after they were qualified as experts and had testified as such over objection. Allowing this evidence amounted to an abuse of discretion and constituted reversible error. Miranti v. Orms, 253 M 231, 833 P2d 164, 49 St. Rep. 478 (1992).

District Court Without Authority to Order "Interviews" of Witnesses — Supervisory Control: In a personal injury case, the defendant obtained a court order stating that the plaintiff had waived her physician-patient privilege and that the plaintiff's doctors were to be treated as any other witnesses in the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the order on its face but held that the District Court did not have the power under the rules of discovery to order private interviews between counsel for one party and possibly adverse witnesses, expert or not. The Supreme Court noted that other rules of discovery serve to supplement Rule 26(a), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court must relate discovery it allows and enforces to one of the methods provided for in that rule. A Writ of Supervisory Control was issued in this case. Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Former Rule 26(b). Discovery scope and limits

Exclusion of Treating Physician's Standard of Care Opinion Erroneous: In a medical malpractice case, the District Court abused its discretion when it excluded a treating physician's testimony regarding the appropriate standard of care. Because the treating physician developed an opinion as to the standard of care while treating the patient, rather than in the context of litigation, the treating physician was a hybrid witness and therefore was not subject to the full M.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(4) disclosure requirements (now superseded) that are applicable to experts retained for litigation. Norris v. Fritz, 2012 MT 27, 364 Mont. 63, 270 P.3d 79.

Denial of Discovery of Financial Records Pending Judgment Regarding Punitive Damages: The District Court denied plaintiff's request for discovery of defendant's financial records. The records were provided to the court under seal but were not provided to plaintiff. The Supreme Court reversed the case because the District Court had improperly decided issues of material fact on motion for summary judgment and held that if plaintiff's claims for punitive damages survived on remand, the financial records should be opened to plaintiff for discovery for purposes of determining damages. Corporate Air v. Edwards Jet Center, Mont., Inc., 2008 MT 283, 345 M 336, 190 P3d 1111 (2008). See also Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 123 F.R.D. 322 (D. Mont. 1988).

Overly Broad Discovery Request for All of Plaintiffs' Counsels' Files Properly Denied in Unfair Trade Practices Case: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurance company committed unfair trade practices in settling plaintiffs' claim against two insured doctors for malpractice. In discovery, the insurer sought to compel production of all of plaintiffs' attorneys' files, claiming that information regarding how plaintiffs valued their own case was relevant as to whether the insurer committed an unfair trade practice. The District Court determined that information in plaintiffs' attorneys' files was per se irrelevant to the question of whether the insurer negotiated in good faith. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that in most unfair trade practices cases, the conduct of the claimant or how the claimant evaluated its own case is irrelevant concerning how the insurer acted, so evidence of the claimant's conduct is generally undiscoverable unless the claimant acts in a way that delays or impairs the insurer's ability to settle (see Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105 (1987)). Thus, the District Court's ruling that all of plaintiffs' attorneys' files were per se undiscoverable was an overbroad basis on which to deny the discovery request. However, to prevent "fishing expeditions" by an insurer, a discovery request must be narrowly tailored to the insurer's defenses against the claims, and in this case, the request for all of the attorneys' files was far broader than necessary to discover information regarding plaintiffs' alleged delay and impairment of the insurer's ability to settle, so the Supreme Court deferred to the District Court's discovery discretion and held that it was not error to refuse disclosure of all of the attorneys' files. Peterson v. The Doctors' Co., 2007 MT 264, 339 M 354, 170 P3d 459 (2007).

Sanctions for Discovery Abuses Proper — Motion to Compel Properly Granted: Despite defendant's repeated discovery requests over a 3-year period, 11 letters from defendant's counsel following up on requests for discovery information, and plaintiffs' assurances that the information would be provided, plaintiffs never provided the requested information or responded to counsel's letters. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions for discovery abuse or in granting defendant's motion to compel discovery. Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Failure to Show Voluntary Disclosure of Privileged Information Precluding Motion to Compel Discovery of Attorney-Client Communications: In a case involving a law firm's attempt to enforce an attorney's lien, plaintiff law firm moved to compel discovery of defendant's attorney-client communications based on disclosure to the firm of a letter from defendant bank to defendant trust account trustees regarding the bank's willingness to release funds in the trust account pursuant to a dissolution decree and dismissal of the collection claims. The District Court denied the motion, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. An implied waiver of attorney-client privilege must be supported by evidence showing that the client, by words or conduct, has impliedly forsaken the privilege of confidentiality. Here, there was no evidence that the letter was voluntarily disclosed or was there any demonstration whether the disclosure was inadvertent or intentional. Denial of the motion to compel discovery of other privileged attorney-client communications was therefore proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following St. v. Statczar, 228 M 446, 743 P2d 606 (1987).

Independent Medical Examination Denied as Response to Disregard of Scheduling Order Absent Good Cause: Three days after the deadline for disclosing rebuttal experts but prior to the close of discovery, defendant moved to compel plaintiff to undergo an independent medical examination by an undisclosed expert. The District Court denied the motion, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that defendant asserted no surprise or other good cause for not complying with the scheduling order. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the request for the examination in response to defendant's disregard of the scheduling order, and the District Court was affirmed. Pumphrey v. Empire Lath & Plaster, 2006 MT 99, 332 M 116, 135 P3d 797 (2006).

Failure to Order Release of Prerelease Center Records Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of a county prerelease center where his assailant Russell had resided, contending that the records may have been relevant to the question of foreseeability in the context of causation or have led to evidence relevant to the issue. Without ever seeing the records, the District Court denied the request for the records on grounds that the information could not have had a bearing on the foreseeability of Russell's act of violence against Prindel. The District Court impermissibly conjectured that the information was irrelevant and abused its discretion by refusing Prindel access to the confidential criminal justice information. The individual right to privacy in the records by Russell, who was serving a life sentence for attempting to kill Prindel, did not outweigh the merits of disclosing the records to Prindel, who was seeking legal redress against the county. Failure to disclose the prerelease center records was reversible error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Failure to Release County Attorney's Files Concerning Attempted Homicide Assailant Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of the County Attorney in order to prepare a case against the county for negligently failing to lawfully incarcerate Russell, even though Russell had been ordered to report to jail but was turned away, after which Russell attempted to kill Prindel. Although the parties had stipulated to the production of the files and the District Court had twice ordered production of the files, the District Court determined after in camera review that the files were not relevant to Prindel's case or admissible at trial. The District Court abused its discretion in declining to order release of the County Attorney's files containing criminal justice information, and to the extent that Prindel's request covered more than criminal justice information, the District Court should have weighed the demands of individual privacy against the merits of public disclosure and ordered the release of the County Attorney's files on Russell, except those that failed to satisfy statutory criteria. The District Court therefore committed reversible error by making an ad hoc, ex parte assessment of relevance of the contents of the files and deciding that they were not relevant and abused its discretion by employing the admissibility standard in lieu of criminal justice information, discovery, or work product standards. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Motion to Compel Discovery Properly Denied for Vagueness: Plaintiffs deposed a witness who could not attend the hearing, but because the witness did not answer questions to plaintiffs' counsel's satisfaction, plaintiffs moved to compel the witness's testimony at the hearing. However, plaintiffs did not cite to any particular questions that were unsatisfactorily answered and only vaguely referenced the subject matter sought to be explored more fully. The District Court denied the motion as too vague, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the motion lacked the specificity needed to rule on it. Citizen Advocates for a Livable Missoula, Inc. v. City Council, 2006 MT 47, 331 M 269, 130 P3d 1259 (2006).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Failure of Both Parties to Abide by Scheduling Order — Neither or Both Parties' Experts Allowed to Testify: Although both parties failed to abide by a scheduling order regarding the presentation of experts, only one party was allowed to present its expert testimony at trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the action was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Either both experts should have been allowed to testify, or neither expert's testimony should have been allowed, and failure to deal with the parties equitably was reversible error. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. T&M Transporting, Inc., 2006 MT 25, 331 M 76, 130 P3d 150 (2006).

Failure to Meet Expert Witness Disclosure Deadline — No Error in Disallowing Expert's Report: Prior to trial, defendant moved in limine to exclude a doctor's report interpreting plaintiff's x-rays on grounds that plaintiff disclosed the report 8 months after the expert disclosure deadline, precluding defendant from properly researching and preparing a rebuttal; yet at trial, defendant was allowed to question plaintiff regarding plaintiff's previous fractures. The motion was granted. On appeal, plaintiff contended that disallowing the report constituted prejudice, but the Supreme Court noted that the motion was not granted because of a lack of relevancy, but rather because plaintiff missed the disclosure deadline. Absent a showing of prejudice, the District Court was affirmed. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Protective Order Against Parent's Discovery Requests Not Abuse of Discretion Given Department's Open File Policy: In a termination of parental rights case, the District Court granted the state's motion for a protective order against a parent's discovery requests for admission, interrogatories, and requests for production, and the parent appealed. The Supreme Court cautioned that parties to termination proceedings have the full right to discover the case against them. However, in this case, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting the protective order because the state and the county maintained an open file policy that allowed the parent access to the entire file for inspection and copying and because the District Court ruled that any evidence or witness offered at trial that was not disclosed by review of the file might be excluded upon objection. Because the parent could not demonstrate prejudice, granting of the protective order was affirmed. In re S.C. & L.Z., 2005 MT 241, 328 M 476, 121 P3d 552 (2005).

Information in Interrogatory Regarding Expert Witness Sufficient to Meet Policy Underlying Procedural Rule — Discretion Abused in Dismissal of Case Based on Insufficient Answer: In their interrogatories, defendants sought information regarding plaintiff's potential expert witness. Plaintiff responded that the expert was yet undetermined. Defendants submitted a supplemental interrogatory requesting further information, and plaintiff responded with the expert's name and the substance of the facts and opinions to which the expert was expected to testify. The District Court held that the answer was deficient and sanctioned plaintiff by barring the expert's testimony and dismissing the case pursuant to this rule. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that plaintiff's answer, although brief and tardy, nevertheless provided a sufficient indication of the expert's testimony to eliminate the possibility of surprise and to promote effective cross-examination, which is the policy underlying the rule. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion when it determined that plaintiff's answer was inadequate and in sanctioning plaintiff and dismissing the case. Hawkins v. Harney, 2003 MT 58, 314 M 384, 66 P3d 305 (2003).

Reversible Error in Failure to Disclose Expert Witness — Prejudice to Opposing Party: Despite its continuing duty to disclose the identity of each person expected to be called as an expert witness, the subject matter on which the person is expected to testify, and the substance of the person's testimony, defendant failed to disclose an expert witness prior to trial despite several opportunities to do so. Failure to disclose an expert witness constitutes reversible error and will usually prejudice the opposing party because the opposing party has no time to: (1) prepare for the witness; (2) effectively plan for cross-examination of the witness; and (3) obtain an expert to refute or question the testimony of the witness. Here, plaintiff initially listed a person as a witness, but not as an expert, and did not learn that the person would be called as a witness until he was called by defendant as an expert to refute plaintiff's experts. Therefore, plaintiff was prejudiced by defendant's failure to identify the person as an expert witness in response to discovery requests and in the scheduling order agreed upon by the parties, and the District Court abused its discretion by allowing the person to testify. The case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. Superior Enterprises, LLC v. Mont. Power Co., 2002 MT 139, 310 M 198, 49 P3d 565 (2002).

Failure of State to Respond to Discovery Requests During Driver's License Reinstatement Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: Responding to a 9-1-1 emergency dispatch, an officer found Patterson slumped over the steering wheel of a running vehicle, fast asleep. Patterson refused to take a Breathalyzer test, so he was arrested for DUI, and his license was seized. Patterson challenged the suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403 and through discovery requests sought a copy of the 9-1-1 report, but no copy was provided. The hearing was continued twice because of the absence of the report, and the District Court warned the state that if it failed to produce the report, Patterson's license would be reinstated and the suspension would be dismissed. On the day of the hearing, the state informed the court that it was unable to obtain the 9-1-1 report, so Patterson's motion for reinstatement of his driver's license was granted. The state appealed on grounds that the District Court erred by reinstating the license based on the state's failure to comply with an order compelling production of the report. The Supreme Court affirmed. To determine whether the sanction for the discovery abuse constituted an abuse of the District Court's discretion, the Supreme Court applied the factors in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124 (2000). The 9-1-1 report was treated as relevant information absent a timely objection by the state to Patterson's request for production, and the state's failure to produce the report compromised Patterson's ability to prepare and present a defense, suspended the progress of the case, and prejudiced Patterson. The state was warned that reinstatement would result from failure to produce the report, and reinstatement was an appropriate sanction for the state's repeated failure to comply with discovery. Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002).

Failure to Disclose Experts by Scheduled Date — Inadequate Testimony to Establish Prima Facie Case: Romans was required by the original and amended scheduling orders to disclose experts by certain dates. Romans failed to do so, and the District Court twice ordered him to disclose. Expert disclosure was ultimately filed after the final date set by the court and was of record but not noticed when the District Court summarily dismissed the case for failure to produce the expert testimony needed to establish a prima facie case. Even though filing was not timely, the Supreme Court considered whether the filing was sufficient to avoid summary judgment, agreeing that because the testimony failed to address the standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation, which was the basis of the suit, a prima facie case was not established by the expert testimony and summary judgment was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000).

Denial of Will Contestants' Discovery Requests for Probate and Adoption Files Affirmed: The will contestants questioned Lande's testamentary capacity and asserted undue influence, claiming District Court error in failing to strike privilege-based objections from the record and to require production of Lande's complete estate planning files, particularly Lande's wife's file and a son's adoption file. The suggestion that the court was required to strike privilege-based objections, in addition to rejecting the applicability of the privilege, was raised without supporting authority as required by former Rule 23(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and thus was disregarded as without merit. The Supreme Court, citing Duck Inn, Inc. v. Mont. St. Univ., 285 M 519, 949 P2d 1179 (1997), stated that having failed to advance supporting authority, the contestants cannot establish error in this regard. Lande's wife's file was irrelevant because it had been completed years prior, and the question of when it was prepared bore no connection to the underlying questions of Lande's testamentary capacity or undue influence. The adoption file was also irrelevant because the contestants conceded that the adopted son had long been a substantial devisee and they did not challenge the son's adoption or status as a beneficiary. The contestants further failed to show that the entire estate planning files were not produced and thus failed to meet their burden of establishing District Court error. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999).

Limitation of Discovery Regarding Similar Product Models and Prior Injuries Improper: Preston alleged defective design of an N12 model pneumatic roofing nailer. The District Court limited discovery to information about the N12 nailer only and to information on the N12 from the time of manufacture to the date of Preston's injury. The Supreme Court held that the discovery limitations were arbitrary and improper. Evidence of prior injuries by similar, although not identical, products is relevant. Although evidence subsequent to the date of injury is not relevant to the alternative design issue, it is relevant to the unreasonably dangerous design issue. The fact that the same design continues to cause injuries is relevant to establishing the dangerousness of the product. Allowing the discovery restrictions to stand would have not only unfairly disadvantaged Preston but would have also defeated the purpose of the rules of procedure by requiring Preston to endure the time and expense of trial and an appeal before obtaining discoverable evidence essential to the case. That portion of the District Court's order restricting discovery was vacated, and the case was remanded. Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997), followed in Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009), regarding admissibility of evidence of similar incidents in product liability cases involving similar products.

Failure to Provide Evidence That "Least-Cost Factor" Used in Farm Loan Restructuring Denial — Disallowance of Discovery as Reversible Error: Robsons' motion to compel discovery sought information regarding the "least-cost" calculations performed by AgAmerica in processing the Robsons' second application to restructure their farm loan under the federal Agricultural Credit Act of 1987. The information was both the crux of the Robsons' affirmative defense to the foreclosure action and a mandatory consideration in AgAmerica's processing of the application. By not requiring AgAmerica to come forward with the evidence and instead allowing denial of the restructuring for other reasons, the District Court allowed AgAmerica to select the parts of the Act with which it chose to comply, an abuse of discretion by the District Court warranting reversal. AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995).

State Job Requirement — Many Years' Worth of Witnesses' Records With State and Others Not Relevant: In an action for judgment declaring that the state requirement that firefighters working for it at an airport and protecting civilian and military aircraft be members of the Montana Air National Guard was unconstitutional, the state asked three firefighter witnesses for the petitioner to produce 20 years' worth of any correspondence with the state, 25 years' worth of any correspondence with the National Guard, numerous types of records of the firefighters' union, and the last 4 years' worth of records of the union's payments to its law firm. The request was overbroad, none of the material may have been relevant to the proceeding, and it was proper to grant the petitioner's motion to quash and for a protective order. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

District Court in Best Position to Determine Good Faith Discovery Efforts: In a products liability case, judgment in favor of the plaintiff was appealed by the defendant on several grounds, including discovery abuses. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that while neither party was altogether cooperative, when the District Court Judge found no abuse, the Supreme Court would not overturn. The District Court Judge is in the best position to determine good faith discovery efforts, and when the court did not abuse its discretion, its determinations relating to disclosure of experts and discovery in general will not be disturbed. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994). See also Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Denial of Discovery Motions at Trial Made by Party Who Had Eight Months to Discover: It was not an abuse of discretion to deny motions for discovery made after the trial began by a party who had 8 months before the trial to engage in discovery, absent aggravating circumstances, which were not shown in this case. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994). See also Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Protection of Work-Product Materials in Bad Faith Insurance Action — Ordinary Work Product Versus Opinion Work Product: The District Court ordered production of all of an insurer's claim files dated after the date that plaintiff's attorney expressed that plaintiff would proceed with a bad faith action for failure to settle a claim. Insurer contended that the order was in error because some of the materials were immune from discovery under the work-product doctrine. Normally, claim files are commenced in anticipation of litigation and an investigation must be geared toward the eventuality of litigation; thus, work-product protection applies from the time a claim file is opened (Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694 (1981)). However, in a bad faith case, the investigation is not geared toward ultimate bad faith litigation from the time the file is opened because the insurer would have no reason to anticipate litigation and investigations are not made with the expectation of litigation. Materials consisting of work product prepared in anticipation of litigation have a qualified immunity from discovery under this rule, but immunity depends on the type of work product being sought. Ordinary work product that relates to factual matters is discoverable to the extent that it is not privileged and is relevant to the pending action. Opinion work product that relates to mental impressions, opinions, conclusions, or legal theories is provided additional protection because it is necessary to provide a privileged area within which an attorney can analyze and prepare the client's case (U.S. v. Nobles, 422 US 225, 45 L Ed 141, 95 S Ct 2160 (1975)). In a bad faith case in which the issue is whether the insurer had a reasonable basis for denying a claim, the mental impressions and opinions of the insurer are directly at issue. Therefore, a party may discover the opinion work product of the representatives whose mental impressions are at issue only upon a showing of compelling need beyond the substantial need/undue hardship test required by this rule. In this case, admission of the opinion work-product materials affected the insurer's right to a fair trial, warranting a remand. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993).

Standards for Testimonial Waiver of Work Product: The standards for waiver by testimonial use of the work product differ between opinion and ordinary work product. With ordinary work product, once a witness makes testimonial use of the files, the witness implicitly waives the protections of the work-product doctrine with respect to factual matters covered in the testimony of the witness. However, waiver by testimonial use does not apply to opinion work product unless the testimony directly discloses the witness's impressions. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 261 M 91, 861 P2d 895, 50 St. Rep. 1210 (1993). See also In re Martin Marietta Corp., 856 F2d 619 (4th Cir. 1988).

Defendant's Late Disclosure of Expert Caused by Plaintiff's Failure to Make Complete Medical Disclosure: Plaintiff's failure to make complete disclosure of past medical providers started a sequence of late discovery of medical information that to some degree led to defendant's late disclosure of a doctor as a proposed expert witness. The court continued the trial to allow plaintiff time to prepare for cross-examination of defendant's expert. The court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to exclude the expert's testimony. Mason v. Ditzel, 255 M 364, 842 P2d 707, 49 St. Rep. 986 (1992).

Failure to Disclose Identity of Expert Witnesses During Discovery — Reversible Error: It was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to allow the testimony of a land use consultant, a real estate agent, and an appraiser as to the market value of a parcel of land when none of the witnesses were named in interrogatories as experts. Determining the value of the land required expert testimony beyond the scope of ordinary training and intelligence to aid the trier of fact in determining facts in issue. Failure to disclose the names of the witnesses during discovery constituted a violation of this rule and was reversible error. United First Fed. S&L Ass'n v. White-Stevens, Ltd., 253 M 242, 833 P2d 170, 49 St. Rep. 490 (1992).

In Camera Inspection of Private Employment Records — Court Discretion in Suppressing Discovery Proper: The state attempted to compel discovery of defendant's personnel files from the Helena Catholic Diocese. The State sought information regarding reports of similar misconduct, disciplinary actions, transfer records, and witness names to use in rebutting and cross-examining defendant's character witnesses. After initial refusal to surrender the records, the parties agreed to an in camera review of the records by the presiding judge. The judge ruled that the information was not discoverable because it contained personal and private information. The in camera review and the subsequent prohibition on discovery of material that was not probative were held to be within the discretionary power of the judge in controlling discovery. Absent an abuse of that discretion, denial of access to the records was affirmed. St. v. Burns, 253 M 37, 830 P2d 1318, 49 St. Rep. 353 (1992).

Expert Testimony on "New Material" Not Brought Out by Adverse Party: The defendant appealed the exclusion of certain testimony by its expert witness intended to rebut statements made by the plaintiff's witness in response to the defendant's cross-examination. The Supreme Court held that the expert's rebuttal testimony went beyond the scope of his expertise as set out by the defendant in answer to interrogatories and that rebuttal material was only admissible to rebut new material introduced by the adverse party and not to rebut new material brought in as the result of the defendant's cross-examination. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990).

Incomplete Answers to Interrogatories — Expert Testimony Excluded: The plaintiff in a property condemnation action objected to the testimony of the defendants' expert witnesses on the basis that the interrogatories answered by the defendants did not set forth the basis on which the witnesses would arrive at their conclusions. The Supreme Court held that the answers did not reveal the basis for the witnesses' valuation of just compensation and that therefore the lower court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony. Mont. Power Co. v. Wax, 244 M 108, 796 P2d 565, 47 St. Rep. 1434 (1990).

Court-Ordered Payment of Expert Witness Deposition Fees Contingent on Court-Ordered Discovery: This rule does not require a court to order payment of expert witness deposition fees unless the court orders the discovery, and even then a court may not order payment if manifest injustice would result. Schweigert v. Fowler, 240 M 424, 784 P2d 405, 47 St. Rep. 1 (1990).

Incomplete Answers to Interrogatories Regarding Expert Witness — Expert Testimony Allowed: Plaintiff claimed the trial court erred in allowing the testimony of defendant's expert because defendant failed to adequately answer the discovery request for the substance of the expert's opinion. While the answers were not as complete as they should have been, the expert was not a surprise witness, and plaintiff neglected to compel further answers during the 3 years between the time the answers were made and the time of trial. Refusing to allow the expert to testify would have been an extreme sanction, given that defendant's offense was incompleteness in its answers, not failure to answer. Scott v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 240 M 282, 783 P2d 938, 46 St. Rep. 2126 (1989).

Refusal to Allow Deposition of Defense Counsel — Presence of Alternative Methods of Impeachment: The trial court did not err in refusing to allow plaintiff to depose defense counsel in light of ample alternatives to the deposition by which plaintiff could impeach a witness. These included: (1) the court advising the jury of evidence directly conflicting with the witness's deposition testimony; (2) the court offering to allow into evidence two postdeposition statements written by the witness, despite their hearsay character; and (3) testimony of a second witness that would have asserted recantation of the deposition testimony by the first witness. Scott v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 240 M 282, 783 P2d 938, 46 St. Rep. 2126 (1989).

Disclosure of Identity of Nonwitness Experts: The Supreme Court followed the decision in Ager v. Jane C. Stormont Hosp. & Training, 622 F2d 496 (10th Cir. 1980), in holding that the identity of nonwitness experts is discoverable under subsection (4)(B) of this rule only upon a showing of exceptional circumstances. An order of the District Court requiring disclosure of identity was reversed absent a showing of need for the information. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989).

Corporate Tax Records and Salary Information to Be Available in Wrongful Discharge Suit: In remanding a wrongful discharge suit in which plaintiff claimed the District Court erred in controlling discovery and pretrial proceedings, the Supreme Court found that upon a proper request for discovery, information that may be used by either party in direct or cross-examination of witnesses must be supplied in accordance with the production request. In this case, that would include copies of federal and state tax records of the defendant corporation as well as salary and bonus information relating to employees in employment situations similar to plaintiff. Hobbs v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 236 M 503, 771 P2d 125, 46 St. Rep. 544 (1989), followed in Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. T&M Transporting, Inc., 2006 MT 25, 331 M 76, 130 P3d 150 (2006).

Discovery of "Bad Faith" Litigation in Other Jurisdictions: In a federal action for bad faith by an insured against an insurer based upon diversity jurisdiction, the District Court held that information concerning similar "bad faith" litigation against the insurer in other jurisdictions is discoverable if the discovering party establishes to the court's satisfaction that the obligations imposed on the insurer by the other jurisdiction are sufficiently similar to Montana law to warrant a conclusion that the information could reasonably be expected to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 45 St. Rep. 2400 (D.C. Mont. 1988) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Motion to Compel Discovery Denied — Remoteness of Records: Father in a child custody case moved to compel discovery of some of the mother's medical records as relevant to her fitness as a parent. After reviewing the material in camera, the trial court denied the motion, stating that the medical records were too remote in time to be relevant. The trial record repeatedly pointed to the mother's fitness as a parent, and it was squarely within the court's discretion to deny the motion. In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987).

Doctor's Report to Insurance Company: The defendant doctor's report to his insurer was made after the initiation of legal proceedings and was made in anticipation of litigation and thus is entitled to the qualified protection from discovery. Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987).

Negligent Suppression of Evidence — Harmless Error: In an appeal involving the negligent suppression of evidence, the court agreed with appellant that the state acted improperly in suppressing four taped witness statements during discovery and a possibly incriminating statement made by appellant during his arrest and in endorsing an additional witness on the first day of trial. However, the court found that the suppressed evidence was either repetitive of other testimony or minimally supportive of a self-defense theory, and that since the defense knew of the additional witness' connection with and importance in the case, it could not convincingly claim surprise at the endorsement. Therefore, all errors were held to be harmless and not grounds for reversal. St. v. Wallace, 223 M 454, 727 P2d 520, 43 St. Rep. 1908 (1986), followed, with regard to application of harmless error rule to admissibility of hearsay testimony, in St. v. Alexander, 265 M 192, 875 P2d 345, 51 St. Rep. 474 (1994).

Driver's Statement to Defendant's Insurer Not Within Work Product Exception: The driver of a vehicle involved in an accident gave a statement to his employer's insurance company before a complaint was filed. There was no indication that an attorney had been hired or that the statement was made at the request of an attorney. Thus, the Supreme Court held that Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981), did not apply. An insurance claim file is not the same as an attorney's claim file for purposes of the work product rule. The driver's statement was not made "in anticipation of litigation" under Rule 26(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court's order denying plaintiffs' motion to compel discovery was reversed. Cantrell v. Henderson, 221 M 201, 718 P2d 318, 43 St. Rep. 745 (1986), followed in State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989). See also Tigart v. Thompson, 237 M 468, 774 P2d 401, 46 St. Rep. 974 (1989).

Statute of Limitations — Discovery of Injury — Discovery of Legal Rights: Plaintiff was injured in July 1979 while spraying weeds for the Powell County weed board. His attorney advised him in March 1984 that he might have a third-party claim against the persons and companies involved in production, distribution, and sale of the herbicides and spraying equipment. This advisement came 3 ½ years after the attorney was retained. The applicable Statute of Limitations period for actions in negligence and products liability in tort is 3 years. Plaintiff contended that the Statute of Limitations did not begin running until March 1984 when he "discovered" his legal rights. The Supreme Court expressly declined to extend the discovery doctrine to toll the Statute of Limitations until discovery of legal rights rather than discovery of injury, affirming the District Court judgment that plaintiff's tort claims were barred by the 3-year tort Statute of Limitations which began running in July 1979. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Presence of Counsel at Physical Examination: During the discovery phase of a personal injury suit, defense counsel filed a motion to obtain an order compelling a neurological examination of the plaintiff. Plaintiff responded by asking for a protective order allowing plaintiff's counsel to be present during the examination or to have the examination videotaped. The trial court granted the motion for the examination but denied plaintiff's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the common-law rule allows a party to have his attorney present at any court-ordered physical examination. This has not always been adhered to in the jurisdictions adopting the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The court held that a workable interpretation of Rule 35,

M.R.Civ.P., is to allow the attorney's presence as a matter of right during the history-taking part of the examination but to exclude the attorney from the examining room while the physician is actually conducting the examination. The physical examination does not require the presence of counsel to safeguard its objectivity, because in most instances it is nonadversarial. Mohr v. District Court, 202 M 423, 660 P2d 88, 40 St. Rep. 185 (1983).

Attorney Opinion Work Product — No Litigation in Progress: Opinion work product of an attorney is entitled to substantially greater protection than ordinary work product. It extends to those impressions rendered during the investigation of a claim, even where no litigation is in progress. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Waiver — Attorney-Client Privilege: Case was remanded with direction to hold a hearing with respect to evidence bearing upon whether the documents were involuntarily produced pursuant to court order (thus no waiver) or disseminated widely enough without legal objection by Goodyear as to constitute a waiver of the attorney-client privilege or work product rule. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Work Product of Terminated Litigation in Possession of Opposing Counsel: Even though opposing counsel has possession of documents prepared for litigation and that litigation has terminated, the work product rule may still afford protection against use of those documents in future litigation. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Deposition of Expert Witness: When an expert witness is employed for purposes of a lawsuit, his activities prior to the employment for the particular lawsuit are discoverable under Rule 26(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., even if the prior activities include employment with the same party employing the witness in the present lawsuit. Sullivan v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 80 FRD 489, 35 St. Rep. 2023 (D.C. Mont. 1978).

Privileged Matter — P.S.C.: Interrogatories which sought privileged material and were irrelevant were not required to be answered by the Public Service Commission. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Utility Rate Case — Privileged Matter: Interrogatories by rate protestors to Public Service Commission, seeking information as to amounts, values, costs, and details of parts of property, were unrelated to main inquiry of lawfulness or reasonableness of rates, and such information was thus privileged and not relevant under this rule. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Breach of Insurance Contract — Unreasonable Request: In action by insured against insurance company seeking damages for breach of contract and punitive damages for violations of the insurance code, trial court abused discretion in ordering answer to interrogatory requesting names and addresses of all persons within the state who had made a claim against the insurance company and whose claims the insurance company had either refused to pay or had not paid in full during the last 3 years. Even if relevant and material to issues pleaded, the interrogatory was unreasonable since the value of the information sought did not bear a reasonable relationship to the annoyance and expense involved in answering the interrogatory. State ex rel. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Miller, 160 M 256, 502 P2d 27 (1972).

Failure to Provide Name of Witness — Effect: Court erred in allowing expert witness to testify when the name of the witness was not provided in answer to properly propounded interrogatory. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Identity of Witnesses Discoverable: The identity of a traffic engineer who will testify in a collision case involving a question of concurrent negligence is discoverable under this rule. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Inspection of Land: In eminent domain proceeding, the State was granted the right to inspect the condemned land to gather evidence on the issue of lack of water. State ex rel. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 147 M 348, 412 P2d 832 (1966).

Former Rule 26(c). Protective orders

No Prejudice by Inability to Depose or Call Child Accident Victim as Witness: A 3-year-old child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. The state sought to depose the child and call him as a witness in the ensuing trial, but the District Court concluded that because of the child's age, little probative information could be gained by forcing him to testify and that such testimony would be traumatic and unduly burdensome, so testimony at deposition and trial was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although there is no minimum age requirement regarding child testimony, nevertheless, child witnesses need protection against the potential emotional and psychological injuries that may occur with regular litigation procedures. Any information that the child could have provided was available from other witnesses and was thus needlessly cumulative and subject to exclusion under Rule 403, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The state was not prejudiced by its inability to call the child as a witness, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in protecting the child from having to testify at deposition and trial. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Order Precluding Counsel From Attending and Recording of Independent Medical Examination Affirmed: The District Court in an automobile accident negligence case ordered Hegwood to obtain an independent medical examination pursuant to Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., but denied Hegwood's motion to allow her attorney to attend the examination and to allow a court reporter and video recorder to document the entire examination on grounds that the discovery request was overbroad. Hegwood appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A medical examination ordered under Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., is a nonadversarial proceeding, but when an examinee sufficiently demonstrates subjective predilections or the likelihood of prejudice, the examination shifts from independent in nature to adversarial. Courts and litigants should thus rely on the protective measures in Rule 35(a), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule to negate the inequities. Here, the record did not support the desired intrusion into the examination room, nor did a demonstration that the examiner performed examinations for the insurance industry inherently establish the degree of prejudice or potential for abuse necessary. A District Court has discretion to control discovery to administer trials in order to ensure a fair trial for all concerned and is in a better position than the Supreme Court to supervise day-to-day discovery operations, so an order affecting discovery will not be overturned unless it amounts to an abuse of discretion. Prohibiting attendance by Hegwood's attorney and the recording of the examination was not an abuse of discretion. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003), clarifying Mohr v. District Court, 202 M 423, 660 P2d 88 (1983).

Supervisory Control Denied to Address Discovery Issues: Petitioner sought a writ of supervisory control to address a District Court order directing petitioner to submit to discovery through an independent medical examination in an automobile accident negligence case. The Supreme Court declined to exercise supervisory control. Typically, orders pertaining to discovery are interlocutory in nature and are not generally reviewable in an original proceeding. Original jurisdiction will be exercised when an order places a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating a case. Supervisory control should issue when a District Court proceeds under a mistake of law, causing a gross injustice for which an appeal is not an adequate remedy, but supervisory control is an extraordinary remedy exercised only in extraordinary circumstances. Absent a showing that procedural protections were inadequate to control discovery in an independent medical examination, supervisory control was inappropriate. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003).

State Job Requirement — Many Years' Worth of Witnesses' Records With State and Others Not Relevant: In an action for judgment declaring that the state requirement that firefighters working for it at an airport and protecting civilian and military aircraft be members of the Montana Air National Guard was unconstitutional, the state asked three firefighter witnesses for the petitioner to produce 20 years' worth of any correspondence with the state, 25 years' worth of any correspondence with the National Guard, numerous types of records of the firefighters' union, and the last 4 years' worth of records of the union's payments to its law firm. The request was overbroad, none of the material may have been relevant to the proceeding, and it was proper to grant the petitioner's motion to quash and for a protective order. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Refusal to Allow Deposition of Defense Counsel — Presence of Alternative Methods of Impeachment: The trial court did not err in refusing to allow plaintiff to depose defense counsel in light of ample alternatives to the deposition by which plaintiff could impeach a witness. These included: (1) the court advising the jury of evidence directly conflicting with the witness's deposition testimony; (2) the court offering to allow into evidence two postdeposition statements written by the witness, despite their hearsay character; and (3) testimony of a second witness that would have asserted recantation of the deposition testimony by the first witness. Scott v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 240 M 282, 783 P2d 938, 46 St. Rep. 2126 (1989).

Motion for Protective Order Not Granted — Motion In Limine Granted — Attorney Fees Appropriate: A motion for a protective order filed under Rule 26(c), M.R.Civ.P. (see Title 25, ch. 20), seeking court guidance as to requested discovery, was never actually granted; however, attorney fees were appropriate under Rule 37(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P. (see Title 25, ch. 20), when the line of discovery was disposed of as irrelevant by the granting of a motion in limine, which in effect granted the motion for the protective order. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

Petition to Remove Personal Representative — Discovery Limited: The District Court did not err by ruling that copersonal representatives did not have to answer interrogatories filed in relation to petitioner's motion to remove the personal representatives. This is within the court's discretion to limit discovery under the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. In re Estate of Counts, 217 M 350, 704 P2d 1052, 42 St. Rep. 1243 (1985).

Unjustifiably Repetitious Demands: The District Court's issuance of a protective order was proper when the obligor in a child support action was requesting all of his daughter's wage stubs and wage information even though he had already requested and received her W-2 statements containing the same information. A protective order may be issued to prevent harassment of one party by another, including the protection of a party from unjustifiably repetitious demands. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Dismissal of Police Officer — Records of Other Disciplinary Proceedings Not Relevant — Protective Order Proper: In a police commission proceeding for dismissal of a police officer, defendant police officer was denied, under Rule 26(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), access to records of other police disciplinary proceedings which he planned to introduce in support of his defense of "discriminatory law enforcement". The evidence was not relevant to the proceeding, and the protective order was properly granted. In re Raynes, 215 M 484, 698 P2d 856, 42 St. Rep. 569 (1985).

Misrepresentation and Improper Process by Attorney — Sanctions: Since under 33-1-602 defendant, a foreign insurer, could only be served by service upon the Commissioner of Insurance, personal jurisdiction over insurer was not obtained when it was served at its Billings claim office. Thus, when plaintiffs' attorney appealed quashing of the service, the appeal was dismissed. Plaintiffs' attorney represented to the District Court's personnel that he had won the appeal and was entitled to a default judgment, and the personnel entered one against insurer for $150,000 punitive damages and $385 costs. The default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the District Court correctly vacated it. As insurer was not properly served, the District Court properly ruled plaintiffs could not take depositions. The attorney was properly adjudged liable to insurer for $4,031.50 under 37-61-406, stating that an attorney guilty of deceit or collusion with intent to deceive the court or a party forfeits to the party injured by his deceit or collusion treble damages. LaFountaine v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 215 M 402, 698 P2d 410, 42 St. Rep. 496 (1985).

Interlocutory Review of Interrogatories Rulings — Exhaustion of Remedies Required: Applicant for a Writ of Supervisory Control seeking reversal of lower court's order denying applicant's objections to interrogatories failed to exhaust its remedies in lower court where it did not apply there for a protective order under this rule or for an order under Rule 37(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P., assessing costs and attorney fees against its opponent should the lower court order be reversed on appeal. State ex rel. Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981).

Trade Secrets — When to Be Disclosed and to Whom — Protectable Property: A telephone utility was required to disclose trade secrets to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) to aid in a decision on its rate increase request. The utility was entitled to a protective order preventing access to the secrets by the general public, but the Montana Consumer Counsel and any citizen whose interest related to the ratemaking function of the P.S.C. could have access to the information. Use or disclosure of the trade secrets except for purposes of the ratemaking proceeding was prohibited. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 277, 634 P2d 181, 38 St. Rep. 1479 (1981). Mtn. States and its progeny were overruled to the extent that those decisions relied on the constitutional balancing test of the right to individual privacy against the public's right to examine documents or observe governmental deliberations as a basis of protecting trade secrets and other confidential proprietary information of nonhuman entities in Great Falls Tribune v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2003 MT 359, 319 M 38, 82 P3d 876 (2003).

"Public Policy" Not Grounds for Refusal to Testify or for Protective Order: Opposing counsel sought to prevent counsel for plaintiff from deposing Goodyear executives regarding facts contained in the documents that were in discovery dispute and witnesses with knowledge about a National Highway Traffic Safety Administration recall investigation. The District Court erroneously issued a protective order on the basis of the public interest in encouraging frank and open communications with the government. The rule regarding refusal to testify does not provide for refusal on "public policy" grounds. Even if it did, public policy militates in favor of disclosure. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Violation of Protective Order — Motion to Strike Granted: Protective relief was granted to strike from an amended complaint quotations and purported quotations from legal opinions prepared by defendant's attorneys for defendant and turned over to plaintiff's attorney in accordance with in camera inspection ordered by the District Court, which provided that the opinions were to be treated as confidential material and were not to be made a part of the court record or otherwise disclosed to other persons. State ex rel. Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. District Court, 160 M 229, 503 P2d 1008 (1972).

Limitation of Examination: In a libel action it was not error for the trial judge to issue a minute entry order refusing to require the defendant to answer questions submitted by the plaintiff as the court has the power to limit the examination and protect him from annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression. Steffes v. Crawford, 143 M 43, 386 P2d 842 (1963).

Former Rule 26(d). Sequence and timing of discovery

Allowing Surprise Expert to Testify Two Months Later After Two-Month Delay in Trial: On the first day of a divorce trial, the judge excluded wife's expert because the wife had not timely supplemented interrogatories to notify her husband of the expert. Relying on this, the husband declined the judge's offer of a continuance. At the close of the first day of trial, the husband requested a continuance to brief another issue. Because of scheduling problems, the case resumed nearly 2 months later. The wife's expert was allowed to testify. The husband claimed surprise and that his trial tactics were negated. It was not clear from the record when or why the court retracted its order excluding the wife's expert, but the Supreme Court concluded that no abuse of discretion was shown in view of the 2-month delay. If the husband contends (the case was remanded on other grounds) that he should be allowed to submit additional evidence, he may present that request to the trial court. In re Marriage of Dirnberger, 237 M 398, 773 P2d 330, 46 St. Rep. 898 (1989).

Former Rule 26(e). Supplementation of responses

Protective Order Against Parent's Discovery Requests Not Abuse of Discretion Given Department's Open File Policy: In a termination of parental rights case, the District Court granted the state's motion for a protective order against a parent's discovery requests for admission, interrogatories, and requests for production, and the parent appealed. The Supreme Court cautioned that parties to termination proceedings have the full right to discover the case against them. However, in this case, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting the protective order because the state and the county maintained an open file policy that allowed the parent access to the entire file for inspection and copying and because the District Court ruled that any evidence or witness offered at trial that was not disclosed by review of the file might be excluded upon objection. Because the parent could not demonstrate prejudice, granting of the protective order was affirmed. In re S.C. & L.Z., 2005 MT 241, 328 M 476, 121 P3d 552 (2005).

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Reversible Error in Failure to Disclose Expert Witness — Prejudice to Opposing Party: Despite its continuing duty to disclose the identity of each person expected to be called as an expert witness, the subject matter on which the person is expected to testify, and the substance of the person's testimony, defendant failed to disclose an expert witness prior to trial despite several opportunities to do so. Failure to disclose an expert witness constitutes reversible error and will
